- SOMASTER, SOMESTER, SUMMASTER and SUMMAISTER (Cornwall; and of Old Port in Modbury, Nether Ex. Widgecombe in Stokenham, and Painford in Ashprington, co. Devon. The Hart MSS. contain the pedigree of a very ancient and knightly line of this family, seated at a very remote period in Cornwall, the heiress of the elder male stem of which—descended from matches with Kelly, Treviso, Fortescue, Penrose, Bouythorn, Penarth, Mansfield, Pederton, and Mallet—married Colsbud. Old Port was acquired by the marriage of Richard Somaister, a presumed younger son of the Cornish house, with the heiress of De Heanton, granddaughter of the Thomas De Heanton whose wife was Alice, senior co-heir of the De la Porta. Robert Somaister, of Old Port, son and heir of Richard, left two sons, William and Adam. William, the elder, acquiring property at Nether Ex, the senior line was there continued until the death s. p. of his grandson, John, when Nether Ex passed to his only sister, Jane, wife of John Lympenny, whose son, by her, John Lympenny, sold it. Adam Somaster, the second son of Robert of Old Port, inherited that seat and estate, to which having added Wydecombe, he moved to the latter, where his line continued until his grandson, John Somaster, temp. Henry VII. purchased and removed to Painsford (anciently a seat of the Peperells), where the male line was further continued to beyond the period of the Civil War, in which Sir Samuel Somaster, of Painsford, and his four sons, took an active part on the royal side, selling Old Port and other estates to meet the expences of their men in the field. Through the period of their existence severally at Old Port, Widecombe, and Painsford, the Somasters matched with the most principal western houses, including Prideaux, Speke, Dillon, Portescue, Holbeam, Trevanion, Fowell, Arundel, Strode, &c.; but neither the history of their extinction in the male line, nor what family enjoys their representation, is clearly known. Towards the end of the seventeenth century, Painsford, which was a very fine mansion, having a splendid marble chapel attached to it, became, by purchase, the property of the family of Kelland, the senior co-heiress of which carried it to Courtenay of Tremar in Cornwall. This branch of the noble house of Courtenay made it their residence up to the death of Charles Courtenay, of Painsford, esq. killed in Germany in 1766, when Painsford and its estates were carried by his two sisters and co-heirs to their husbands, William Poyntz of Midgham, and Edmond seventh Earl of Cork and Orrery, whose son, the eighth Earl, marrying his cousin Poyntz, Painsford was by them sold). This family, which we may confidently state to be in its antiquity, alliances, possessions, and position in parliamentary and county history, one of the most distinguished of the many distinguished British families on whom hereditary honour has never been conferred, was seated, at a date beyond record, on its manor of Strode, while occupying which it yielded eminent warrior knights to Kings Henry III. and Edward I., in the last of which reigns Adam Strode was among the Western chiefs summoned by herald to attend his sovereign with men-at-arms into Scotland. After continuing many descents at Strode, the family removed to the neighbouring seat of Newenham, which estate was acquired by the marriage, temp. Henry IV. of Sir John Strode of Strode, with the co-heiress of Newenham. Their descendant and heir, Sir William Strode, of Newenham, knt. m. Elizabeth Courtenay, sole child, by his wife Joan, dau. of Sir Richard Fowhill, of Fowhillcombe, in Devon, of Sir Philip Courtenay, of Loughton, descendant of the first Sir Philip Courtenay, of Powderham, younger son of Hugh Courtenay, second Earl of Devon. His descendant and heir, Sir William Strode, of Newenham, knt. celebrated in Prince's Devonshire Worthies, as "a person of great honor, worth, and esteem in his county, who died a little before the Civil War began," had, with numerous daughters, "all very worshipfully married," three sons: 1. Sir Richard Strode, of Newenham and of Chalmington, in Dorset, knt. M.P. for Plympton, in the Parliament of 1610, and continuator of the line at Newenham; 11. William Strode, of Meavey Church, esq. who was "burgess for Beerlston in the Parliament, third year of King Charles I. and then, 1629, by the said King was committed to the Tower of London with John Eliot and other members, where they continued to the Parliament 1640, when the said William Strode sat again as a member for Beerlston, and was in that Parliament impeached by the King as one of the five members;" and, 111. John Strode, of Tavistock, esq. "a great favourite of the nobility and gentry, who spent much of his time about London, and was counted the best bowler in all England." The direct senior line of Strode terminated with the great-great-grandson of Sir William, the Member of Parliament in 1640, William Strode, of Newenham Park, esq. who d. 27 August, 1767, when Newenham Park and estates passed to the heir male, Richard Strode, of Boterford, esq. grandson and heir of George Strode, esq. thereof, son and heir of John Strode, of London, esq. second son of William Strode, of Ugborough, esq. son and heir of Sampson
