GUILLIM, in prefacing his display of Heraldry, “deplores that he has been forced to build solely on other men’s foundations,” and apprehends, that “he may therefore be thought to have undertaken an idle task in writing of things formerly handled and published by persons of more sufficiency and greater judgment.” This partakes much of the pride that apes humility, and the old Herald verily seems more courteous than candid. The Authors of the GENERAL ARMORY have built in like manner upon other men’s foundations; but they have done so, that the structure they were about to raise might rest upon solidity and strength—that, being assured of the groundwork, they might advance with greater confidence to the battlement.

The GREAT works on Heraldry have long since passed out of print; and, able and useful as those works confessedly were, they have become so entirely obsolete, that they are of little value now, except to the Antiquary. Other works of a similar kind—similar almost to the letter—have occasionally followed and shared the same fate, with this material difference, that the old books are still regarded and referred to, while the more recent are, in a great measure, if not altogether, forgotten. All have been, though, voluminous and costly—voluminous designedly, for the subject did not require tomes of such magnitude—costly, because voluminous. In the present instance, the cause being removed by the whole subject-matter having been confined to one volume, the effect, costliness, has ceased, and an opportunity is thus afforded to almost everybody desirous of possessing it, of obtaining a work upon Heraldry and the science of Arms.

O'Hart of Bradhilly, from Hugh More, the eldest; O'Hart of Ardermon and Dunore, from Brian, the second; and O'Hart of Grange North, from Tieve, the youngest). Relatively to the Arms of this ancient Irish sept, tradition thus speaks: "When the fleet belonging to the twelve Milesian brothers was coming abreast, in sight of land, on the north coast of Ireland, the brothers began to contend amongst themselves which of them should reign over Ireland—they all agreed that whoever first touched land should be king; but as they neared the shore, being still close abreast, one of the brothers, Art, drew his sword and cut off his thumb, and threw it with the sword upon the

- land: his wife at the same time swam to shore, and with her dart killed a deer as it ran by." Hence, the Arms of the O'HARTES were ever after "A sword and thumb; the Crest, a hand holding a sword; and the Supporters, a female and a stag."

HERALDRY.

HERALDRY.

SECTION I.

FOLIOS, elaborate and learned, have been written on the rise and progress of the Art or Science of Heraldry—speculations hazarded, premises pompously stated, and conclusions sagaciously drawn; yet, beyond a few simple facts, nothing has been ascertained regarding the one or the other, and nothing more is worth ascertaining. Heraldry is not of remote origin: the registry of its birth may be found amongst the archives of the holy wars; its cradle was rocked by the soldiers of the cross; and its maturity attained in those extraordinary times of reality and romance, of barbarism and civilization,—more barbarous than civilized—when feudalism, allying with chivalry, was enabled to reburnish its iron crown, and to prolong its herculean despotism even to another age—to lull, for it could not altogether smother, the breathings of public opinion, at the outburst of which, the whole feudal fabric, in its greatness and in its grandeur, its massiveness and its might, was predestined, like another Jericho, to crumble into ruins. The feudal lord and his frowning fortress, the mailed knight and his gorgeous tournament, have both long since passed away; and Heraldry alone survives, the only existing relic, probably, of either: its vitality may be traced, though, to attributes peculiarly its own. Ministering largely to the pride of man, without deeply trenching on his purse, pandering to pomp without taxing prudence, conferring honour without imposing danger, Heraldry, cherished since its nativity, has flourished in every age, in every country, and under almost every form of government. In England it has been more than fondly fostered: throughout the other countries of Europe, armorial bearings were esteemed as part and parcel of the trappings of nobility—here, a coat of Arms has always been the indispensable appendage of a gentleman, and be it inherited or acquired, it is equally an object of pride and display; if inherited, as the broad seal under which time testifies to the antiquity of our race, and the purity of our blood—if acquired, as the golden talisman, the open sesame, that has burst the iron gates of aristocracy, and admitted us one step at least within the portal. Heraldry is, however, no more than an organization of the emblems and devices which had previously existed beyond the memory of man, almost coevally with man himself; for nature had hardly imparted her first lesson of self-preservation, than instinct had taught the full value and importance of union—the fable and the moral of the bundle of sticks. Hence bands, tribes, septs, and nations; and hence those insignia so absolutely necessary, as landmarks by which tribes might be separated, boundaries fixed, and friends and foes distinguished and descried. “Every man of the children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard, with the ensign of their father’s house: far off about the tabernacle of the congregation shall they pitch.”* Advancing imperceptibly in the train of civilization, these rude devices assumed a systematic form, and at length, at the eventful period to which we have reverted, acquired the designation of Heraldry: this, briefly, is the origin of what is now universally known as the science of Arms.

Origin of Heraldry.

“The antiquity of gentilitical Arms in England, (says Guillim,) will prove, I doubt, of far later date than many of our gentry would willingly be thought to have borne them. For if consideration be had, that for some hundred years this nation was under the harass of war, in the storm of foreigners' assaults, and after, troubled with civil wars, there will be little reason to be over confident in matters of pedigrees and Arms much beyond four hundred years.* This is the opinion of the learned Sir Henry Spelman, who adds too, Nescio an eá prorsus antiquitate. For though we might receive the hereditary use of Arms just after the holy war, (as is also Mr. Camden's opinion, and what Peter Pitheu asserts of the French,) it being in those days accounted most honourable to carry such Arms as had been displayed in the holy land against the professed enemies of Christianity, yet was not the said hereditary use established or made general until the time of King Henry III." Guillim's opinion is strengthened by that of Spelman, who produces an acquittance given by Peter to John de Herbia, dated in the 4th year of Edward I., in which occur the following words: "Rex hyraudorum citra aquam de Trent ex parte Boreale;" and the Heralds are further particularly mentioned in the Statute of Arms made in the same reign, a clause therein ordaining, that no King of Heralds, or his subordinates, shall wear any armour, save a sword without a point, and that the Kings of Heralds should have their houcest desarmes only.

High
Constable
and Earl Marshal.

WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, fashioning the Court of England upon that of Normandy, instituted the great offices of Constable and Marshal, which had previously appended to his ducal dignity.† In the Conqueror's time, and under the Plantagenet kings, most of the proceedings in Courts Marshal (curia militaris) were entrusted to those high offices; and when the Constabship was virtually, although not altogether abolished, temp. HENRY VIII. the presidency of the Court of Chivalry was conferred upon the Marshal, and henceforward he was invested with authority to summon the Heralds to aid and assist him in pursuing the suits of which the Court had cognizance. The office of Constable is traced originally to ancient Rome, and in France it very early existed; powerless, though, or invested with very secondary powers, before the reign of Philip I. at which time the authority of this functionary was enlarged; and he, subsequently, † Talbards.

‡ The Conqueror brought into England another of his household officers—perhaps the most singular of the whole—the King's Champion, still extant in the family of Dymock of Scrivelsby, in Lincolnshire. The following version of an old Anglo-Norman ballad, describes with equal perspicuity the pedigree and duties of the Champion:—

The Norman Barons Marmyon,
At Norman Court held high degree;
Knights and Champions every one,
To him who won broad Scrivelsby.

Those Lincoln lands, the Conq'r gave,
That England's glove they might convéy,
To Knight renowned amongst the brave,
The Baron bold of Fonteneay.

The Royal grant, through sire to son,
Devolved direct in capite;
Until deceased Phil. Marmyun,
When rose fair Joan of Scrivelsby.

As sometimes viewed, one sparkling star
Shines forth more bright and brilliantly
Than all around, above, afar,
So shone the Maid of Scrivelsby.

From London City on the Thames,
To Berwick Town upon the Tweed,
Came gallants all of courtly names,
At feet of Joan their suit to plead.

Yet, maugre all this goodly band,
The maiden's smile young Ludlow wón,
Her heart and hand, her gant and land,
The sword and shield of Marmyun.

Out upon Time, the scurvy Knave,
Spoiler of youth, hard-hearted churl;
Hurrying to one common grave,
Goodwife and ladie—hind and earl.

Out on Time—since the world began,
No Sabbath hath his greyhound limb,
In coursing man—devoted man,
To age and death—out, out on him.

In Lincoln's chancel, side by side,
Their effigies from marble hewn;
The "anni" written when they died,
Repose Sir Ludlow and Dame Joan.

One daughter fair, survived alone,
One son deceased in infancy;
De Ludlow and De Marmyun,
United thus in Margery.

And she was woo'd as maids have been,
And won as maids are sure to be,
When gallant youths in Lincoln green,
Do suit, like Dymock, fervently.

Sir John De Dymock claim'd of right,
The Championship through Margery,
And 'gainst Sir Baldwin Freville, knight,
Prevail'd, as Lord of Scrivelsby.

And, ever since, when England's kings
Are diadem'd—no matter where,
The Champion Dymock boldly flings
His glove, should treason venture there.

On gallant steed, in armour bright,
His visor closed and couched his lance,
Proclaimeth he the Monarch's right
To England, Ireland, Wales, and France.

Then bravely cry, with Dymock bold,
Long may the King triumphant reign!
And when fair hands the sceptre hold,
More bravely still—Long live the Queen!

became by degrees so potent and influential, that the Constable was regarded inferior only in authority to the King himself. The first Constable of England, Ralph de Mortimer, received his staff of office from the Conqueror, and the dignity flourished hence to the time of Henry VIII. when, reverting to the Crown, by the attainder of Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, LORD HIGH CONSTABLE, in 1521, the office, although not entirely extinguished, was, as a permanent place of trust and grandeur, positively abolished. And so hath it remained now more than three centuries, although high personages have, on the occasion of a Coronation or other great state ceremony, been temporarily constituted Lord High Constable.

The Mareschal of France was likewise early instituted, distinct from the Constable, but subordinate to that officer, both in peace and in war. In Normandy, the Mareschal enjoyed great authority and extensive jurisdiction, and had attained the summit of his power just at the time the Conquest of England was undertaken. From the institution of the dignity here, the Marshal has been always esteemed one of the highest and most powerful functionaries. His commission is from the King alone, and he is created by Letters Patent under the Great Seal. He has borne at different times the titles of Master Marshal, King's Marshal, Marshal of England, and Earl Marshal. Marshal of England was the style used by William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, temp. Henry III. as appears from a charter grant of the Abbey of Tinternes. The first patent in which the title of Earl was given to the Marshal of England, is that of the 9 Richard II. (9th January) granted to Thomas Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, constituting him EARL MARSHAL OF ENGLAND, to himself and the heirs male of his body. It was also provided for in the Earl's patent, that the plain rod of office hitherto borne, should be changed to a rod of gold, tipped at each end with black enamel, the Royal Arms depicted on the upper, the Earl's own on the lower end. Amongst the Norman Knights highest in the confidence of the Conqueror, were Roger de Montgomery and William Fitz Osborn; and these gallant soldiers he rewarded with extensive grants of lands, beside nominating them the first Marshals of England. Montgomery was likewise created Earl of Arundel, Chichester, and Surrey, and Fitz Osborne, Earl of Hereford; the former feudal nobleman died in 1094, the latter was slain in battle 1070. The high office cannot be distinctly traced until the reign of King Stephen, by whom it was conferred upon Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Pembroke, who was regarded as Hereditary Marshal; and his son Richard succeeded as of right to that and his Lordship's other honours, at his decease in 1148. Richard died some five or six-and-twenty years afterwards, leaving an only daughter and heiress, ISABELLA DE CLARE, who married William Marshal, and to him conveyed the Earldom of Pembroke and office of Marshal, which were so confirmed by Richard I. before his coronation. The Marshal family retained their honours only during the lives of the first Earl's five sons, who all succeeded in turn, and all died issueless. The Earldom of Pembroke expired with Anselm, the last of those Earls; while the Marshalship of England fell between his five sisters and co-heirs. Maud, the eldest of those ladies, was first married to Hugh Bigod, fourth Earl of Norfolk of the Bigod family, and was mother by him of Roger, who inherited the Earldom of Norfolk, and of two other sons, who both died issueless. Her second husband was William, Earl of Warren and Surrey; and by him she had John, who succeeded to the Earldom of Surrey, and Isabel, the wife of Hugh de Albini, Earl of Arundel. On the decease of Anselm, last Earl of Pembroke, all the Earl's sisters claimed the Marshalship; but it was finally adjudged to Maud, then Countess of Warren and Norfolk, who appointed her son, the Earl of Norfolk, to execute the duties of the office: the Countess died in 1248, when the Earl became Marshal in right of inheritance. He died, though, issueless in the 54 Henry III. and his nephew, Hugh Bigod, inherited the Earldom of Norfolk and the Marshalship; but he having likewise no issue, surrendered to the Crown in due form, by written deed, dated 12th April, 1301, all his great possessions in England and Wales, and yielded at the same time to the King, all right to the Earldom of Norfolk and Marshalship of England; in confirmation thereof he delivered up his rod of office, conditioning that the same should be restored in the event of his ever having children, and that he should receive the immediate gift of one thousand pounds, with the like sum annually while he lived. The Earl, however, enjoyed the title and office during his life, by a re-grant from the Crown; but on his death s. p. in 1297, the surrender being then complete, Robert de Clifford, was appointed Marshal during the King's pleasure, and held the office until the 9 Edward II.; when it was conferred in perpetuity upon THOMAS DE BROTHERTON, fifth son of Edward I. by his second Consort, Queen Margaret, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten; he was also created Earl of Norfolk: the Prince died, however, issueless, in the 12 Edward III. when the Earldom of Norfolk and Marshalship again reverted to the Crown. The high dignity of Marshal was subsequently held by William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury; Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick; Mortimer, Earl of March; Mortimer, Earl of March and Ulster; Percy, (Hotspur) Earl of Northumberland; John Fitz Alan, Lord Maltravers; and Thomas de Holland, Earl of Kent, half-brother of Richard II.; this prince, was soon, however, displaced, and the King conferred the Marshalship for life upon Thomas de Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, grandson of Margaret, eldest daughter and co-heir of Thomas de Brotherton aforesaid. His lordship, subsequently marrying the Lady Elizabeth Fitz Alan, daughter of Richard, Earl of Arundel, obtained a further grant of the office as EARL MARSHAL, to himself and the heirs male of his body; and from the Mowbray family the high office passed to that of Howard, through the intermarriage of Robert, Lord Howard, with Margaret, one of the two daughters of Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk; Robert's son (of the said marriage) John Lord Howard, was created Duke of Norfolk and Earl Marshal, by King Richard III. in the first year of his Majesty's reign. In the various fortunes and forfeitures of the Howards, the Marshalship has passed at different times into other hands, but finally reverted to the same family, where it now centres, the highest hereditary dignity under the Crown, and attaches to the DUKEDOM OF NORFOLK.

Garter King
of Arms.

In the reign of Henry V. anno 1417, the office of GARTER KING OF ARMS was instituted, for the service of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, and was made Sovereign within the Office of Arms; in his patent, Garter is styled Principal King of English Arms, and Principal Officer of Arms of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. To him immediately belongs the adjustment of Arms, and of all ensigns of honour, and likewise the power of granting Arms to persons qualified to bear them. The title of CLARENCEUX was conferred on a Herald in the train of the Duke of Clarence, son of Edward III.; and by Edward IV. when he succeeded to the Dukedom of Clarence, that officer was made a King of Arms. His jurisdiction extends over the south-east and west parts of the kingdom.

King of Arms.

NORROY, so styled from his jurisdiction, which extends north of the Trent, is the most ancient of the Kings of Arms; the office is referred to in the records of the times of Edward II. and Edward III. Beside these officers, there are inferior ones denominated Heralds and Pursuivants; and the whole, incorporated by Charter of Richard III. constitute the College of Arms.

College of Arms.

That learned legal luminary, Lord Chief Justice Coke, asserts, that every gentleman must be "arma gerens," and that the best test of gentle blood is the bearing of Arms, which are the most certain proofs and evidences of nobility and gentry; hence the anxiety for such a distinction, to which we have already reverted, and hence the prominence and pride of its display.

From the old and noble families of the British, Saxon, and Norman lines, who assumed Arms as military ensigns, and then adopted them as honourable distinctions, sprang many of the ancient gentry of England, who, being either descended from or attached to those families, assumed, or were granted, badges resembling or modelled from the insignia of their chiefs; for, saith Geraldus Cambrensis, "Clientes hos suis quasi armis instructos Armigeros suos forte vocant, et militum feoda cum armis suis, suis armigeris dedisse."

Notwithstanding this voluntary assumption of Arms in early times, and the occasional practice of the greater nobility in granting them to their tenants and dependants, it must not be inferred that all our ancient gentry or lesser nobility who acquired coat armour so obtained the distinction; on the contrary, armorial ensigns, as tesera gentilitia, were frequently assigned by the Crown to such as were gentlemen of blood, and had signalized themselves in tournament or battle.* Arms were no sooner, however, esteemed as incontrovertible evidence of honour and blood, than the possession was eagerly sought for by all, who, by their own industry, the patronage of the feudal lord, or through royal favour, had obtained landed property, but who had not previously served in a military capacity; hence the applications to the Crown for grants of Arms became so constant, that the King, finding the duty become onerous, empowered Clarenceux and Norroy to grant ensigns armorial within their respective provinces, under the authority of the Earl Marshal; yet an indisputable right still vests in the Crown to confer Arms, Crests, Supporters, and all other insignia, whenever the Sovereign may deem it advisable to exercise the prerogative. "Although Arms," says an heraldic writer, "were, in their first acceptation, taken up at any gentleman's pleasure, yet hath that liberty for many ages been deny'd, and they by regal authority made the rewards and ensigns of merit, or the gracious favors of Princes; no one being, by the law of gentility in England, allowed the bearing thereof, but those that either have them by descent or grant, therefore HENRY V. by proclamation did inhibit, thus: 'Quod nullus cujuscunque status, gradus seu conditionis fuerit, hujusmodi arma sive tunicas armorum in seumat, nisi ipse jure antecessorio vel ex donatione alicujus ad hoc sufficientem potestatem habentis, ea possideat aut possidere debeat, et quod ipse arma sive tunicas illas ex cujus dono obtinet, demonstrationis suæ personis ad hoc per nos assignatis seu assignandis manifeste de monstret, exceptis illis que nobiscum apud bellum de Agincourt arma portant,'” &c. In total disregard of this royal ordinance, a multiplicity of abuses, irregularities, and disorders, were found to have crept into all matters appertaining to descent and Arms, and called aloud for that reformation which the authority of the Crown could alone effect; wherefore Commissions were issued under the Great Seal, to the two Provincial Kings of Arms, authorizing and commanding each, by himself or his deputy, to visit the whole of his province as often as he should deem it necessary; † to convene before him all those who bore, or assumed to bear Arms, and were styled esquires and gentlemen; and to cause them to produce and show by what authority and right they challenged and claimed the said use of Arms. In pursuance of this royal commission, the sitations.

* "Soon after arms had acquired the reputation of being the avowed and established marks of honour, gentility, and family distinction, they were considered as inheritances alienable: so that, although no man could legally assume at his own free will and pleasure, or bear the particular coat armour which had been assumed, or by grant from the King appropriated to another family, whilst any of the descendants of the original proprietor existed, yet a doctrine prevailed that the rightful possessor or proprietor being deemed to have, as it were, an absolute freehold in his coat armour, as well as in his lands, had an undoubted right to alienate or transfer the property and inheritance of both the one and the other; and in consequence of this doctrine, the proprietors of coat armour did frequently, to the exclusion of their own heirs, by grants, and that with a covenant of warranty, convey, assign, and transfer, not only such coats armour of other families, as happened to descend to them by right of inheritance as next heir, but the original and paternal coat armour of their own family. Of these grants, some are enrolled in the Tower of London, and others are to be met with in printed authors. Thus we learn from Mr. Camden, that in the twenty-second year of King Edward III. Robert Morle, who was then Marshal of Ireland, by deed granted to his friend, Robert de Corby, and his heirs for ever, the arms which by inheritance descended to him on the death of Baldwin de Manoires. In the fifteenth Richard II. Thomas Grendale granted the arms which escheated to him upon the death of John Beaumeys, to whom he was cousin and next heir, to William Moigne. Again, in the eleventh Henry IV. we find Sir Thomas de Clanvowe granting his own family coat armour to his cousin, William Criketot; and Sir John Carew, who lived temp. Edward I. is asserted by Anstis to have obtained a conveyance of the arms of Mohun from his lady, Alienor, dau. and co-heir of William de Mohun."—Edmondson.

That arms were given, too, in early times, by some great earl or proprietor to his followers, we may instance the grant, temp. Henry VI. from Humfrey, Earl of Stafford, to Robert Whitgreave, of Staffordshire, ancestor of the present family of WHITGREAVE of Moseley Court.

† The Visitations occurred once about every thirty years, when the Kings of Arms were attended throughout their circuits by a register, a draughtsman, and other proper officers and attendants.

circuits of the Kings of Arms, called VISITATIONS, commenced about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and were continued periodically until the close of the seventeenth. The earliest Visitation in the library of the College of Arms is that of Worcestershire, Berkshire, Oxfordshire, Wiltshire, Gloucestershire, and Staffordshire, by Benoît, Clarenceux, in the year 1528-29; and the latest Commission of Visitation bears date the 13th of May, 1686. This Commission was directed to Sir Henry St. George, Clarenceux, who, in 1687, visited the wards of Billingsgate, Castle Baynard, and Cornhill, and subsequently registered some pedigrees dated so lately as the years 1703 and 1704. The Heralds' Visitations are preserved as books of record; and the principal hereditary Arms of the kingdom are borne under the authority of those records. The Visitations were ultimately discontinued, by reason of the frequent prohibitions granted by the Court of King's Bench to stay proceedings in the Curia Militaris, or Earl Marshal's Court, and more especially owing to the abolition of the Constableness of England as a permanent office, in consequence of which the Officers of Arms were no longer able to maintain their authority or enforce their commands.

Those who are enabled to deduce descent from an ancestor whose armorial ensigns have been acknowledged in any of the Visitations, are entitled to carry those Arms by right of inheritance. When, however, such a descent cannot be established, the party must then prove his right as descending from some original grantee, or memorialize the Earl Marshal that he may become a grantee himself.

The Visitations did not extend to Wales, except upon one occasion, when Lewis Dwn was appointed, A. D. 1581, Deputy Herald for all Wales, by Robert Cooke, Clarenceux, and William Flower, Norroy; but it does not follow, that the old families of Wales were not at that time in possession of Arms, and as well able as their English neighbours to establish ancient right to the distinction. Their Chroniclers and Bards flourished from the remotest times as genealogists and heralds, and the collections and pedigrees of those patriarchal poets are still regarded as the foundation of Cambrian family history.

Beside the College of Arms we have just described, there is a similar institution at Edinburgh, for Scotland, denominated the Lion Office, at the head of which is the Lord Lion, King of Arms. "The practice of Heraldry in Scotland," says one of the ablest writers on the subject beyond the Tweed, "is very ancient, so the higher we trace it we find Arms the more regular and distinct; and of so great importance to the nation was the regularity and distinction of Arms reckoned by our Kings and Parliaments, that sundry laws relative thereto have been enacted and published, discharging all persons to assume Arms to themselves without due authority, prohibiting those to carry Arms who had right to none, or those who had right, to usurp the Arms of other men. Before the modern practice of subscribing names to writs of moment, which was not used in Scotland till about the year 1540, all such writs and evidents were only signed with seals, which contributed much to the regularity of Arms, and therefore it was enacted by sundry statutes that every Freeholder should have his proper Seal of Arms, and should either compare himself at the head court of the shire, or send his Attorney with his said Seal; and they who wanted such seals even to be amerced or fined, so that commonly gentlemen sent to the Clerk of the Court their Seals in lead, who kept the same in his office to produce or compare on occasions, and it was reckoned no less crime than forgery to counterfeit another man's seal."

"As these seals grew less useful and necessary, so armorial bearings became less regular, and therefore, anno 1592, cap. 135, the Parliament gave power and permission to the Lion King at Arms and his brethren Heralds, to visit the whole Arms of Noblemen, Barons, and Gentlemen, within Scotland, and to distinguish them with congruous differences, and to matriculate them in their books; as also to inhibit all such to bear Arms as by the Law of Arms ought not to bear them, under the penalty of confiscating to the King all goods on which such Arms should be found, with an hundred pounds to the Lyon and his brethren, and in case of not payment to be imprisoned during the Lyon's pleasure. And, anno 1672, cap. 2, the said Act of Parliament is renewed and ratified, and the Lyon King of Arms is empowered to distinguish Arms and matriculate the same in his

Heraldry in Scotland.

Books or Registers, which Register is ordained to be respected as the true and unrepeatable rule of all Arms and Bearings in Scotland."

In Ireland the principal Herald is styled Ulster King of Arms, a title substituted, it is stated, for that of Ireland King of Arms, by Edward VI. although that Prince, in his journal, mentions the Institution in Ireland as a newly-formed one: "There was," says the Monarch, "a King of Arms made for Ireland, whose name was Ulster, and his province was all Ireland. He was fourth King of Arms, and the first Herald in Ireland."

We cannot conclude these observations upon Heraldry, without some allusion to the splendid Tournament—the great and gorgeous spectacle of the Plantagenets and Tudors—so closely interwoven with the science itself, and so romantically chronicled by the bards and historians of those ages. "Tournaments" (we quote Nisbet) "are much more ancient than the Croisades, and have very much improv'd Armories, sooner or later, not only by giving rise to figures within the shield, but to those without which adorn and trim it in the present perfection and beauty we find Arms, and which we call Achievements, that is, complete armorial bearings, with all the exterior ornaments." It was the custom of those who attended these military pageants, to be attired in complete warlike habit and equipage, with Arms emblazoned upon their shields, surcoats, and caparisons. The Esquire preceded the Knight, bearing in his right hand his Master's tilting-spear, and in his left the timbre or helmet, surmounted by the crest, adorned with pieces of silk—Mistresses' favours, wreath, or torses, tinctured of the Arms."

During the reigns of the early Kings, many gorgeous Justs or Tournaments occurred; but they were more frequently celebrated, and with greater pomp, in the chivalrous times of Edward III. One, peculiarly imposing, is recorded to have been held in 1343, which lasted fifteen days, and another in 1390, temp. Richard II. in which the King himself took a conspicuous part. In the reigns of the succeeding monarchs, tournaments continued to be held with like pomp, and were celebrated until later centuries in Smithfield. The most gorgeous probably on record, is that of the Field of the Cloth of Gold, held in the valley between Guisnes and Ardres by the Kings of England and France, Henry VIII. and Francis I. Another tournament, remarkable for having taken place at midnight by torchlight, was held by Queen Elizabeth, within her Majesty's palace of Westminster. In this Just, the Earl of Essex, with twelve Knights gorgeously attired—the Earl and his war-horse in white cloth of silver, his attendants in white satin, was opposed to the Earl of Rutland with a like suite, apparelled in blue. In the time of Elizabeth many exercises of Arms were held by Sir Henry Lee, K.G. Master of the Queen's Armory.

Having so far discussed, within the limits of our brief space, the origin and institutions of Arms generally, we proceed with the subject more in detail.

SECTION II.

Arms are defined by Nisbet as "Hereditary marks of honour, regularly composed of certain tinctures and figures granted and authorized by Sovereigns, for distinguishing, differencing, and illustrating Persons, Families, and Communities."

The Shield, or Escutcheon, is the principal object whereon the emblems or charges of heraldry are depicted. It varies much in shape, but is depicted triangular on the oldest monuments, coins, and seals. The surface or space within the bounding lines of the shield is called the Field.

The Shield is divided into the following parts, A B C, the chief, subdivided into A, the dexter, or right hand chief point; B, the middle chief point; C, the sinister, or left hand chief point; D, the collar, or honour point; E, the heart, or fess point; F, the nornbril, or naval point; and G H I, the base, subdivided into G, the dexter base point; H, the middle base point; and I, the sinister base point.

The Shield is distinguished by certain armorial colours called Tinctures, separated by division lines, and charged with a variety of animals, instruments, and other objects, which themselves bear the designation of charges.

The Tinctures used in heraldry are metals, colours, and furs.

To Sylvester Petra-Sancta, a celebrated Italian Herald, is assigned the invention of the lines and points by which the tinctures are expressed.

The METALS are—

Or—gold—known in uncoloured drawings and engravings by dots or points.

Argent—silver—expressed by the shield being plain.

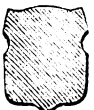

The COLOURS are—

Azure—blue—depicted by horizontal lines.

Gules—red—depicted by perpendicular lines.

Vert—green—depicted by lines from the dexter chief to the sinister base.

Sable—black—depicted by cross lines, horizontal and perpendicular.

Purpure—purple—depicted by lines from the sinister chief to the dexter base.

The FURS are

Ermine—a white field with black spots.

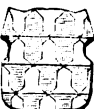

Ermines—a black field with white spots.

Erminois—a gold field with black spots.

Pean—a black field with gold spots.

Vair—composed originally of pieces of fur, but now silver and blue, cut to resemble the flower of the campanula, and opposed to each other in rows; when of different colours, they are specified and described vairé.

Counter Vair—differs from "vair" by having the bells or cups arranged base against base, and point against point.

Potent Counter Potent—is composed of figures like crutches' heads.

The old heralds used more minute distinctions: the Arms of gentlemen, esquires, knights, and baronets, they blazoned by tinctures; those of the nobility by precious stones; and those of emperors, kings, and other sovereign princes, by planets.

Colours and Metals.	Tinctures.	Precious Stones.	Planets.	Names Abridged.
Yellow, or Gold	Or	Topaz	Sol ☉	O Or.
White, or Silver		Pearl	Luna ☾	A Ar.
Black	Sable	Diamond	Saturn ♄	S Sa.
Red	Gules	Ruby	Mars ♂	G Gu.
Blue	Azure	Sapphire	Jupiter ♃	B Az.
Green	Vert	Emerald	Venus ♀	V Vert.
Purple	Purpure	Amethyst	Mercury ☿	P Purp.
Tawney	Tenné	Jacynth	Dragon's Head	T Ten.
Murrey	Sanguine	Sardonix	Dragon's Tail	San. Sang.

The term Counterchanged (French, de l'un en l'autre) expresses that the field is of two tinctures, metal and colour, and that the charge upon it partakes of both,—the charge, or part of the charge, being of metal, which lies upon the colour; and the charge, or part of the charge, being of colour, which lies upon the metal. "Transmutation, or counterchanging," says Guillim, "is an intermixture of the several tinctures of the shield and charge, occasioned by the apposition of some one or more lines of partition over the whole."

It is an inviolable rule of Heraldry, that metal shall never be placed upon metal, nor colour upon colour; that is, if the field be of colour, the immediate charge must be metal, and vice versa.

PARTITION LINES.

Partition Lines are those that divide the field or charge; and are always Right Lines, unless when otherwise described: those that vary from the Right Line are called—

Engrailed.

Invected.

Wavy.

Embattled, or Crenellée.

Nebulée.

Indented.

Dancettée.

Raguly.

Dove-tailed.

Party per Pale.* The field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a perpendicular line.

Quarterly. The field, or charge, divided into four equal parts by two lines, one perpendicular, the other horizontal.

Party per Fess. The field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a horizontal line.

Party per Bend. The field, or charge, divided into two equal parts, by a diagonal line from the dexter chief to the sinister base.

Party per Bend Sinister. The field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by a diagonal line from the sinister chief to the dexter base.

Party per Chevron. The field, or charge, divided into two equal parts by two lines meeting pyramidically in the fesse point, drawn from the dexter and sinister base.

Party per Saltire. The field, or charge, divided into four equal parts, by two diagonal lines crossing each other.

Gyronny of Eight. The field divided into eight equal parts by four lines, two per saltire and two quarterly.

* This word, in the blazon of Arms, is generally omitted; per pale, per fesse, &c. implying the division of the shield.

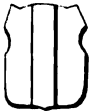

ORDINARIES.

All charges of Arms are either proper or common; those charges are said to be proper which by a certain property do particularly belong to the art of Heraldry, and are of ordinary use therein; hence they are styled ordinaries: the common charges are the representations of all emblems which retain their own names in the blazon.

The principal Ordinaries are—

The Chief (called by French Heralds, un Chef, signifying head, from the place it occupies in the shield) is the whole upper of the field, cut off horizontally by a right or any other of the partition lines used in Heraldry, and should comprise a third part* of the escutcheon.

The Pale is formed by two lines drawn perpendicularly from the top to the base of the escutcheon, comprising a third part of the field. "The French," observes Muckenzie, "say that soldiers of old carried pales of wood to encamp them, which they fixed in the earth," and thus originated this heraldic bearing.

The Bend (Balthus) is formed by two lines drawn diagonally from the dexter chief to the sinister base, and comprises the third part of the shield. It represents a shoulder belt, or scarf.

The Bend Sinister is the same as the Bend, excepting that the lines are drawn from the sinister chief to the dexter base.

The Fesse is formed by two horizontal lines drawn across the field, comprising the centre third part of the escutcheon. It is emblematic of the military girdle worn round the body over the armour.

The Bar is a diminutive of the fesse, and of the same form, containing one-fifth of the field, and may be placed in any part of the escutcheon.

The Cross is composed of four lines, two parallel lines perpendicular, and two transverse, not drawn throughout, but meeting by couples at right angles, near about the fesse point.

The Saltire (the Cross of St. Andrew) is formed by four lines, two drawn from the dexter chief towards the sinister base, and the others from the sinister chief towards the dexter base, meeting in the middle by couples in acute angles, and resembling two bends, dexter and sinister, uniting or blending where they cross.

When charges are borne upon ordinaries, they are described "on a fess," "on a chevron," "on a bend," &c. as the case may be. When charges are placed in the position that ordinaries lie, they are blazoned as "in pale," or "in fess," or "in bend," &c. as the case may be.

* The Chief and the other ordinaries which are mentioned as occupying a third part of the escutcheon, should, strictly, comprise that space; but in armorial drawings this rule is seldom adhered to.

The Chevron (supposed by some writers to have been adopted from the bow of a war saddle, which rose high in front) is formed by two parallel lines drawn from the dexter base, meeting pyramidically, about the fess point, two other parallel lines drawn from the sinister base.

SUB-ORDINARIES.

The Border (French, Bordure) was formerly a mark of difference, to distinguish one branch of a family from another. It surrounds the field, occupying one fifth of it, and is of an equal breadth at every part.

The Orle, is an inner border that does not touch the extremities of the shield, the field being seen within and round it on both sides. It has the appearance of an escutcheon voided, or, as it were, insulated. The Tressure is a diminutive of the Orle.

The Inescutcheon, is a small escutcheon, borne within the shield.

The Quarter, is the space formed by two lines, the one drawn horizontally from the side of the shield to the centre, and the other perpendicularly from the chief to meet it in the same place, and occupies one fourth part of the shield, as the term implies.

The Canton, derived from cantonée, cornered, is less than the Quarter, comprising only the third part of the chief, and is formed, as the Quarter, by a perpendicular line drawn from the top of the shield, meeting another drawn horizontally from the side. The Canton always occupies the dexter chief of the escutcheon, unless otherwise expressed.

Chequé, or Chequy, is used when the field, or any armorial charge, is divided by transverse lines perpendicularly and horizontally into equal parts or squares alternately of different tinctures, like a chess-board. On ordinaries, chequy must consist of at least three ranges of square pieces.

Billets. Billets are oblong figures. When they exceed ten, and are irregularly placed, their number is not expressed in the blazon; but the field or charge covered with them is said to be billettée.

The Pale, or Pall, is composed of the upper half of a saltire and half a pale, the latter issuing from the base point of the shield to the centre.

The Gyron, is of a triangular form, composed of two lines, one drawn diagonally from the dexter chief angle of the shield, and the other horizontally from the dexter side, both meeting in the centre.

The Pile (representing a pile used in the erection of military bridges) should contain, if borne plain, one third of the chief in breadth, and when charged, two thirds: it issues from the chief and tapers to a point, like a wedge, towards the base.

The Flaunch, or Flanque, is made on each side of the shield, by the segment of a circular superficies drawn from the corner of the chief to the base point.

The Lozenge, is a parallelogram with equal sides, forming two acute and two obtuse angles.

The Mascle, is a Lozenge perforated or voided, so that the field appears through the opening.

The Fusil (representing a kind of spindle used in spinning) resembles the lozenge in shape, but is somewhat longer. The field or charge when divided by diagonal lines dexter and sinister, so as to form fusils all over it, is denominated Fusily.

The Roundle, is of a circular form, like a piece of money, and assumes a different name according to its tincture:—

Bezant	Yellow, or Gold.
Plate	White, or Silver.
Torteau	Red.
Pomey	Green, or Vert.
Hurt	Blue, or Azure.
Ogress, or Pellet	Black, or Sable.
Golpe	Purple.
Orange	Tawney.
Guze	Sanguine.

The Annulet, is a ring, the tincture of which must be expressed.

Losengy, is when the field or any armorial charge is divided by diagonal lines transversely, into equal parts or lozenges, alternately of different tinctures.

The Fret, is composed of six pieces, viz. two long ones in saltire, extending to the extremity of the field, and four pieces conjoined in the centre in the form of a mascle, interlaced or fretted by those in saltire.

The Gutte, is the representation of a drop of liquid, and assumes a different name according to its tincture. When yellow, it is called gutte d'or; when white, gutte d'eau; when red, gutte de sang; when blue, gutte de larmes; when green, gutte de vert; when black, gutte de poix. If a field, or charge, be covered with more drops than ten, it is termed guttee d'or, de larmes, de poix, as the case may be.

BLAZONRY OF ARMS.

BLAZON, or BLASON, is the proper technical description of Armorial Bearings, according to the scientific rules of Heraldry. Nisbett thus derives the origin of the word:—"When the knight came near the barriers where joustings were to be held, he blew and winded an horn or trumpet, which gave advertisement to the heralds who were there attending, to come forth, to receive his name, armorial bearing, and his other proofs of nobility, which accordingly they performed, and recorded them in their books—from which (it is said) came Heraldry, or art of Blazon, a German word, which signifies to wind a horn, now taken for a regular description of arms in their proper terms. Whence the German families have their helmets frequently adorned with several horns and trumpets, to show how often they had justed in tournaments."

General Rules concerning Blazonry.—In blazoning a coat of arms, brevity is to be studied, and tautology avoided; care being still taken to give a minute description of every bearing, its position, place on the shield, tincture, &c.

Though the same metal, colour, or fur, may occur more than once in a coat, the repetition of its name should scrupulously be guarded against, by describing the charge, which happens to be of a tincture already mentioned, as of the first, second, or third, according to the relative position that tincture may hold in the blazon; for example, the arms of PASTON of Furness Abbey, are, "Ar. two bars gu. on a canton of the second, a cinquefoil or." In this blazon, the colour of the canton is described "of the second," to obviate the repetition of the word "gu."

The next general rule to be observed, is to begin the blazon with the description of the field, its tincture or tinctures—name then the partition lines, if any, wherewith it is divided, as per fesse, per pale, per saltire, &c. The principal ordinary, if any, should next be described with its tincture, &c. and then the charges around it, generally giving the surcharges upon such ordinary after those between which it is borne; the chief, canton, or any charge placed in a particular point of the shield, with its surcharges, if any, being generally blazoned last.

If a coat consist of two colours only, it is blazoned as in the arms of KYRIE of Herefordshire, viz.:—"Vert, a chevron between three fleurs-de-lis, or"—which indicates that both the chevron and fleurs-de-lis are of the tincture or.

When the last-mentioned charge, or bearing, is of the same tincture as that one named immediately before it, and yet cannot be included under one word, it is necessary to describe it as "of the last:" thus, in the arms of DAWSON of Sutterby, "Arg. two pales sa. and a chev. gu. on a canton of the last a battle-axe or"—"of the last" is used to prevent the repetition of "gu."

If there be two sets of charges of equal number on any parts of a shield, or one set of charges on an ordinary between the same number of charges on the field, the repetition of the number must be avoided by describing the second set of charges by the words "as many." Thus, in the arms of PARTRIDGE of Breakspeares, "Gu. on a fess engrailed cotised or, between three partridges rising, as many torteaux,"—the words "as many" prevents the repetition of the number "three" in this example.

When charges are borne without the interposition of the ordinaries, the exact position they occupy in the shield—fesseways, or in fesse, if in line across the field; paleways, or in pale, if perpendicularly, one over the other; and bandways, or in bend, if placed diagonally from the dexter chief to the sinister base,—must be described, as well as the attitude and tincture of such charges, et. gr. "HACKETT (Hackettstown, Ireland). Az. three lake fishes hauriant in fess ar. on a chief of the second three shamrocks ppr.;" in fess, denoting that the fishes are to be borne in a horizontal line across the field. "MAULEVERER (Arncliffe, co. York). Sa. three greyhounds courant in pale ar.

collared or:" in pale, signifying that the greyhounds are borne perpendicularly one above the other.

When the charges are three, whether with or without ordinaries, the usual way they are borne is two in chief and one in base, and this is understood without being mentioned; but if they be not so placed, or exceed the number three, their position must be specifically described according to the preceding rule, or if in horizontal rows of an equal or unequal number, their number, &c. must be stated; the last remark, the arms of LANGRIGE, or LANGRICH, will tend to elucidate, viz.:—"Arg. six billets, three, two and one;" implying that the six billets are borne in three rows, three in the uppermost, two in the second, and one in the lowest.

ATTITUDES OR POSITIONS OF ANIMALS.

When a lion or other beast of prey stands upright, with only one ear and one eye seen, he is termed Rampant; when walking forward, with one eye and ear seen, Passant; when sitting, Sejant; when lying down, Couchant. If in any of these positions the animal looks full face, so that both eyes and ears may be seen, the word Guardant is annexed to Passant, Rampant, Sejant, or Couchant, as the case may be, and if he look back, the word Reguardant. An animal is Saliant when leaping forwards bendways.

To Griffins the term Segreant is given in place of Rampant. Animals of the deer kind have their positions otherwise blazoned. Thus when looking full faced they are said to be At Gaze; when standing, Statant; when walking, Tripping; when leaping forward, Springing; when running, Courant; and when at rest on the ground, Lodged.

A horse when running is blazoned Courant, or in full speed; when leaping, Cabré, Effray, or Suliant; when rearing, Forcené.

Birds are blazoned, when standing with their wings down, Close; when preparing to fly, Rising; when flying, Volant; when spread open with both wings stretched out, and their breasts seen, Displayed. The wings open and against each other are called Indorsed. One wing is a Demivol.

Fishes when placed horizontally are Naïant; when perpendicularly, Hauriant; when drawn in an arched form like the dolphin, they are Em-bowed.

When any living creature proceeds from the bottom of an ordinary, it is termed Issuant; when placed over two colours, Jessant; when coming from the middle of an ordinary or charge, so as to show but half the body, and the tip of the tail, Naissant.

A serpent placed horizontally is said to be Gliding.

MARSHALLING OF ARMS.

Marshalling Arms is, strictly speaking, the proper arrangement in one shield, either by impaling or quartering, of various coats. Guillim and Mackenzie define it to be "the conjoining of diverse coats in one shield."

Impaling is the halving or dimidiating anything by a perpendicular line. In Heraldry, it applies to the method of bearing the wife's arms, and is practised in three different ways:—First, by dimidiating, that is, by dividing, palewise, the shields of the arms of both husband and wife, into two equal parts, and then uniting the dexter half of the husband's with the sinister half of the wife's, thus forming a whole shield. This mode is styled acolée in French, and was that adopted by the Kings of France in impaling the arms of Navarre. The second rule is, dimidiating the husband's arms, and impaling that with the full shield of the wife; and the third and present is, the impaling of the two whole coats, except when there happens to be a border round one or both of them. In that case, the portion of the border is omitted where the two shields unite. Heraldic authorities give three rules to be observed in impaling arms:—

First—The husband's ensigns are always to be placed on the right side, as Baron; and the wife's on the left, as Femme.

Second—No husband can impale his wife's arms with his own, on a surcoat of arms, ensign, or banner, but may use them impaled on any thing else which is not applied to the public service.

Third—No husband, impaling his wife's arms with his own, can surround the shield with the Order of the Garter, or with any other Order: for, saith Sandford, although the husband may give his equal half of her escutcheon, yet he cannot share his temporary order of knighthood with her, except she be sovereign of the order. This restriction is not allowed by Edmundson, who argues that there is not a single article in all the statutes of the order, that debars the new-made knight from continuing to impale, as he had done previously, his wife's arms. Some writers maintain that, if a man have had two wives, he may impale the arms of both, on the sinister side; those of the first wife, in chief, and those of the second, in base; others assert, that he may place his own coat, in pale, and those of his two wives on the dexter and sinister side; but these positions are quite untenable. The intent of impaling, is to shew that the bearer is married to a woman of a particular family; but, when by her death, the alliance is at an end, he ceases to use the ensigns of her family. Some instances occur of a widower continuing to impale the arms of his deceased wife, from a regard to her memory; but this practice accords not with the laws of heraldry. The case differs, however, as regards a widow: whilst she remains such, she is obliged to bear the arms of her deceased husband.

When the wife is an heiress or co-heiress, her husband, instead of impaling, bears her ensigns on a shield, in the centre of his own, styled an escutcheon of pretence.

Quartering.—The practice of quartering arms is carried back by Edmundson to the commencement of the fourteenth century, at which period, according to that writer, John Hastings, second Earl of Pembroke, was the first subject in England to assume the quartered coat. The object of quartering arms, is to exhibit the descent of one family from the heiresses or co-heiresses of other families. Thus, the children of an heiress or co-heiress, at her death, are entitled to quarter, with their paternal coat, her arms, and all arms to which she may have been entitled by descent. In marshalling quarterings, the first, following the paternal coat is, that of the earliest heiress, and then succeed any quarterings her descent may bring in; with the second heiress, the same rule is followed, and so on, in chronological rotation, with every heiress from whom the bearer may derive.

When a daughter becomes an heiress to her mother, (also an heiress,) and not to her father, which happens when the father marries a subsequent wife, and has by her male issue, to represent him, she is entitled to bear the maternal coat with the arms of her father, on a canton, taking all the quarterings to which her mother was, by descent, entitled. When married, she conveys the whole to be borne on an escutcheon of pretence, and transmits them at her death to be borne as quarterings by her descendants.

THE APPENDAGES OF THE SHIELD.

The Helmet, Mantling, Wreath, Crest, Supporters, and Motto.

The Helmet, Helme, Casque, or Morion, has varied in shape in different ages and countries. The most ancient form is the simplest, composed of iron, of a shape fitted to the head, and flat upon the top, with an aperture for the light. This is styled the Norman Helmet, and appears on very old seals, attached to the Gorget, a separate piece of armour which covered the neck. In the twelfth century, a change was made to mark the rank of the individual bearer.

The Helmet assigned to Kings and Princes of the Blood Royal, is full-faced, composed of gold, with the beavouir divided by six projecting bars, and lined with crimson.

The Helmet of the Nobility is of steel, with five bars of gold: it is placed on the shield inclining to a profile.

The Helmet of Knights and Baronets, is the full-faced steel helmet, with the visor thrown back, and without bars.

The Helmet of Esquires, always depicted in profile, is of steel, with the visor closed.

Each of these Helmets is placed immediately above the escutcheon, and supports the wreath on which is the crest.

The Lambrequin, is the mantle or hood, placed on the head between the Helmet and Crest, and depicted flottant behind the wearer. Its shape was most capricious, for, as it was probably cut through and jagged by the sword, in battle, it afforded a certain evidence of prowess.

The Mantle, or Mantling, was almost identical with the Lambrequin, but it extended behind the Escutcheon.

The Wreath, upon which the Crest is generally borne, is composed of two cords of silk interwoven or twisted together, the one tintured of the principal metal, and the other, of the principal colour in the arms. The Wreath, in ancient times, was used to fasten the Crest to the Helmet. It is circular, but, when depicted, is shewn in profile or side view.

The Crest, or Cognizance, (derived from the Latin word Crista, a comb or tuft,) originated in the thirteenth century, and served to distinguish the combatants in the battle or tournament: for this reason, no Crest is allowed to a female. The Crest, unless expressly stated to be on a chapeau or coronet, is always on a wreath, which need not therefore be named in the blazon.

Supporters are figures placed on each side of the Shield, and appear, as the term implies, to hold up and support it. Menestrier derives their origin from a practice at the tournaments. On those occasions it was customary for the Knights who took part in the joustings, to have their shields and devices hung before their pavilions, and guarded by their pages, armour bearers, and servants, clothed in fantastic dresses or skins of beasts, according to the fancy of their masters, sometimes as savages, Saracens, sirens, &c. and sometimes as lions, bears, dragons, &c.

In England, the right to bear Supporters is confined to Peers of the Realm,* Knights of the Garter and Bath, and to those who may have obtained them by Royal Grant. Garter King of Arms has not the power to grant them to any person below the degree of a Knight of the Bath, unless acting under especial direction from the Sovereign; but in Scotland, Lord Lion may, by virtue of his office, do so without any such Royal warrant.

In ancient times, many personages who held high offices in the State, used Supporters, as did various eminent, though unennobled, families, viz. the Stevenings of Sussex, the Stawells and Lutrells of Somersetshire, the Tichbornes and Popahms of Hants, the Fulfords of Devon, the Savages of Cheshire, the Trevanions of Cornwall, &c. &c. "Hence," says a learned Heraldic writer, "it may justly be concluded, that those families who anciently used such Supporters, either on their seals, banners, or monuments, and carved them in stone or wood, or depicted them on the glass windows of their mansions, and in the churches, chapels, and religious houses of their foundation, endowment or patronage, as perspicuous evidences and memorials of their having a possessory right to such Supporters, are, full and absolutely well entitled to bear them, and that no one of the descendants of such families ever ought to alienate such Supporters, or bear their Arms without them, because such possessory right is by far more honourable than any other modern Grant of Supporters that can be obtained from the office of Arms."

In Scotland, the right to Supporters is universally conceded to the Chiefs of the various Clans; and were granted to the Nova Scotia Baronets, by their patents of creations. In Ireland, they are borne by the heads of the different Septs; and in Wales, the Barons of Edeirnion in Merioneth—who enjoyed Baronial rights in their domains, and had those rights acknowledged and confirmed, after the subjugation of their country, by special grants from the English Monarchs—enjoyed, for a long series of generations, the use of Supporters.

Motto, "is," according to Guillim, "a word, saying, or sentence, which gentlemen carry in a scroll under the Arms, and sometimes over the Crest." The first known in England is stated to have been that which King Edward gave to the Knights of the Garter, on the foundation of that Order.

Differences, or Marks of Cadency, are the distinctions used to indicate the various branches or Cadets of one family. The eldest son during the lifetime of his father bears a Label; the second, a Crescent; the third, a Mullet; the fourth, a Martlet; the fifth, an Annulet; the sixth, a Fleur-de-lis; the seventh, a Rose; the eighth, a Cross moline; the ninth, a Double quatrefoil.

* The practice of the Sovereigns of England granting Supporters to the Peers of each degree, seems to have commenced in the reign of Henry VIII. as did that of granting the like ornaments to the Knights of the Garter and Bath.

DICTIONARY OF TERMS

USED IN HERALDRY.

Accented, side by side.
Accrued, grown to maturity.
Acorned, bearing acorns.
Adorsed, placed back to back.
Affrontée, full-faced.
Aisé, winged.
Alani, a mastiff dog with short ears.
Allerion, an eagle without beak or feet.
Alternate, succeeding one another by turns.
Amethyst, a precious stone, formerly used to express purple.
Ancred, or Anchored, applied to a cross, of which the four extremities resemble the flook of an anchor. See under Crosses.
Annulet, a ring.

Antelope, the animal of that name.

Appaumé, the hand open, presenting the palm, and the fingers and thumb at full length.
Armed. All birds which have talons and bills that aid them to seize and rend their prey, are in blazon said to be armed when those weapons differ in tincture from their bodies. But to swans, wild geese, and other birds without talons, the word armed does not apply. They, in like case, are termed beaked and membered. Beasts are also described as armed, when their horns or hoofs are of another colour than their bodies.

Arraché, same as erased.
Arroundie, made circular or round.
Atired, is applied to the horns of animals of the deer species, instead of armed, as they are supposed to wear their antlers not as weapons, but ornaments.
Atires, the horns of a buck.

Bailloné, applied to a lion holding a staff in his mouth.

Banded, encircled with a band or ribbon.

Bar. See p. ix.

Barbed, is derived from the French word "barbé." The five leaves which appear on the outside of a full-blown rose are, in Heraldry, called the bars, and thus blazoned, a rose gu. barbed and seeded ppr.

Barnacles, instruments used by farriers to curb horses.

Bars-Gemel, two bars or barrulets placed parallel to each other, the word Gemel being derived from "Gemelli," twins.

Barry, and Barruly, describes the field or charge, divided by lines horizontal.

Basilisk. An heraldic monster, resembling in shape the wivern or cockatrice, but having, at the end of its tail, the head of a dragon.

Basnet, an old name for a helmet.

Battering-ram, an instrument used by the ancients to beat down the walls of a besieged city. See p. xiv.

Battled Arrondie, denotes that the battlement is rounded at the top.

Battled-imbattled, one battlement upon another.

Baton, derived from the French word Bastin, staff or cudgel, and generally borne as a mark of Bastardy. It does not go from side to side of the shield as the bend does; but is couped in the form of a truncheon.

Beacon. A machine anciently used to warn against the approach of an enemy, and to alarm the country. It represents an iron box containing fire, on the top of a high pole or pillar, against which a ladder is likewise placed.

Beaked. See Armed.

Bearing, a name applicable to any single charge.

Belled, applied to the hawk, to which bells are generally affixed.

Bend. See p. ix.

Bendlet, a diminutive of the Bend, of which it is half the size in breadth.

Bendy, describes a field or charge divided, diagonally, into four, six, eight, or more equal parts.

Bendy Bordure.

Besant, the current coin of Byzantium, or Constantinople—in English Heraldry, represented as round flat pieces of gold without impress.

Billets are oblong squares, by some supposed to represent bricks, by others letters. See p. x.

Bird-bolt, a small arrow with a blunt head.

Border, or Bordure. See p. x.

Bottonny, applied to a cross, whose extremities resemble the trefoil. See Crosses.

Braced, same as interlaced.

Bretessé, imbattled, that has its battlements on each side, one against the other.

Brimsey, a gad-fly.

Brassarts, and Brassets, armour for the elbows and arms.

Burgonet, a sort of steel cap, formerly worn by foot soldiers in battle.

Cabossed, cabashed, caborsed, or trunked, signifies the head of any beast looking right forward, or full-faced, with nothing of the neck seen.

Cabrée, or effray, or saliant, terms applied to a horse rising on its hind feet.

Caltrap, or Galtrap, or Chevaltrap, an instrument made of iron, which, in ancient time, was used in war to gall and wound the horses' feet, it having spikes so placed that whichever way it lay upon the ground one point would ever stand up. See p. xiv.

Calvary Cross, represents the Cross on Mount Calvary on which our Saviour suffered. See Cross.

Canton. See p. x.

Cartouche, the escutcheon of the Pope, or of a churchman.

Cap of Maintenance, or Dignity, by the French called a Chapeau, a head-gear of crimson velvet turned up with ermine. See p. xiv.

Caparison, the furniture of a war-horse.

Carbuncle, or escarbuncle, a precious stone whose lustre was vulgarly supposed not to be darkened by the night; in Heraldry rays are a representation of this bearing.

Casque, a helmet.

Cat-a-Mountain, a wild cat always drawn guardant.

Catharine-wheel, an instrument of torture with iron teeth, called from St. Catharine, the virgin having suffered upon it.

Centaur, or sagittarius, an imaginary creature, half man and half horse.

Cercellée, or recercellée, applied to a cross curling at the ends.

The Royal Armory.

Queen Victoria beareth the Royal Arms on a shield, full and complete, while all other ladies bear their arms simply on a lozenge; for, saith the old Rhymer,

Our sagest men of lore define
 The kingly state as masculine;
 Puissant, martial, bold, and strong,
 The stay of right, the scourge of wrong;
 Hence those that England's sceptre wield,
 Must buckle on broad sword and shield,
 And o'er the land and o'er the sea
 Maintain her sway triumphantly;
 If ladie fair—then emulate
 Anjou's brave princess, Margaret.
 If belted knight—high plume advance,
 And do as did the sable prince,
 O'ercrow the crow of crowing France.*

ARMS—Quarterly, first and fourth, gu., three lions pass. guard. in pale, or, for ENGLAND; second, or, a lion ramp. within a double tressure, flory, counterflory gu. for SCOTLAND; az. a harp or, stringed ar. for IRELAND; all surrounded by the Garter.

CREST—England—Upon the royal helmet, the imperial crown ppr. thereon a lion statant, guard. or, imperially crowned, also ppr.

SUPPORTERS—Dexter, a lion ramp. guard. or, crowned as the crest. Sinister, an unicorn ar. armed, crined, and unguled or, gorged with a coronet composed of crosses pattée and fleurs-de-lis, a chain affixed thereto, passing betw. the forelegs, and reflexed over the back, also or.

CREST—Scotland—On an imperial crown ppr. a lion sejant affrontée gu. imperially crowned or, holding in the dexter paw a sword, and in the sinister a sceptre erect, also ppr.

CREST—Ireland—On a wreath, or and az. a castle, triple-towered, gold, a hart ar. springing from the gate.

* These lines, originally in black letter, have been modernized to render them intelligible.

THE ROYAL ARMORY.

MOTTO—Bien et mon Droit, in the compartment below the shield, with the union roses, shamrock, and thistle engrafted on the same stem.

BADGES.

- I. ENGLAND—The red and white rose, united.
- II. SCOTLAND—A thistle.
- III. IRELAND—A harp or, the strings ar.
- IV. IRELAND—A shamrock leaf, vert.
- V. WALES—A dragon pass. wings elevated gu. upon a mount vert.

} All ensigned with the royal crown.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS ALBERT EDWARD, PRINCE OF WALES, son of the Queen, and heir apparent to the Crown, beareth the Royal Arms, differenced by a label of three points and an escutcheon of pretence, for SAXONY, viz. barry of ten, sa. and ar. a bend treflé vert.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS VICTORIA-ADELAIDE-MARY-LOUISA, PRINCESS ROYAL, daughter of the Queen, beareth the Royal Arms, differenced by a label of three points charged with a rose betw. two crosses gules.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT, CONSORT OF THE QUEEN, beareth, Quarterly, first and fourth, the Royal Arms, differenced by a label of three points, on the centre point a cross gu.; second and third, barry of ten, sa. and ar. a cross treflé vert, for SAXONY.

Supporters—Two lions ramp. or, crowned ppr. each charged on the shoulder with a label as in the arms.

THE ROYAL ARMORY.

The Princes and Princesses of the Royal Blood bear the Royal Arms, Crest, and Supporters, differenced with the proper labels assigned to each distinctly; the Princesses carrying their arms in a losenge.

There are now surviving three sons and two daughters of King George III. and one daughter of his Majesty's brother, His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester; in all, three Princes and three Princesses of the Blood Royal, viz.

ERNEST, DUKE OF CUMBERLAND (KING OF HANOVER). A label of three points ar. charged with a fleur-de-lis az. betw. two crosses gu.

AUGUSTUS FREDERICK, DUKE OF SUSSEX. A similar label, charged with two hearts in pale, betw. two crosses gu.

ADOLPHUS FREDERICK, DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE. A similar label, charged with a cross, and on either side two hearts in pale gu.

MARY, DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER. A like label charged with a rose betw. two cantons gu.

PRINCESS SOPHIA. A similar label charged with a heart betw. two roses gu.

PRINCESS SOPHIA-MATILDA OF GLOUCESTER, cousin of the Queen. A label of five points.

The Arms

BORNE BY THE DIFFERENT MONARCHS SINCE THE CONQUEST.

WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR. Gu. two lions pass. guard. or. Much controversy has arisen regarding leopards or lions, but the latter would appear the more correct. John, the Monk of Harmondstier, in Tourain, a contemporary writer, relates, that when HENRY I. selected Geoffrey Plantagenet to be his son-in-law, "Clypeus Leonculos aureos imaginarios habens collo ejus suspenditur."

WILLIAM II. (RUFUS), second son of the Conqueror. The same Arms precisely as those of his father.

HENRY I. third son of the Conqueror. Arms, similar to those of his predecessor.

STEPHEN. This Prince's Arms are differently described: by some he is said to have borne the same Arms as his maternal grandfather, WILLIAM the Conqueror; by others—Gu. the bodies of three lions pass. the necks with men's bodies or, in form of the sign of Sagittarius; by a third, which is the most correct, Gu. a Sagittarius ar.

HENRY II. Gu. two lions pass. guard. or, previously to the King's marriage with Eleanor of Aquitaine, when he adopted a third lion, for Aquitaine. On the Great Seal no Arms appear, the converse side of the shield ing only exhibited.

RICHARD Cœur-de-Lion. Before the Crusade, Richard's Great Seal shews but a moiety of the shield (the dexter side) with a lion rampant, from which the inference is that he then bore two lions combatant. After his exploits in the Holy Land, another Great Seal bears the three lions, which henceforward became the hereditary bearings of the Kings and Queens of England.

JOHN. Prior to his elevation to the throne, when Earl of Mortagne, in Normandy, this Prince bore two lions only; after his accession, he assumed the Arms of his predecessor.

HENRY III. Arms, the same.

EDWARD I. Similar Arms.

EDWARD II. Similar.

EDWARD III. This Prince assumed the title of King of France, in supposed right of his mother, Isabel, daughter of Philip IV., who became that monarch's sole heiress, his three sons having died issueless. Quarterly, first and fourth, FRANCE, az. semée of fleurs-de-lis or; second and third, ENGLAND, gu. three lions pass. guard. or.

Crest—Upon a chapeau, a lion pass. guard. crowned or. Edward III. was the first English King who bore a Crest, which was continued by succeeding monarchs to Edward VI. inclusive, on the Great Seal.

The Order of the Garter was instituted by King Edward, and generally borne round the Royal Arms by his successors, although not introduced on the Great Seal before the time of HENRY VIII.

Badges—Clouds ar. from which rays descend. A trunk or stump of a tree, eradicated and coupé or.

RICHARD II., son of the Black Prince. This monarch bore the same Arms upon the Great Seal, as EDWARD III. but having chosen St. Edward the Confessor for his patron, he impaled the Arms of the Confessor, Az. a cross patonce betw. five martlets or, with the Arms of FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly.

RICHARD was the first English King who used Supporters, namely, two angels; beneath the shield, a white hart couchant, gorged with a gold coronet, and chained under a tree; a device from the ensigns of his mother Joan, the Fair Maid of Kent, which he bore as a badge. He used likewise other badges, viz. A peascod branch, with the cods open and empty. The sun in splendour, and The eradicated stump of a tree coupé or.

HENRY IV. This Prince appears to have taken the Great Seal of his predecessor, the second RICHARD, merely substituting his own name for that of the late King, and bearing the same Arms, with ENGLAND occasionally in the first quarter.

Supporters—On the dexter side, a swan, gorged and lined; on the sinister, an antelope gorged and lined as the dexter.

Badge—The red rose of Lancaster, ensigned with the crown. He used the tail of a fox, as a badge or device, following, as Camden quaintly observes, the advice of Lissander: "If the lion's skin were too short, to piece it out with a fox's case."

HENRY V. Quarterly, FRANCE and ENGLAND.

The Arms of FRANCE having been altered by the French King, limiting the number of fleurs-de-lis to three; HENRY V. adopted the alteration.

Supporters (when Prince of Wales)—Two swans, each holding in the beak an ostrich feather and scroll; after ascending the throne, he assumed a dexter supporter; A lion ramp. guard. crowned, the sinister being an antelope, as that of his predecessor.

HENRY VI. Arms, same as predecessor.

Supporters—Two antelopes ar. accolled with coronets, attired and chained or: those appear over the porch of Eton College. A tiger ramp. guard. or, semée of roundles alternately sa. gu. az. and vert, with fire issuing from the mouth and ears, sometimes occurs as the sinister supporter.

Badge—Two feathers in saltire ar.; he likewise used the rose as a royal badge.

EDWARD IV. FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, a lion ramp. ar. the tail passed between the legs and turned over the back (one of the supporters of the King, as Earl of March); sinister, a bull; a white hart was likewise borne.

Badges—A falcon ar. within a fetterlock closed or, as Duke of York.

A dragon sejant sa. crowned or, as Earl of Ulster.

A bull sa. crowned and hooped or, for the Honour of Clare or Clarence.

A white hart attired, accolloed with a coronet, and chained or, on a mount vert. This badge EDWARD used in honour of RICHARD II., it being that King's badge.

A white rose rayonné or, and the sun in splendour or.

EDWARD V. FRANCE and ENGLAND quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, a lion ar. (one of the supporters of the Farldom of March); sinister, a hind ar.

Badges—The white rose of York, and the falcon within the fetterlock.

RICHARD III. FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly.

Supporters—Two boars ar. tusks and bristles or. The white boar was his cognizance.

Badge—The white rose rayonné or.

HENRY VII. FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, a dragon gu. (the ensign of Cadwallader, the last King of the Britons); sinister, a greyhound ar. collared gu.

Motto—Dieu et mon droit.

Badges—A portcullis, to which HENRY added the Motto, "Altera securitas." The red and white roses united, in allusion to the union, in him, of the Houses of York and Lancaster. And to commemorate his being crowned on Bosworth Field with the diadem of RICHARD, found in a hawthorn-bush after the battle, he bore the hawthorn-bush with the crown in it, and the letters K. H. as a badge.

HENRY VIII. FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly.

Supporters—The supporters in the beginning of this King's reign were the same as those of HENRY VII.; but he afterwards discontinued the greyhound, and used the following instead—On the dexter side, a lion guard, and crowned or, transposing the red dragon to the sinister.

Motto—Dieu et mon droit.

Badges—A red rose; the union roses, red and white; a fleur-de-lis or; a portcullis or.

He likewise used a greyhound courant, collared, to show his descent from the Royal House of York.

He was the first English monarch who encircled the Royal Arms with the Garter, surmounted by the crown, upon the Great Seal.

EDWARD VI. Arms, Supporters, Motto, and Badges, the same as his father, HENRY VIII.

MARY. The Queen, after her marriage with Philip of Spain bore the King's Arms, (viz. per fesse, the chief part quarterly of four pieces: first, Castile and Leon, quarterly; second, Arragon, impaling Sicily; third, as the second; fourth, as the first. The base part of the escutcheon, also quarterly of four pieces: first, Austria modern; second, Burgundy modern; third, Burgundy ancient; and fourth, Brabant; over all an inescutcheon of Flanders and Tyrol, impaled) impaling FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly.

Supporters—Dexter, an eagle; sinister, a lion ramp. crowned or.

Badges—Queen Mary before her accession used both the red and white rose, and a pomegranate, knit together, to show her descent from the House of Lancaster, York, and Spain; but on her accession she bore, Winged Time drawing Truth out of a pit, with, "Veritas temporis filia," for motto: thus her first Great Seal before marriage.

The rose ensigned with the royal crown seems to have been another badge used by this Queen.

ELIZABETH. FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly, encircled by the Garter.

Supporters—Dexter, a lion ramp. guard, and crowned or; sinister, the red dragon, as borne by her father, HENRY VIII.

Badges—The red and white roses; the fleur-de-lis; and the Irish harp, all ensigned by the royal crown.

This Queen made use of several heroical devices, but most commonly that of a sieve. The badge of Ireland seems for the first time in this Queen's reign to have been placed on the Great Seal.

JAMES I. Quarterly, first and fourth, FRANCE and ENGLAND, quarterly; second, or, a lion ramp. within a double tressure, flory counterflory gu. SCOTLAND; third, az. a harp or, stringed ar. IRELAND.

Supporters—Dexter, the English lion ramp. guard. crowned or; sinister, the Scottish unicorn ar. gorged with the royal coronet, and chained or.

Mottos—"Beati pacifici;" and, "Dieu et mon droit."

Badges—The three badges of the roses, fleur-de-lis, and harp, and that of a thistle, for SCOTLAND, all ensigned with the royal crown, were borne by JAMES I. and on his Great Seal appear banners of the arms of Cadwallader, the last King of the Britons, viz. az. a cross pattée fitchée or, and the Arms of King Edgar, az. a cross ponce betw. four martlets or, to show his descent from the blood royal, both of Wales and England.

CHARLES I. Arms, Crest, Supporters, and Badges, the same as those of his father, JAMES I.

On the Great Seal is represented the Stan-

Standard of St. George, viz. ar. a cross gu. supported by the lion of England, and the Standard of St. Andrew, being, az. a saltire ar. upheld by the unicorn of Scotland.

CHARLES II. This Monarch bore the same Arms, &c. as CHARLES I. and by Royal warrant dated 9th Feb. in the 13th year of his reign, directed that in future the heir apparent to the crown, for the time being, should use and bear a coronet composed of crosses and fleurs-de-lis with one arch, and in the midst a ball and cross, as in the royal diadem; and that his brother, JAMES, Duke of York, the sons of the Sovereign, and the immediate sons and brothers of his successors, Kings of ENGLAND, should use coronets composed of crosses and fleurs-de-lis only; but that all their sons, respectively, having the title of Dukes, shall use coronets composed of crosses and flowers, or leaves, such as are used in the coronets of Dukes, not being of the Blood Royal.

JAMES II. This King used the same Arms, &c. as his brother, CHARLES II.

WILLIAM III. and QUEEN MARY. Arms, &c. those of JAMES I. with an escutcheon of pretence, thereon, the Arms of Nassau, viz. az. billety or, a lion ramp. gold.
Motto—Je maintiendrai.

The Union of the Two Kingdoms.

QUEEN ANNE, on her accession, bore the shield without the escutcheon of Nassau, viz. first and fourth, quarterly, FRANCE and ENGLAND; second, or, a lion ramp. within a double tressure, flory, counterflory, gu. for SCOTLAND; third, az. a harp stringed or, for IRELAND; but after the union with Scotland, Her Majesty bore, first and fourth, ENGLAND, impaling SCOTLAND; second, FRANCE; third, IRELAND.

BURGH; on a point in point, gu. a horse courant ar. for SAXONY; on the centre of the fourth quarter an escutcheon gu. charged with the crown of CHARLEMAGNE, or, as the Arch-Treasurer of the Holy Roman Empire.

GEORGE THE THIRD bore the shield the same as GEORGE THE FIRST, until the union with Ireland, when the ensigns of France were abandoned, and those of the King's Germanic States marshalled on an escutcheon of pretence.

GEORGE THE FIRST. First, ENGLAND impaling SCOTLAND; second, FRANCE; third, IRELAND; fourth, gu. two lions pass. guard. in pale or, for BRUNSWICK; impaling or, semée of hearts gu. a lion ramp. az. for LUNEN-

QUEEN VICTORIA bears the shield of GEORGE THE FIRST, without the escutcheon of pretence.

Arms of Scotland.

Or, a lion ramp. within a double tressure, flory, counterflory, gu. Crest—A lion sejant affrontée, in the dexter paw a sword erect, in the sinister a sceptre. Supporters—Two unicorns ar. gorged with a royal coronet, and charged or. Mottoes—over the crest—In defence; under the arms—Nemo me impune lacessit.

Arms of Ireland.

Az. a harp or, stringed ar.

The Irish Bards were in early times the sacred musicians and historical poets of their country: hence originated the harp in the national arms. King JAMES I. was the first English monarch who quartered the ensigns of Ireland.

THE ROYAL ENSIGNS

DEDUCED METRICALLY FROM THE NORTHMEN, OR NORMANS, WHO VANQUISHED ENGLAND IN THE YEAR OF OUR LORD 1066, WITH OBSERVATIONS THEREUPON.

This Paper, endorsed as above, was found in the bureau of an Amateur Herald of some consideration, recently deceased.

A. D. 1066. THE Norman standard and the shield,
That Norman WILLIAM wore,
Two golden leopards on a field,
Of royal ruby bore.¹

A. D. 1087 to 1097. THE same device did RUFUS bear,
On targe and banner free;
And the first HENRY, wise Beauclerk,
Allowed the same to be.

A. D. 1128. STEPHEN OF BLOIS, the first and last
Anointed of the name,
For thunder, storm, and cloud o'ercast
The sunshine of his fame.

The Monarch's shield no lions bore,
And when his standard rose,
An archer of th' zodiac, d'or,
Supplied the place of those.²

WHEN HAI. secundus came to reign, A. D. 1154.
Primus Plantagenet,³
The golden lions rose again,
To flourish even yet.

KING RICHARD from the holy band A. D. 1193.
Of Christian heroes came,
And reach'd again his father land,
With lion-hearted fame;—

¹ The standard of Rollo, first Duke of Normandy, bore a leopard, the offspring of a lion and panther, that beast of prey noted for rashness, having been adopted by the Northmen, or Normans, as typical of themselves; so characterized by boldness and impetuosity. When the country of Maine, upon the Mayenne, became annexed to the duchy of Normandy, a second leopard was added to the Norman standard, and thus it was unfurled in England by the Conqueror.

² The good city of Blois, capital of Blesois, in the kingdom of France, used the ensigns of a Sagittary, or Centaur, as type of the chase; and STEPHEN, son of the Comte de Blois, assumed that ensign in his contest with the Empress MAUD or MATILDA.

³ HENRY PLANTAGENET, son of Geoffrey, Comte d'Anjou, by the Empress Matilda, succeeded King STEPHEN. The Comte d'Anjou wore on his helmet a branch of Plantagenet, or green broom, and that being marshalled with the arms of Augers, the capital city of Anjou, was introduced into the escutcheon of England by King Henry the Second; which monarch did espouse Eleanor of Aquitaine, or Guyenne, and by that espousal did acquire the duchy of Guyenne. The arms of the capital city thereof, Bourdeaux, to wit, having a gold lion, that charge of augmentation was henceforward marshalled with the two Norman leopards or lions.

In coat of mail, as he had fought
On Acre's battle field,
The crosslet on his shoulder wrought,
The lions on his shield.⁴

A.D. 1327. THE royal ensigns, always famed,
So pass'd from reign to reign,
Until King EDWARD boldly claimed
The crown of Charlemagne.

And shield and standard marshall'd hence,
With England quarterly,
On azure field of gallant France,
The Bourbon fleur-de-lis.⁵

The same escutcheon's blazonry,
The next two monarchs bore
Unchanged from Crescy's victory,
To that of Agincourt.

A.D. 1415. WHEN Agincourt triumphantly,
Did England's lion crown
With laurels verdant as the sea,
And fadeless as renown,
The royal banner waving o'er
Each new-dubb'd knight, display'd
The lily that the Bourbon bore
Re-marshall'd and arrayed.⁶

FROM Hastings e'en to Bosworth field,
No further change appears;
Thus England's standard and her shield
Endured five hundred years.

And marshall'd thus the Norman kings,
As barb'rous as their times—
But chivalry her mantle flings,
And covers half their crimes.

Then ere of other lines we tell,
Fair chivalry adieu;
Plantagenet's last passing bell,
A requiem rang for you.

THE Tudor princes, bold and bluff,
Preserved the blazonry;
Sceptre and shield were quite enough
For Bosworth's victory.

WHEN Philip woo'd the island maid,
And shared her island throne;
The Spaniard's ensigns were array'd
With MARY TUDOR'S OWN.

GOOD QUEEN BESS! was ever name
So grossly misapplied;
The scourge of man—fair woman's shame,
The vixen lived and died.

I care not how she bore her state,
Or did her subject knaves;
I hate a despot, and I hate
A race of crouching slaves.

KING JAMES the First⁷ to England brought
The shield her might had braved;
An ally bold as ever fought,
When freedom's banner waved.

King James the shield did charge beside,
With Erin's harp of fire;
Oh, search the broad earth far and wide,
And match that golden lyre.

Though silent now, tradition's words
Do vouch for how it rung,
When native bard attuned its chords,
And native minstrel sung.

⁴ Richard the First, when he assumed the title of King of Jerusalem, hoisted the banner of the lion of the Holy Land, the Sleeping Lion of Judah—the badge of David and Solomon, Kings of Jerusalem, from the tribe of Judah;—but the science of heraldry being then in its infancy, the Sleeping Lion was depicted differently—couchant, passant, or rampant; while the later painters have described the shield of Richard with three lions passant. When Richard inscribed the cross on his banner, he adopted the Latin cross, and white as the colour. The colour was afterwards changed to red, while the Latin cross was allowed to remain. When Richard beleaguered the Castle of Gisors in Normandy, he gave as a parole, "Dieu et mon droit;" because the King of France, Philip Augustus, had, without any right whatsoever, taken that place which had belonged to England. The motto has ever since endured, in testimony of the English prince's victory.

⁵ EDWARD, third of the name, assumed the title of King of France, and quartered "semée of fleurs-de-lis" with the arms of England.

⁶ Henry the Fifth adopted the arms of France as altered by the French King, from az. semée of fleurs-de-lis or, to "az. three fleurs-de-lis or."

The inference that the victory of Azincourt caused the alteration, is, I am fully aware, obnoxious to the tusk of the critic. Heraldry hath no cognizance of coat-armour save through fair and legitimate inheritance; and the great EDWARD assumed the arms of France, not because he had achieved the victory of Crescy, near Montreuil, but because he was the son and heir of Queen Isabella, daughter of King PHILIP the Fair of France: for, saith the historian Hume, "The King of England, who was at that time a youth of fifteen years of age, embraced a notion that he was entitled, in right of his mother, to the succession of that kingdom." Yet it was too fair an opportunity for a truly loyal man, as I humbly hope I shall ever and always prove myself to be, to let escape him, and therefore have I made mention of the two mighty battles of Crescy and Azincourt; of the which verily I never do peruse an history but in mine extacy I do fling my bonnet up to the very sky window of my sanctum. Exceptionable heraldry although this conclusion would confessedly be, there is something notwithstanding in the manner in which brave Edward the Black Prince did assume the plumes which doth palliate the exaggeration or poetic license to which I have pleaded guilty. "The Black Prince," saith mine author, "having been victorious at the battle of Crescy, was presented with the helmet of John of Luxemburg, King of Bohemia, who was slain in that field. This helmet being ornamented with a plume of three ostrich feathers, and bearing the German motto, Ich dien (I serve), allusive to the said King, who served in person as an auxiliary, the Black Prince henceforward bore the feathers and motto, and they became the ensigns of the Prince of Wales.

⁷ King James introduced the Royal Unicorn of Scotland as a companion to the English Lion in supporting the shield of Great Britain.

THE ROYAL ARMORY.

A. D. 1483 to 1649. Now fierce rebellion, far and wide
Did shatter in its rage,
Sceptre and shield—the pomp and pride,
Of many a glorious age.

And one did seize the throne of kings,
A canting despot he;—
Who seem'd to scoff at regal things,
And regal pageantry.¹

And merrie England's joyous chant,
And festive revalrie,
Were mute before fanatic rant,
And huge hypocrisy.

On bloodshed dawn'd the tyrant's sun,
In darkness it went down;
And he and his were branded then,
As traitors none might own.

The royal ensigns shone again,
As brilliant and as brave;
From Castle, Fortlace, Barbican,
And Tower on the wave.

WHEN Nassau, in the pomp of war,
Rode proudly to Torbay,
And landing under freedom's star,
Drove dastard James away.

THE royal shield escutcheon'd bore,
The Dutchman's lion bold;
For he and Lady Mary wore
The people's crown of gold.

The Stewarts fell—the leaves do fall,
As withering on the stem,
They fly before each passing squall,
And so it was with them. R. R.

CHENEY (Sherland, in the Isle of Sheppey, founded by Ralph de Gaineto, one of the companions in arms of the Conqueror. Tradition records that Sir John Cheney, of Sherland, an eminent soldier under the banner of Henry of Richmond, at Bosworth, personally encountering King Richard, was felled to the ground by the monarch, had his crest struck off and his head laid bare; for some time, it is said, he remained stunned, but recovering, he cut the skull and horns off the hide of an ox which chanced to be near, and fixed them upon his head to supply the loss of the upper part of his helmet; he then returned to the field of battle, and did such signal service that Henry, on being proclaimed King, assigned Cheney for crest, the bull's horns, which his descendants still bear. Whatever may be the credence given to this story, certain it is that Sir John Cheney was most instrumental in the successful issue of Richmond's cause, and was created by the monarch, Baron Cheney, and made Knight of the Garter. The CHENEYS of Sherland were Lords Warden of the Cinque Ports). Az. six lions ramp. arg. a canton erm. Crest—A bull's scalp arg. Supporters—Two greyhounds. A traditional derivation of the family, recorded by Van Bussan, is, that "one Malcolm, the son of Friskin, assisted Malcolm, Prince of Scotland, afterwards Malcolm Canmore, to escape from Macbeth. Being hotly pursued, the Prince took shelter in a barn, where Malcolm concealed him by forking hay or straw over him; and from that circumstance, his posterity, who took the name of Cuningham, from a grant made to Malcolm, of the thanedom of Cuninghame, took a 'shake fork' for their Arms, with the Motto—Over fork over." The chief line of this ancient race, the CUNNINGHAMS of Kilmaurs, Earls of Glencairn, became extinct at the decease, in 1796, of John, fifteenth Earl of Glencairn, the friend and patron of Robert Burns, whose beautiful "Lament" has added new lustre to the name of Glencairn.
