THE RIGHT HONORABLE

WILLIAM PITT,

CHANCELLOR of his MAJESTY'S COURT of EXCHEQUER,

FIRST LORD of the TREASURY,

CONSTABLE of DOVER CASTLE, LORD WARDEN, KEEPER,

And ADMIRAL of the CINQUE PORTS,

HIGH STEWARD of the UNIVERSITY of CAMBRIDGE,

One of his MAJESTY'S MOST HONORABLE PRIVY COUNCIL,

&c. &c. &c.

SIR,

THE esteem and gratitude due to you from every individual, who has the salvation and prosperity of this kingdom at heart, will, I hope, plead my excuse for the liberty I take of offering this Volume of the History of your native County to your notice.

THE History of a County which stands foremost in the rank of all others, so deservedly proud of its pre-eminence in every respect; and so noted for its loyalty, not only in the annals of former times, but in the present crisis, when an exertion of it warms the breast of every honest man, cannot cannot fail to give both pleasure and entertainment to you, Sir, who are so materially connected with it, not only from its being honored with your birth, but from the great and important offices, which you are intrusted with, of Constable of Dover Castle, and Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports; trusts which have ever, from the early establishment of them, been conferred on persons of the highest rank, and those nearest in the favor and confidence of their Sovereign.

THIS County, Sir, has a still further claim to your notice, from the partiality you have shewn, and the preference you have given to it, before all others, in making it the seat of your residence; a predilection, which you have inherited from your illustrious father, the Great Earl of Chatham, who honored this County likewise with his residence for several years.

I MIGHT dwell much longer on so pleasing a subject, which I reluctantly quit, lest I should exceed the bounds of decency in trespassing longer on your time, so meritoriously devoted to the public welfare. If I have trespassed beyond those bounds in my address of this Volume to your patronage, you will, I hope, Sir, pardon the fervency of my zeal in thus publicly acknowledging the respect due to you, from

and most respectful humble servant,

EDWARD HASTED.

P R E F A C E.

THE PRESENT VOLUME concludes the History of the County of Kent, in which are included that of the Island of Thanet, the Towns and Ports of Dover, Sandwich, and the Corporate Town of Deal, with their correspondent jurisdictions; to which is added, a compleat History of the City of Canterbury, the Cathedral Church and Priory, and the Archbishopric, with the lives of the Archbishops, Priors, Deans, and other members belonging to them. Several years have elapsed since the publication of the former Volume of this History, the early part of which was employed in parochial perambulations, and enquiries, and no pains were spared to render them as copious, and as accurate as possible, and as such, they may be depended on, as far as information can be of this nature. Since which, peculiar events and unforeseen circumstances have unavoidably postponed the publication of the Volume to the present period. The original proposals were, to conclude this History in a much less size. This could only arise from inexperience in a work of this kind, otherwise the impossibility of it must have been easily foreseen, though some hopes of it were not entirely given up till a considerable part was printed, and yet there has been, even now, a difficulty, to compress the subjects treated on, in so concise a compass as to comprehend them in its present size; however, it is still hoped, that the undertaking will meet with that approbation as to give no other disappointment, than what the length of time may have occasioned to the public expectation.

It was intended to have added at the end of the volume a transcript of many of the instruments, grants, and deeds relating to the most curious and interesting matters mentioned in different parts of the history; but as this would have greatly increased the size, as well as the expence of the volume, it was given up, especially as they were in general to be met with, in the several offices of public record, and printed books of good authority, to which references are made throughout these volumes, and as such it would have been a matter of much inconvenience, and of very little, if of any, use to the Reader.

Whether the expectations of the public are answered in the perusal of this long, and laborious work, is not for the Editor to judge of; certainly no pains or expence have been spared in the prosecution of it; and if he has failed in his ambition to please, and inform his Readers, he solicits their pardon, and he hopes he merits it the more, as that ambition is all the reward he has, or ever shall, reap from it.

For their assistance, as well as information, collected for this volume he is indebted to several worthy friends of great respectability: to Mr. Pybus, M. P. for Dover, and one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, he has particular obligations, for his very liberal assistance and much esteemed friendship throughout it. To his liberal and highly respected friends, Mr. Boys of Sandwich, and Mr. Boteler of Eastry, both of them gentlemen well known to the learned societies of this kingdom, of which they are members, as well as to the republic of letters in general, he is greatly indebted not only for such information as has arisen from their personal knowledge and their curious searches into the antient and natural history of that part of the county, but for their repeated information obtained with no small pains and difficulty, from the owners of property, many of whose title deeds and family papers they gained permission to inspect for this purpose: the accuracy of which, together with their notes of whatever is worthy of notice and observation, in the several churches in their neighbourhood, cannot but gain the Reader's attention, and give him additional satisfaction, especially if he is acquainted with that part of the county.

To the Rev. Mr. Lyon of Dover, the Editor is much indebted for his communications relating to that town, its port, and castle, and the adjacent neighbourhood; of all that concerns the history and antiquities of which, he is a curious and indefatigable collector.

The Engravings in this volume are adapted to the subjects treated of in it. The expence of them has been by no means trivial, and the number of them is much the same as in the former Volumes.

The Map of Romney Marsh, and the several Hundreds and Jurisdictions within it, which was omitted in the third volume of this History, will be delivered to the Subscribers, as promised, with this book.

In the description of the Towns of Sandwich, and Deal, great use has been made of Mr. Boys's Collections for Sandwich, published a few years ago; a work of great merit and authenticity; every thing worthy of notice in which, that could be made use of, consistent with the general plan of this History, is inserted in it. The transcript indeed of the inscriptions on the monuments and gravestones in the churches of the Town of Sandwich, are only partially given here, being so very numerous, and many of them in memory of persons so little known, as to be by no means interesting, or worthy of the reader's attention.

The several places described in the antient record of Domesday, taken in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, have been almost all of them pretty accurately ascertained, and their descriptions placed under their present modern names. The difficulty of this appears very obvious, when the great difference is observed between the several names of them in that record, and the present ones. This arose principally from these names, which are either British or Saxon, being pronounced to the Norman scribes, who took account of them, from the mouths of the Saxon natives and inhabitants; and it is not unlikely, that the former wilfully mistook the orthography of them, through hatred to the latter, and that, perhaps, by the express direction of the Norman rulers themselves: flagrant instances of which are recorded in most of the antient writers of those times.

The parishes of Polton, and Denton, the former in the Hundred of Bewsborough, and the latter in that of Eastry, have been, through mistake, inserted in the Third Volume of this History, as in the Hundreds of Folkestone, and Kinghamford; the Reader, therefore, is requested to correct this mistake, which arose from false information, and to refer to that volume for the description of them.

The late Mr. Hammond, a Jurat of Dover, but better known by his office in the Customs there, employed much of his time for a number of years, in collecting information, and papers, relating to Dover and its adjoining neighbourhood, for the purpose of writing the History of it. How far he might have succeeded in it, had he put that purpose in execution, is not now the question; but, like many others, who have had the same pursuits, he continued collecting materials for it to the time of his death. However a grateful acknowledgment is due to his memory, for his communications from time to time, of whatever he judged might be of use to this History, and whatever could be depended on from them, for his Collections were not always to be credited, are inserted in the progress of it.

It may not be improper to take some notice here of the present volume's being raised in price from that of the former ones, which has not been adopted from any lucrative view, but has been wholly occasioned by the great increase of expences in the bringing of it forward for publication, of which the recent additional tax on paper is not a small part; though every other article has increased in proportion, as every individual must be sensible of, in the existing circumstances of the present unhappy times.

The Editor's engagements being now fulfilled with his Subscribers, and the public, by the conclusion of this History. He has little to add further than to acknowledge his obligations to them for their assistance, their patience and their candour during the tedious progress of it. He intreats them to reflect that more than forty years have been devoted to the prosecution of it, and that the only recompence is, the hope of deserving their commendations for so many years employed for their instruction and amusement, and for a private fortune, far from inconsiderable, expended, great part of it, in the pursuit and completing of a History, which he is now well convinced is too arduous for any one individual to undertake, with that credit which is due to himself and to the public in general.

The Engravings in this volume are adapted to the subjects treated of in it. The expence of them has been by no means trivial, and the number of them is much the same as in the former Volumes.

The Borsholder of the latter is chosen at the Priory Court, in Dover; but no lands in this parish pay any quit rent to that manor or to any other, excepting those of Upton and Westcourt.

THE MANOR OF SHEBBERTSWELL, alias UPTON WOOD, was given by K. Edmund, about the year 944, by the description of two plow lands in Sibertswald, to the monastery of St. Augustine, without the walls of the city of Canterbury (e), to which K. Ethelred afterwards, in 990, added two tenements of land in this parish likewise (f), all which continued in the possession of the Abbat and Convent in the time of the Conqueror; and on the taking of the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of that reign, the whole was thus entered under the general title of the lands of the church of St. Augustine.

In demesne there is 1 and a half, and 11 villeins, with 6 borderers having 2 carucates and an half. There is a church. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor it was worth 8 pounds; when he received it, 40 shillings, now 6 pounds, and yet it pays 8 pounds.

Soon after which, Scoland, then abbat of this monastery, granted the two plow lands above-mentioned to Hugo, the son of Fulbert, to hold by knight's service (g), and the yearly rent of

(g) Book of Knight's fees. In relation to this book, it is to be observed, that in the time of K. Henry III. and K. Edward I. by reason of the subdividing of knight's fees and other causes, great and perplexing doubts arose, so that even the Barons of the Exchequer, who were expert in these things, were often at a loss how to act. It was found troublesome to search upon frequent occasions in the annual rolls, and other records of the Exchequer at large. Wherefore, to make the trouble of searching more easy, the Barons and the King's Council ordered extracts to be made out of the 20s. together with all tythes arising from them (b).

After which, this estate came into the possession of Richard, natural son of K. John (i), between whom and the Abbat there was a suit before the Justices Itinerant at Rockester, in the year 1232, anno 17 Henry III. for this manor, containing one carucate of land, when Richard and his wife acknowledged it to belong to the Abbat and his church (k), in recompence for which the Abbat granted this land with its appurtenances to them and their heirs for ever, to hold at the yearly rent of 24s. instead of 20s. which they used to pay before (l); but at the latter end of that reign sir Walter de Wyngbam, knt., brother of Henry de Wyngbam, Bishop of London (m), held it of their heirs as mesne tenant, and died without issue male at the beginning of K. Edward I.'s reign, upon which John de Wyngbam, Precentor of the church of St. Paul in London, became possessed of it, for the term of his life, after which the inheritance came to the daughters and heirs of sir Walter above-mentioned, viz. Matilda and Joane; and to John, son and heir of another of his daughters and coheirs (n); and in the 17th year of that reign, Stephen de Pencestre, who then held this manor, as of the inheritance of the above-mentioned daughters and heirs of sir Walter de Wyngbam, by knight's service, &c. of the Abbat being of his barony, by the yearly rent of 24s. (between whom and the said heirs he was at that time mesne tenant) released and quit claimed to the Abbat and Convent all homage, fealty, and service due to him from the said heirs, together with the wardships, reliefs, marriages, &c. by which means the above-mentioned heirs became afterwards immediate tenants to the Abbat for this manor, but this family was entirely extinct here before the 20th year of K. Edward III. when on the aid then levied for making the Black Prince a knight, Peter de Guildborough, or, as he was more frequently written, Goldborough, was assessed for it as one quarter of a knight's fee, which Master John de Wyngbam before held in Sibertswold, of the Castle of Dover; however this name did not long continue here, for in the next reign of K. Richard II. a family named de Uppetone, was become possessed of it, whence it acquired the name of Upton Court.

They were succeeded by the Philipotts, descended from those of Gillingham in this county (o). They resided at Upton Court for several generations, and many of them lie buried in this church, though their inscriptions have been long since obliterated (p); but at length before K. Henry VII.'s reign, it was conveyed by sale to Guldeford, in which name it remained but a short time before it was alienated to William Boys, of Fredville, afterwards of Bonnington, esq. who died seized of it in 1508, having by his last will devised it to his grandson William, (son of his eldest son John,) who was afterwards of Fredville, and died seized of this manor anno 4 Edward VI, holding it of the King as of his castle of Dover by knight's service (q), in whose descendants it continued down to sir John Boys, of St. Gregories, knt. who in the latter end of Q. Elizabeth's reign, alienated this manor, then called Sibwold, alias Upton, to Mr. John Merri- the rolls of the Exchequer, and to be digested in an orderly manner in books. Those books were called the Books of Knight's fees, which were not, indeed, records properly speaking; yet they served for a direction, or rule to go by, (non sunt recorda sed habentur pro recordo, as the title to the books themselves tell us,) in determining the doubts which from time to time arose. Alexander de Swerford, of his own accord, as it seemeth, began this method when he compiled the Red Book, as well out of the annual rolls as other records then extant, and he was followed in that method by the compiler of the book, called Testa de Nevill, and the other books of knight's fees were in like manner compiled for the use of the barons and other officers in the king's business. See Madox's Baronies, p. 123.

(b) Regist. Mon. Sci. Aug. cart. 277. Dec. Script. col. Thorn, 1789. There was a pension of 20s. paid from this church of Shebbertswell, which, in the name of the tythes of this manor, the Abbat and Convent received yearly from the rector of it, which pension they reserved when they gave up the other pensions from their several churches in K. Henry III.'s time. Dec. Script. ibid. col. 1891.

(k) When feudal seignuries came to be vested in abbies, and houses of religion being aggregate bodies of men, or when their lands were charged with feudal or military services or duties, the Abbat was wont to stand in the place of his house, and he used to receive the homage of his men or homagial tenants; and the superior tenancy being lodged in him, he only, by reason of it, did homage for his barony or knight's fees, either to the crown, or to some other lord, to whom he owed it, though notwithstanding this, he both did and received it in the name of him and his house; but the nature of the thing required, that the act should be done by a single person: for the same reason the Abbat might be, and often was, a great lord, or baron, when the monks of his house were only plain men, the Abbat representing the whole house; when the convent was without a head, that was a deviation from the regular course, for the seignorage was for that space vested in the convent, and on the re-appointing of an Abbat or head became then re-vested in him. See Madox's Baronies, p. 209.

(l) Dec. Script. col. 1881. The above gift of K. Edmund was confirmed by K. Edward III. in his 38th year, by inspeximus, among the rest of the possessions of this monastery. Ibid. col. 2126.

In 1650, there was a rent of 2s. payable to the crown, for the tenement of Sibwold, alias Upton, and there were payable to the high court of the late monastery of St. Augustine, then in the hands of the crown, the rents of 11s. 10d. from the heirs of Mr. John Boys, for part of the manor—of 12s. from the heirs of Thomas Phillips for another part of it, and of 2s. 6d. from George Pilcher for lands in it, as was returned in the survey taken by the Commissioners of the late K. Charles I. in the Augmentation office.

(t) The manor extends over the greatest part of this parish, at least as much as lies within the Borough of Shebbertswell.

In 1763 Mr. Churchill's estate for sale was described as a capital mansion house, with gardens and appurtenances, at Shebbertswell, and the farms called Shebbertswell and Coxbill farms, in the same, with the glebe lands, impropriate tythes, and several other lands, tenements, and coppices, and the manor of Upton Wood in the same parish.

(u) The Earl of Guildford pays a yearly fee-farm rent to the crown of 12s. for part of the manor of Upton, and Mr. James Walker, of 2s. 6d. for another part of the manor.

The above house, a small one, neatly fitted up in the cottage style, is in the occupation of Mrs. Elizabeth Boteler; the grounds round it are disposed with much taste.

(v) There is a pedigree of a younger branch of this family settled in the adjoining parish of Barfriston in the heraldic visitation of this county, anno 1619. They bore for their arms—Or, 3 martlets sable, on a chief azure, a sun or. In the register of St. Paul's parish, in Canterbury, there are several entries of their marriages, by which it appears that this parish, containing 370 acres of land, was formerly part of the demesnes of the manor of Upton Court above-mentioned, and was held of the Abbat of St. Augustine, and passed in like sort as the manor itself into the family of Boys, from which it was in Q. Elizabeth's time alienated to Mr. John Merriweather, who afterwards resided here; by one of whose descendants the present mansion was built (v). In which family this estate continued, till at length it was carried by Anne, sole sister and heir of Mr. Richard Merriweather, who died unmarried in 1720, in marriage to Mr. John Lowndes, of Overton, in the county of Chester, who afterwards resided here, and dying in 1734, left an only daughter and heir, Sarah, who married Awnsham Churchill, of Henbury, esq; owner likewise of Upton manor, and nephew of Awnsham Churchill, the purchaser of that manor, as has been mentioned above (w). He died possessed of this mansion and estate in 1773, and his two sons and coheirs in gavelkind, William, and Henry Churchill, cl. in 1785, alienated the capital part of the mansion-house, with the gardens, pleasure grounds, and some meadows adjoining, to Mr. Thomas Baldock, and the remainder of the mansion-house, yards, barns, and buildings, together with the farm, to Mr. Thomas Claringbold, and he soon after alienated them to Mr. Robert Potter, who afterwards purchased the rest of the mansion, with the gardens, grounds, and meadows, of Mr. Thomas Baldock; so that he now possesses

In the Prerogative office, Canterbury, are the wills of Edward Merriweather, of this parish, gent. anno 1597, who was buried in this church; and of William, of this parish, gent. anno 1702, who was buried in the chancel of it, leaving by his wife, Sarah Matson, one son Richard, who died unmarried in 1720, et. 27; and three daughters, Mary, who died in 1716, et. 25, unmarried; Anne, who became her brother's heir, and married Mr. Lowndes; and Sarah, who died in 1703, aged 5 years only.

(w) Awnsham Churchill, who first purchased Upton manor, in this parish, was an eminent stationer, and M. P. for Dorchester, the son of William Churchill, of that place, esq. He left three sons, Awnsham above-mentioned, who died without issue in 1728, unmarried; John, who was his brother's heir; and Joshua, a colonel in the army, of Gusage All Saints. John was of Henbury in the co. of Dorset, esq; and left three sons, and a daughter, married to Joseph Damer, father of the present Earl of Dorchester; of the sons, William was of Henbury, and died in 1753, without issue, having married Magdalen, daughter and coheir of Archbishop Wake; Awnsham was the second son; and John was of Gusage All Saints. Awnsham became his elder brother's heir, and was of Henbury, esq; he died in 1773, having married Sarah, daughter and heir of Mr. Lowndes, of Shebbertswell, by whom he had issue two sons and a daughter, Mary, married to Major Edward Drax—of the sons, William married Lady Augusta, daughter of Earl Brook, and Henry is in holy orders.

THE MANOR OF WESTCOURT,

so called from its situation in the western part of this parish, so much of which it claims over, as is within the Borough of Nareton, comprehending Long Lane farm, was part of the ancient possessions of the Priory of St. Martin, in Dover, before the time of the Norman conquest, perhaps given to it by K. Wigbred, when he removed the priory, in the year 696, from the circuit of the Cattle down into the Town of Dover, to the old church of St. Martin there. Accordingly it is thus entered in the survey of Domesday, taken about the year 1080, being the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, under the general title of Terra Canoniceorum S. Martini de Doure, i. e. Lands of the Canons of St. Martin in Doure.

Afterwards the family of Boys became possessed of it, and William Boys, of Nonington, esq; by his last will, anno 3 Edward VI. devised to Edward his son his leases of Accolt and Three Barrowes, which he had obtained of my Lord of Canterbury, and his lease of six score acres of land, which he had obtained of the late Prior of Dover, called Westcourt Land, and also eight score acres of land, called Kesterton, which he took of my Lord of Canterbury. Sir John Boys, of St. Gregories, knt. by his will, anno 1612, devised to Edward, son of his brother Vincent Boys, his lease of Westcourt manor, at which time the Parkers resided here as tenants to for John Boys; which family of Parker bore for their arms—Ermine, 6 escallops gules, 3, 2, and 1; which coat was confirmed to John Parker, of Sybertswold, gent. by Robert Cooke, clar. Henry VIII*, when an act passing for the suppression of all religious houses, under the clear yearly value of 200l. and for giving them to the King, this priory was surrendered that same year, with all its lands and possessions, to the use of the King and his heirs for ever; but they did not remain long in the hands of the crown, for the King, by his indenture, Nov. the last, in his 29th year, granted this manor, with the scite of the priory, and all the lands and possessions late belonging to it, excepting the patronage of certain churches particularly mentioned in it, in exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors for ever; in which situation this manor still continues, his Grace the Archbishop being now entitled to the inheritance of it (y).

A Court Baron is held for this manor (z).

p. 248. Harleian Mss. No. 1470—59. In 1643 Robert Bargrave, esq; was lessee under the Archbishop for this manor, at the yearly rent of 12l. In 1680, John Bargrave, D. D. Prebendary of Canterbury, died possessed of the lease of it, and devised it to his wife Frances, who, at her death in 1686, gave it (then held of the Archbishop at the yearly rent of 19l.) to her nephew Robert Bargrave. In 1769, the lessee of this manor was William Hammond, of St. Alban's, esq; at the above yearly rent; the rack-rent of the farm is 130l. per annum. Suckling Wood, 18 acres, 10l. per annum. The manor consisting of at least of 1100 acres. His eldest son, William Hammond, of St. Alban's, and of Canterbury, esq; is the present lessee of it.

SHEBBERTSWELL.

PRESENT STATE OF SHEBBERTSWELL.

THIS parish lies close on the north side of the high Dover road, about two miles north-eastward from Barbam Downs. It contains within its bounds about 1700 acres of land. The church, with a small hamlet of houses close to it, stands at the eastern extremity of it, adjoining to Coldred; the ground here lying as high as any in these parts. Less than half a mile westward from the church, is Butter Street, and the Place House, and about as far southward from thence, the hamlet of Coxbill (a); all the last-mentioned part of this parish being a low unpleasant situation and much inclosed; but from Westcourt House, which stands at a small distance westward from the Place House, the ground again rises to an open uninclosed down, at the extremity of which is Three Barrow Down, so called from three large Roman tumuli, or barrows, on it. On this down the lines of intrenchment thrown up by the Romans, appear exceeding singular; for they are large, and the trenches deep and particularly adapted, and continued up to a great extent and variety of intrenchments, which possess all the hill between Denbill Terrace upon the edge of Barbam Downs, and the scite of the late house of Netherfole, under Snowdowne (b). On the northern side of the parish is Long Lane farm, belonging to Mr. Feſtor, of Dover (c); eastward of which there are several more lines of intrenchment, and on each side of them a large heap of Roman tumuli, or barrows.

These cover a considerable extent of ground, perhaps three acres, in the north-west part of this parish, about a quarter of a mile from the farm upon the downs.

(a) Coxbill farm belongs to Mr. Thomas King, of Dover, who owns likewise Belsfield, another smaller farm in this parish.

(b) Dr. Packe says, this was a place very proper for the station of Cæſar's main corps, as by its situation it commanded all the open conquered country behind him to the sea, where he had left his fleet, and the woody country before him, where the Britons harboured, and from thence frequently alarmed and annoyed his foragers.

(c) This estate was purchased by ſir Henry Furnace, bart. of John Gibbons, gent. and afterwards passed in like manner as the rest of the Waldersbare estate, to the late Frederick Viſcount Bolingbroke, on whose death, in 1787, it came to his son, the present Viſcount, who sold it to Mr. Feſtor, of Dover. It consists of 130 acres of land, let anno 10 Geo. II. at 50l. per annum, and pays quit-rent to the manor of Westcourt 17s. 9d. and to the manor of Soles 8s.

This burying-place was explored by the Rev. Mr. Fauſſett, of Ileppington, some years ago. The soil belongs to Butter Street farm. The soil of this parish is a cold clay upon a bed of chalk, stiff, and of unpleasant tillage; in some parts the clay is mixed with flints. It is more or less fertile as the layer is of greater or lesser thickness, and upon the whole it is rather an ungrateful soil. The surface of it partakes of the nature of the surrounding villages, uneven hill and dale in a continued succession.

Thomas Covell, of Herne, by his will proved in 1513, devised to Robert and Thomas, his sons, his place in this parish, called the South Place; and to William, his son, his place and garden in this parish, called the North Place; and desired to be buried in the church-yard of St. Andrew here (d).

CHARITIES.

THERE were given by a person or persons unknown, 11 acres of land, now pasture, situated near Longlane, adjoining to the road leading from Barbam Downs to Waldersbare, now used by the poor of this parish, and are of the annual value of about three guineas.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, is small, and consists of a nave and chancel. It has no tower, but there is one bell in it (e).

SHEBBERTSWELL.

This church was antiently appendant to the manor of Shebbertswell, and continued so till Henry de Wingham, Dean of St. Martin's, London, lord of this manor, in the year 1257, anno 42 Henry III. gave it with all its appurtenances to the Abbat and Convent of St. Radigund near Dover, for the maintenance of one Canon of the Blessed Virgin there, and of the poor resorting thither (f), upon which it became appropriated to that monastery, and continued, together with the advowson of the vicarage, part of the possessions of it, till its final dissolution in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when it came into the king's hands, who granted it, with all its possessions that same year, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in exchange (g) for other lands, who soon afterwards reconveyed them to the crown; but in this deed, among other exceptions, was that of all churches and advowsons of vicarages, by virtue of which the appropriation of the church of Shebbertswell, together with the advowson of the vicarage, remained part of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, as they do at this time, his Grace the Arch-

In the valuation of the spiritualities and temporalities of the diocese of Canterbury, anno 8 Richard II, 1384, this church was valued at 9l. 13s. 4d. (i). The vicarage is valued in the King's books at 6l. and the yearly tenths at 12s. (k)

It was united by Archbishop Whitgift, in 1584, to the adjoining one of Coldred, and Archbishop Sancroft, in 1680, again consolidated these vicarages, in which state they continue at this time; the collation being made by the Archbp to the vicarages of Shebbertswell and Coldred united (l).

The vicarage of Shebbertswell was augmented with the yearly sum of 20l. to be paid by the lessee of the great tythes, by Archbp Juxon, by indenture, anno 12 Charles II, and again confirmed by indenture, anno 28 Charles II (m). In 1588, there were 83 communicants here. In 1640, 80 communicants; and it was valued at 45l. It is now of the clear yearly certified value of 43l. 19s. 8d. (n)

(b) In 1639, Ralph Buffin, of Loose, gent. died possessed of this lease of the parsonage, which he devised to his wife Anne, who dying that year, gave it to her son William, but in 1643, Thomas Flood and Nathaniel Powel were tenants of it, at the yearly rent of 5l. 6s. 10d. at which time the Archbishop paid the vicar yearly the old accustomed pension of 2l. 6s.

At this time, Mr. Thomas Potter, of this parish, holds of the Archbishop three parts of the tythes of it, arising from 1300 acres of land, and pays 20l. yearly to the vicar. He likewise holds under the Archbishop 20 acres of glebe, for which he pays a proportion of a yearly reserved rent of five guineas. Mr. Thomas King holds about 100 acres of land at Coxhill, as lessee of the Archbishop; and James Gunman, esq; holds about 50 acres of woodland. These two pay likewise their parts of the reserved rent above-mentioned, the proportion allotted to Mr. Gunman being 20s.

IS the next parish eastward from Shebbertswell, being written in Domesday, Colret, and taking its name most probably from its cold and bleak situation, though it is supposed by some to have been so called, from Ceoldred, K. of Mercia, who is said to have come into this part of Kent, in the year 715, as will be further noticed below.

There are two boroughs in this parish, viz. the borough of Coldred, and the borough of Poppsball, which latter includes Singledge farm and hamlet, the Borsholder of which is chosen at the Court Leet of the hundred of Bewsborough.

THE MANOR OF COLDRED.

At the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the year 1080, being the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, this manor was part of the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Baieux and Earl of Kent, the Conqueror's half-brother; under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in that record.

There are 2 servants, and 4 acres of pasture. It was taxed at 2 sulings. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor it was worth 8 pounds, and afterwards 20 shillings, now 6 pounds. Molleue held it of K. Edward.*

Four years after the taking of this survey, the Bishop of Baieux was disgraced, and this manor, among the rest of his possessions, was confiscated to the crown, from whence it was soon afterwards granted to the family of Saye, in which it continued till the reign of K. Henry III, when Jeffry de Saye, with the consent of his son William, granted this manor, with its appurtenances, together with the sepulture of his body, to the Hospital of St. Mary, in Dover, afterwards called the Maison Dieu, then lately founded by that eminent man, Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, and Chief Justice of England (z), which gift was confirmed by K. Henry III, in his 15th year (a); after which, in the 14th year of the next reign of K. Edward I, that King granted a charter of free warren, a privilege of no small consequence in those early times, to the Master and Brethren of the Hospital and their successors, for this their manor of Coldred (b); and on the aid levied in the 20th year of K. Edward III, for making the Black Prince a knight, the Master of the Hospital was assessed for half a knight's fee in Coldred, being for this manor held of the barony of Say; after which it continued part of the revenues of the hospital, till the reign of K. Henry VIII, when on the suppression of it this manor came into the King's hands, where it did not stay long, for the King in his 29th year granted it, among other premises, to Thomas Culpeper, to hold in capite by knights service (c); but he did not possess it long, for it appears by the Escheat rolls, that it was again in the crown in the 34th year of that reign, in which, on April 26, the King granted it to sir John Gage, knight, comptroller of his household (d), as a reward for his services in Scotland, to hold in capite by knights service (e); but he exchanged a great part of it next year

Mr. Robert Finnis purchased the interest in this lease of Walton, of London, who had it devised to him, with other lands in this parish, which were freehold; but the will being attested by two persons only, the freehold part was recovered at law by a Mr. Forbes, the heir at law.

with the Archbishop of Canterbury for other premises, for the confirmation of which an act of parliament passed anno 35 Henry VIII (f), since which this estate, which still bore the name of the manor of Coldred, has continued parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time entitled to the inheritance of it (g).

There is no Court held for this manor.

The OTHER PART of the manor, which remained in the possession of sir John Gage, retained likewise the name of the manor of Coldred, and continued his property till the 38th year of K. Henry VIII, when he passed it away back again to the crown (b), where it staid till K. Edward VI, by his indenture dated the last day of March, in his 7th year, granted this manor of Coldred, with sundry other premises in this parish, late belonging to the Maison Dieu, in Dover, to Edward Lord Clinton and Saye, to hold at the yearly rent of 26s. 6½d. and he very soon afterwards passed it away by sale to Richard Monins, of Saltwood Castle, esq; (i) who died seised of it anno 3 Elizabeth (k).

His grandson, sir William Monins, of Waldershare, knight, was created a baronet in 1611, whose son, sir Edward Monins, bart. died seised of it in 1663, leaving his wife Elizabeth surviving, who held it at her death in 1703, after which his heirs and trustees joined in the sale of it, together with other manors and lands in this parish and neighbourhood, to sir Henry Furnese, afterwards of Waldershare, bart. who died possessed of it in 1712 (l), after which, his grand-

(l) His son, sir Robert, made a settlement of it in 1714, on his marriage with Arabella, daughter of Lewis, Lord and afterwards Earl of Rockingham, whom he survived, having had issue by her one son Henry, his successor in title and estates, and a daughter Catherine above-mentioned, married to Lord Rockingham. Sir Robert died in 1733, and sir Henry, his son, died abroad two years afterwards, under age, and unmarried; and this manor, by preceding wills and settlements, became vested in his three sisters as coheirs of his father in equal shares in coparcenary in tail general, with such remainders over as the same was limited to. After which Catherine, Countess of Rockingham, above-mentioned, one of the sisters, with her husband, suffered a recovery in 1736 of her undivided third part of this manor, and afterwards by a decree of chancery, anno 3 Geo. II, a writ of partition was awarded, by which this manor was wholly allotted to Catherine, Countess of Rockingham, which partition was confirmed by act of parliament passed the next year. In the schedule of the above writ of partition, this manor is thus described: Coldred Manor, with the capital messuage called Coldred Court, 285 acres at 90l. per annum, the quit-rents being 3l. per annum; the outgoings a free farm of 11. 5s. 6½d. per annum. daughter Catherine, in 1736, carried it in marriage to Lewis, Earl of Rockingham, who died without issue in 1745, leaving her surviving, who then became possessed of it again in her own right. She afterwards, in 1751, married Francis, Earl of Guildford, by whom she had no issue, and dying in 1766, bequeathed this manor, among the rest of her estates, to her surviving husband, who died possessed of it in 1790, leaving it by his last will to his eldest son and heir Frederick, Earl of Guildford and knight of the garter, since whose death in 1792, his eldest son the present Right Honourable George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, is now become the owner of it (m).

A Court Leet and Court Baron is held for this manor.

THE MANOR OF POPESHALL,

or Popshall, as it is commonly called, and sometimes erroneously, Copsall, is situated in the eastern extremity of this parish, adjoining to Waldersbare Park. It is written in the survey of Domesday, Popeselle; at the time of taking which, being the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, it was part of the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Baieux, under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in it.

On the Bishop of Baieux's disgrace, which happened about four years afterwards, the King, his brother, confiscated all his possessions, and having put the Castle of Dover under a new order of government, he assigned the lands above-mentioned, among others, to Hugh de Port, for his assistance under John de Fiennes, in the defence of it (n).

These lands, which together made up the barony of Port, were held of the King in capite by barony, the tenant of them being bound by his tenure to maintain a certain number of soldiers there from time to time, for the defence of that castle.

In which grant this manor of Popesball was estimated as one knight's fee (o), under which notion it was afterwards held of his descendants, (who assumed the name of St. John, and made their seat of Basing, in Hampshire, the chief or capital of their barony,) by the family of Orlanstone, of Orlanstone, in this county; for William de Orlanstone held it, as appears by an Escheat roll, marked with the number 86, in K. Henry III's reign, and left it to his son William de Orlanstone, who in the 51st year of that reign obtained a charter of free warren, among other liberties, for his manors of Orlanstone and Popesballe (p). He died anno 12 Edward I, seized of this manor, which held by ward and suit to the castle of Dover as above-mentioned, and was succeeded by his son, John de Orlanstone, who held it at his death, anno 2 Edward II; after which it descended down to his grandson, William de Orlanstone, who in the 20th year of K. Edward III. paid aid for one quarter of a knight's fee, which the heirs of John de Orlanstone held at North Popesball; and likewise for half a knight's fee in South Popesball, held by the same heirs, by which it appears that this was not the whole of Popesball, but was most probably that part above-mentioned, described in Domesday, as held of the Bishop of Baieux, by Osborn, son of Letard (q).

Popesball, granted to Hugh de Port, was at this time held as three different manors; viz. the manor of Popesball, held by William de Orlanstone, as the quarter of a knight's fee, viz. 150 acres of land, which the heirs of John de Orlanstone held at North Popesball.—The manor of Little, alias North Popesball, held by William and John Monyns, as one quarter of a knight's fee, viz. 100 acres of land,—and the manor of South Popesball, held by William de Orlanstone, as half a knight's fee, which the heirs of John de Orlanstone held in South Popesball, of John de St. John.

John

COLDRED.

John de Orlanstone, brother of William above-mentioned, died seised of this manor, anno 46 Edward III. (r) whose son of the same name alienated it to Horne, a branch of that family of this name seated at Hornes Place, in Aple-dore (s), in which name it continued, till James Horne, dying without issue in the 20th year of K. Henry VI, it descended to John Digge, of Barkam, whose ancestor of the same name had married Juliana, sister, and at length heir, of James Horne above-mentioned (t), and in his descendants it continued down to sir Dudley Diggs, of Ckilbam Castle, knt. who about the latter end of K. James I.'s reign, alienated it to sir William Monins, of Walderbare, bart. who was possessed of the remaining part of Popeball, probably the same as is described in the survey of Domesday as above-mentioned, as having been held by Ralph de Curbespine, which had been in the possession of his ancestors of the name of Monins, as far back as the beginning of K. Edw. III.'s reign (u). His son, sir Edward Monins, bart. died seised of the whole of this estate in 1663, leaving his wife Elizabeth surviving, who held it in jointure at her death in 1703, after which his heirs and trustees joined in the sale of it, together with other manors and lands in this parish and neighbourhood, to sir Henry Furnese, bart. who died in 1712 possessed of it, after which it descended at length to his grand-daughter Catherine, who carried it successively in marriage to her two husbands, Lewis, Earl of Rockingham, and Francis, Earl of Guildford (v); and dying in 1766 without heirs by either of her husbands, she by her last will devised it to the latter, who survived her, and at his death in 1790, gave it to his eldest son and heir Frederick, Earl of Guildford and knight of the garter, at whose decease, in 1792, his eldest son, the present Right Honourable George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, succeeded to it, and is the present owner of it (w).

There is a yearly fee-farm of 10s. 10½d. payable to the crown for this manor.

A Court Baron is held for it.

About 80 acres of the demesne lands are included in Walderbare Park.

Henry Malmains, of Walderbare, by his will, anno 1274, mentions the church of Popebale, among others, to which he had given legacies; and in a manuscript of Christ Church, Canterbury, mention is made, that the pension of the vicar of Coldred was assigned to the maintenance of one chaplain at Popeball; and in the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, the church of Coldrede and Popebale, belonging to Dover Priory, was valued at 13l. 6s. 8d. (x).

There was a portion of tythes arising from 76 acres of the manor of Popeball, which belonged to the Abbat of Langdon, relating to which there was a composition entered into, anno 1219, between him and the Prior of Dover, appropriator of the church of Coldred; this portion, anno 8 Richard II, was valued at 30s. (y) It is now the property of the Earl of Guildford, proprietor of Langdon Abbey.

A branch of the family of Finch was settled at Coldred, in the latter end of Q. Elizabeth's reign, of whom there is a pedigree in the Heraldic Visitation of the co. of Kent, 1619. They bore for their arms, the same as those of Eastwell, but with the chevron engrailed.

PRESENT STATE OF COLDRED.

The parish of Coldred lies on high ground, in an open uninclosed country, being esteemed ex-

(u) It appears by the Register of St. Radigund's Abbey, as well as by the Book of Knights fees, that this part of Popeball was held by a family who took their name from it, after which it was held by Robert de Berbam, and in the reign of K. Edward I, the heirs of Robert de Berbam answered for it as one quarter of a knight's fee, which they then held in North Popebale; but in the 20th year of K. Edward III, the family of Monins was in possession of it, when William and John Monyns paid aid for it as one quarter of a knight's fee, viz. the manor of Little alias North Popyball, containing 100 acres of land, as has been mentioned already above.

(v) This estate passed after sir Henry Furnese's death, in like manner as the manor of Coldred above-mentioned; and in the schedule, on the partition of these estates, anno 9 Geo. II, it is described thus: The manor of Popeball, with Popeball house, and 320 acres of land, of which 76 acres were tythe-free, let at 140l. per annum; quit-rents 14s. 3d. outgoings to the castle-guard of Dover 12s. 10½d.

ceedingly healthy (z); but being unfrequented it is but little known. The church is situated at the west end of it, next to Shebbertswell, having a hamlet, called Coldred Street, adjoining to it eastward; at the north east part of it, close to Waldersbare Park, which incloses a small part of this parish within its pales, is Popeball House, and south-eastward of that Newsole Farm, vulgarly called Mewsole, belonging to the Earl of Guildford (a).

South-eastward from whence, at about a quarter of a mile distance, at the extremity of the parish, next to Ewell, is the hamlet and farm of Singledge, the latter of which belongs to the Trustees of Dover Harbour. This parish contains about 1500 acres of land; the soil of it is much the same as that of Shebbertswell last described, and the face of it much the same, but it is somewhat more woody (b).

The inhabitants of Coldred, in the perambulation of their bounds, not only include great part of Waldersbare Park, but even claim to divide and go through the mansion-house; but this they were refused in their last walk, the parish of Waldersbare having been induced to dispute their right, so that the bounds between them remain still undecided.

(z) As an instance of it, out of 30 families in this parish, containing one with another about five in a family, as Mr. Pettit, the minister, here told a friend of Dr. Harris, in the year 1700, for seven years before he had buried only one person in his parish, and that several of the inhabitants here had exceeded the age of 100 years. See Harris's History of Kent, p. 81.

(a) The hamlet of Newsole was once accounted a manor, and belonged to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, and in the Register of it, taken about K. Richard II.'s reign, it is there entered, that Newsole had a court of itself, and that the Abbat had there certain liberties, it being holden by suit and service. In the 8th year of which reign, the temporalities of the Abbat here were valued at 106s. 2½d. Dec. Script. Thorn, col. 2163.

About the time of K. Edward I. there was a controversy between the Abbats of St. Augustine and Langdon, concerning certain lands and tenements within the tenantry of the former of Newsole, purchased in fee by the latter; but at the intreaty of the latter, and out of charity, the Abbat of St. Augustine granted all the said premises to the Abbat of Langdon for ever, to hold of him and his successors at the yearly rent of 48s. 5½d. and suit to the court of Newsole; and further, that the Abbat of Langdon should not in future purchase any lands and tenements in the tenantry of the Abbats and Convent of St. Augustine, without their licence. Dec. Script. fol. ibid. 1931; and in the folio of Christ Church MS. often referred to in the course of this history, mention is made of the Abbat of Langdon's chapel at Newsole, but there are no remains of a chapel existing, nor any tradition leading to it.

William Boys, of Nonington, died anno 1508, possessed of Newsoles farm, in Coldred, which he gave by his will to John his son. It afterwards became the property of Jenkin, one of whom sold it to Mr. Robert Furnese, bart. from whom it came down to the present Earl of Guildford.

BEWSBOROUGH HUNDRED.

There is no fair held in this parish, nor any parochial charities.

There is a fair intrenchment about this church of Coldred, containing about two acres, or something more, having a large mount in the north-east part of it. The tradition of the place is, that it was made by a King of this name, perhaps Coldred, K. of Mercia, who might come hither anno 715, to assist the Kentish men against Ina, King of the West Saxons, who had imposed a heavy tribute on them but a little time before, in the year 694, and probably held them in great subjection still. For the Saxon Chronicle tells us, that Ina and Coldred fought a battle at Wodnesbeorb in 715, which certainly was Woodnesborough, near Sandwich, not far from hence, where there is a very great mount thrown up (c).

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

COLDRED is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Pancrase, is very small and mean, consisting of only one isle and a chancel. It has one bell in it, but the steeple of it has been down for many years past (d).

Newsole pays a yearly see-farm rent of 12s. 11d.—a quit-rent of 16s. 8d. to Norborne Manor, and another to Linacre Court of 8s. 4d.

(b) Singledge Wood in this parish, contains about 20 acres, and belongs to Dover Harbour; Capel Hook Wood belonging to the Earl of Guildford, adjoining to it, and contains about 20 acres likewise; Wadnell Wood, (Wainholte in the old writings,) contains 17 acres, and belongs to the same Earl.

The boundaries of the two parishes of Waldersbare and Coldred pass through it, but whereabouts is a dispute; the two vicars taking the tythes of it equally by agreement.

(c) The church of Coldred stands on very high ground, on part of the site of the old fortification; the fosse on the north-west forming a boundary to the church-yard, being there of a very considerable depth, the highway separating the above part from the remainder on the south-east. In the middle of this road, some years since, a large well was discovered by the earth giving way; the area of the whole within the intrenchment contains something more than two acres; it probably may be of Roman original, whatever use might be made of it afterwards. Upon enlarging Waldersbare Park, between twenty and thirty years ago, and digging the ground deeper than common, for a plantation of about two acres of ground, a considerable quantity of urns, patæ, and other Roman utensils, of different coloured earths, evidently of that nation, burnt bones, &c. &c. were discovered throughout the whole of it. They were found north-east from the above fortification, at a little more than a quarter of a mile distance.

This land having always been in tillage, there were no inequalities remaining on the surface to point out any vestigia of this burial-place. See a plan of this fortification above, p. 1.

(d) There are two singular niches, such as are not seen in these parts, piercing the head wall of this church, at the west end, where it rises above the roof, each of which probably held a bell formerly, and though not used in common in this part of the country, are at this time frequent in the parts

COLDRED.

The church of Coldred was given to the Priory of St. Martin, in Dover, by Archbishop Stephen Langton, in the beginning of K. Henry II.'s reign, and was not long afterwards appropriated to it; and this donation and appropriation was confirmed by the Chapter of Christ Church, in Canterbury, with the deduction of a competent portion of six marcs to the vicar of it for his maintenance (e).

This church, in the 8th year of K. Richard II, was valued at 13l. 6s. 8d. (f) and in this state it continued till the dissolution of the above priory, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when an act passing for the suppression of all religious houses, under the clear yearly value of 200l. and for giving them to the King, this priory was surrendered that same year, with all its lands and possessions, to the use of the King and his heirs for ever; but they did not remain long in the hands of the crown, for the King granted this church and the advowson of the vicarage, with the scite and other possessions of the priory, by his indenture in his 29th year, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors for ever (g), part of whose possessions they remain at this time (h).

This vicarage, in the 8th year of K. Richard II; anno 1384, was valued at 4l. being the antient pension of six marcs, reserved and payable to the vicar for his maintenance, by the Prior of Dover, but on account of its smallness was not charged to the payment of the tenth (i).

It is valued in the King's books at 6l. 2s. 6d. and the yearly tenths at 12s. 3d. (k)

The antient yearly pension of 4l. is still paid by the Archbishop, as possessor of the Priory lands of Dover (l), to the vicar. In 1588, here were communicants 60, and it was valued at 20l. In 1640, here were communicants 60, and it was valued at 30l.

BEWSBOROUGH HUNDRED.

This vicarage was augmented with the yearly sum of 20l. to be paid by the lessee of the great tythes, by Archbp Juxon, anno 12 Charles II, and confirmed by another indenture, anno 28 of the same reign.

It is now of the clear yearly certified value of 35l. 7s. 9d. (m)

Archbishop Whitgift in 1584, united this vicarage and the adjoining one of Shebbertswell; and Archbishop Sancroft in 1680, again consolidated these vicarages, in which state they continue at this time (n).

There was a portion of tythes, as has been already mentioned, payable to the Abbat and Convent of Langdon, from certain lands of the manor of Popeshall (o); and the same Abbat, &c. was entitled to the small tythes of a teneement in this parish, which they held of the Prior and Convent of Cumbwell, concerning which there was an agreement between the first-mentioned Abbat and Convent and those of St. Martin's, Dover, the appropriators of this church, in the year 1227 (p). There are at this time 70 acres of land belonging to Popeshall, and 18½ acres to Newsole, tythe free, which seem to be the above portion of tythes. There is now another portion of tythes arising from 90 acres of land in this parish, payable to the lords of the manor of Temple Ewell adjoining (q).

CHURCH OF COLDRED.

James Aucher was Vicar of Coldred in 1582, and likewise of Shebbertswell, collated to both by the Archbishop of Canterbury, since which his successors have held these two vicarages together to the present time, of whom see a list above, page 8, under Shebbertswell. *The Rev. WHITFIELD,

WHITFIELD.

WHITFIELD, alias BEWSFIELD,

IS the next parish south-eastward from Coldred. It has been variously called by both these names, both which plainly imply its high and open situation; but the latter, written in Domesday, Bevesfel, is its proper name, that of Whitfield being much more modern, by which it is now however in general called.

The manor of Norborne claims paramount over great part of this parish.

THE MANOR OF BEWSFIELD.

OFFA, K. of Mercia, in the 1st year of his reign, anno 757, gave to Adelnoth, Abbat of St. Augustine's Monastery, near Canterbury, the land of two tenancies, which belonged to him in the place called Bevesfeld, with the privilege of feeding hogs and cattle in the royal wood, and other liberties mentioned in his charter for that purpose (s); after which this land continued in the possession of the monastery, till the time of taking the survey of Domesday, anno 1080, being the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, in which record it is thus entered under the general title of the land of the Church of St. Augustine:

Oidelard ten de hoc M. un solin & vocat Bevesfel. & ibi ht. 2. car. cu. 10. bord. Val. 6 lib.

Which is: Oidelard holds of this manor, (viz. Norborne,) one suling, and it is called Bevesfel, and there he has 2 carucates, with 10 borderers. It is worth 6 pounds.

After which, that part of the above land, which comprehended this manor of Bewsfeld, was held of the Abbat of St. Augustine by knights service, as half a knight's fee, by the eminent family of Badlesmere. Guncelin de Badlesmere held this manor as above-mentioned (t), and with his brother Ralph, accompanied K. Richard I. to the siege of Acon, in Palestine. Another Guncelin de Badlesmere held it in like manner in K. John's reign, and was a Justice Itinerant, as was his brother Giles, who was slain anno 43 Henry III. The former left issue one son, Bartholomew, and two daughters; Joane, married to John de Northwood, and another to John de Coningsby (u).

BEWSBOROUGH HUNDRED.

Before his death, he gave this manor in frank marriage, with this eldest daughter Joane, to fir John de Northwood, of Northwood, knt. (v), who was a man of great account in the reigns of K. Edw. I. and II, having served the office of sheriff in this county several times, and received summons to parliament among the barons of this realm. He died in the 14th year of the latter reign (w), and was succeeded in this manor by his grandson fir Roger de Northwood, son of his son fir John, who died in his life time; which fir Roger paid aid for it in the 20th year of K. Edward III, as half a knight's fee, which John de Northwood before held in Bewisfeld, of the Abbat of St. Augustine; after which his descendants continued in the possession of this manor for some length of time, and till it was at length alienated to Cbelesford, alias Chelford (x), from which name it again passed by sale about K. Henry VII.'s reign, to William Boys, of Fredville, esq; who died seised of it in 1508 (y), and by his last will gave it to his son John Boys, of Fredville, esq; whose descendant fir Edward Boys the elder, of Nonington, knt. afterwards possessed it, at which time the name of this manor seems to have dropt, and to have been blended in that of the adjoining one of Linacre Court, by which name it has ever since been called. He gave it to his second son Roger Boys, esq; (z) whose widow Anne, marrying Mr. John Pelter, intitled him to it during her life (a), and he enjoyed it in 1629; after her death it descended to her only son and heir Mr. Edward Boys, who about the year 1644, conveyed it by sale to Herbert Nowell, esq; and he in 1691 alienated it to John Day, who sold it about the year 1704 to Roger Laming, of Wye, and he in 1717 parted with it to Hercules Baker, of Deal, esq; (b) whose daughter Sarah carried it in marriage to Thomas Barrett, of Lee in Ickham, esq; whose third wife she was, and died without issue in 1734, as did Mr. Barrett in 1757, possessed of this manor, leaving it in jointure to his fourth wife Katherine, daughter, and at length sole heir of Humphry Pudner, esq; who died in 1785, on which it descended to their only son Thomas Barrett, now of Lee in Ickham, esq; who is the present possessor of it (c).

(y) Will, Prerog. off. Cant.

(z) He married Anne Rowe, re-married as above-mentioned to John Pelter, by whom he had Edward, and three daughters.

(b) He was a Captain in the Royal Navy, and served twice in parliament for the Town and Port of Hythe.

or Linacre Court, as it is usually called, in which the manor of Bewsfeld is now merged, lies in the south-west part of this parish, adjoining to Coldred and River, and was the other part of that land given to St. Augustine's Monastery, and described in Domesday as above-mentioned, being held by knights service of the Abbat, as half a knight's fee (d), by the family of Criol, one of whom, William de Criol, as appears by the Book of Knights fees in the Exchequer, held it as such in the reign of K. Edward I; but it did not long afterwards remain with them, for John de Malmains, of Hoo, held it in the next reign of K. Edward II; his son John left an only daughter and heir, who carried it in marriage to John Monyn, and he in her right paid aid for it in the 20th year of K. Edward III, as half a knight's fee, which the heirs of Nicholas Criol, of Sholdon, held at Lenacre of the said Abbat. After this, it continued but a small time in the name of Monyn, for in the 49th year of that reign, John Solley is entered in the register of the abbey, as holding this manor of the Abbat by knights service. How long it remained in his descendants I have not found, only that it was at length alienated to Cbelesford, alias Cbelford, from which name it passed, with the manor of Bewsfeld as above related, by sale, about K. Henry VII.'s reign, to William Boys, of Fredville, esq; who died possessed of both these manors in 1508 (e). His descendant sir Edward Boys the elder, of Nonington, knt, gave it to his second son Roger Boys, esq; at which time, though he was possessed of it likewise, I find no further mention of the manor of Bewsfeld, which at that time and afterwards seems to have been blended with this of Linacre, and to have been known by that name only. Roger Boys, esq; left his widow Anne surviving, who remarrying with Mr. John Pelter, intitled him to it during her life, after which it descended to her only son and heir Mr. Edward Boys, who about the year 1644 conveyed this manor by sale to Herbert Nowell, esq; since which it has passed in the like chain of owner-

(d) Philipott, p. 66, says, this manor gave both seat and surname to a family so called, and from whom Linacre, that composed the Latin grammar in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, was lineally extracted; but that this name was expired before the end of K. Edward III; but the records above quoted prove the contrary of this. See more of the Linacres, vol. ii. of this history, p. 556; vol. iii, p. 202.

A Court Baron is held for this manor.

A fee-farm rent of 3s. 4d. is paid yearly to the crown for it.

THE MANOR OF WHITFIELD, with THE MANOR OF LITTLE PISING, and THE LANDS OF PINHAM, was in the reign of K. Henry III. in the hands of the crown, in the 13th year of which, that eminent man, Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent and Chief Justice of England, had a grant of it, among others, to him and his heirs, with licence to give or assign it to whomever he would, either to a religious house or otherwise; not long after which, he appears to have settled this manor, with an estate in this parish, called Little Pising, with their appurtenances, on the hospital of St. Mary, in Dover, afterwards called the Maison Dieu, then lately founded by him; after which, in the 14th year of the next reign of K. Edward I, the King granted a charter of free warren to the Master and Brethren of this hospital, and their successors, for their demesne lands in Wbytsfeld and Coldred adjoining (f); and on the aid levied in the 20th year of K. Edward III, the Master of this hospital and the Abbat of St. Radigund, near Dover, answered for one knight's fee at Pysyng, of which the aforesaid Master held the third part of John Champayne, and he again of John de St. John, which third part seems to be the estate above-mentioned, called Little Pising. After which, this manor and estate continued part of the revenues of this hospital, till K. Henry VIII.'s reign, when on the suppression of it they came into the King's hands, where the fee of them staid (g), till K. Edward VI, by his indenture, in his 2d year, granted the manors of Whitfield and Little Pysyng, late belonging to the above hospital, to sir Thomas Heneage, knt. and William Lord Willoughby, to hold in capite by knights service (b). They seem to have sold their joint interest in them to James Hales, whose heirs possessed them at the latter end of the reign of Q. Elizabeth, after which I find no more of the manor of Whitfield, but that the manor of Little Pysing passed by sale into the family of Monins, of Waldersbare, in which it continued down to sir Edward Monins, bart. who died seized of it in 1663, leaving Elizabeth his wife, surviving, who held it in jointure at her death in 1703, after which his heirs and trustees joined in the sale of it, together with other lands at Pinbam, in this parish, to sir Henry Furnese, afterwards of Waldersbare, bart. who died possessed of it in 1712, after which his granddaughter Catherine, Countess of Rockingham, became possessed of this manor of Little Pysing in her own right, and of the lands at Pinbam, jointly with her two sisters, as coheirs of their father, in equal shares in coparcenary in tail general (i). She carried her interest in these estates in marriage to her husband Lewis, Earl of Rockingham, who with her in 1736, suffered a recovery of their third part of the lands at Pinbam, which on a partition of the Furnese estates between the three sisters, anno 9 Geo. II, were wholly allotted to the Countess of Rockingham (k), who survived her husband, and afterwards remarried with Francis, Earl of Guildford, and dying in 1766, without issue, devised this manor and lands above-mentioned, to the latter, who survived her. He died possessed of them in 1790, and was succeeded in them by his eldest son and heir Frederick, Earl of Guildford and knight of the garter, since whose death in 1792, his eldest son, the present Right Honourable George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, is become entitled to them, and remains the present possessor of them (l).

PRESENT STATE OF WHITFIELD.

THIS parish is very small, being very narrow from east to west. The village, called Whitfield Street, having the church in it, is situated at the south-east bounds, at a small distance from which, south-westward, is another hamlet, called

(i) See above, under Coldred, p. 9, (l), for a more particular account of the descent of the Furnese estates.

(k) In the schedule of these estates, annexed to the above writ of partition, the messuage at Pynam, in Whitfield, is said to consist of 63 acres, at the yearly rent of 26l. 10s. and the demesne lands of the manor of Pysing, of 200 acres, of the yearly value of 70l.

(m) This estate formerly belonged to Denerw, who gave it to Brett, of Spring Grove, and Robinson, who jointly conveyed it to Mr. Peter Feñor, of Dover, the present owner of it. This estate consists of 140 acres of land, and pays quitrent to the manor of Linacre.

(n) The hamlet of Pinbam consists of three small farms,

BEWSBOROUGH HUNDRED.

Lower Whitfield, where is a farm belonging to Peter Feñor, of Dover, esq; (m) and at the western bounds, in a dell, Hazling Wood. At the northern bounds is the hamlet of Pinbam (n).

This parish is situated on very high ground, in an open uninclosed country, the soil of which, though in general it is very light and chalky, yet there are some few stripes of deep ground more fertile than the rest.

It is a very unfrequented place, having nothing further worth notice in it.

There is no fair.

CHARITIES.

THERE was given by a person unknown, for the use of the poor not having relief, land, now vested in Redman Jones, of the annual produce of 10s.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, consists of a small nave and two chancels, having one bell in it, but there is no steeple (o).

This church was antiently appendant to the manor, and as such was given to St. Augustine's Abbey in 757, by K. Offa (p); after which the Abbat and Convent, in the year 1221, anno 6 Henry III, granted the right, which they had in this church, to John, then Abbat, and the Convent of Combwell (q), to hold in perpetual alms by fealty, and the yearly pension of 10s. but it was at the same time agreed, that the latter should not exact the tythes of sheaves, arising from 25 acres of Napusburst, which the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine had sometime granted to Thomas de Newsfole, but that the church of Bewesfield should enjoy the small tythes of the above lands for the ecclesiastical service, which it should perform to the tenants of St. Augustine, who inhabited there, and this, by the liberal concession of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine; at the time of making one of which being freehold, containing 70 acres, lies partly in Guston.—Another of the farms, larger than the above, of the rent of about 40l. per annum, belongs to Mr. Richard Wood, of Mongeham.

(o) Kilburne and Harris say, this church was dedicated to St. Peter; but Bacon, in his Liber Regis, says, it was dedicated to St. Mary.

The church is a wretched mean building. The roof is supported by a most uncouth pillar in the middle, so strangely as to prevent, I think, all description of it. There are no monuments in it, nor any thing further worthy notice.

which grant, in the chapter-house of that monastery, John the Abbat of Combwell made his oath of fealty to the true observance of it (r); upon which, though this church became appropriated to the Abbat and Convent of Combwell, yet there does not seem to have been a vicarage endowed in it till the year 1441, anno 20 Hen. VI, when a composition was made by Archbp Chicheley, between the Abbat and Convent, appropriators of this church, and William Gedyng, perpetual vicar of it, on account of the portion of the vicar, and the pensions belonging to this church (s). In which state this appropriation and vicarage continued till the final dissolution of the Priory of Combwell, for so it was then esteemed (t), in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when an act passing for the suppression of all such religious houses, under the clear yearly value of 200l. this priory was surrendered that year with all its lands and possessions, to the use of the King and his heirs for ever; but they did not remain long in the hands of the crown, for the King, by his indenture, in his 29th year, granted the site of the priory, with all its lands and possessions, in which this appropriation and advowson of the vicarage of Beausfield, alias Whitfield, was included, to Thomas Culpeper, esq; to hold in capite (u), who before the 34th of that reign passed them back again to the crown (v), whence they were immediately afterwards granted to sir John Gage, knt. comptroller of the King's household (w), to hold in like manner (x); and he next year exchanged them both, among other premises, with the Archbishop of Canterbury, for the confirmation of which an act passed anno 35 Henry VIII (y), since which they have continued parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time intitled to them (z).

This church has been for many years esteemed only as a curacy, to which the Archbishop nominates; for Henry Hannington, vicar of it, at the instance of Archbp Abbot, by deed, June

This church was valued, anno 8 Richard II, at 12l. and the vicarage at 4l. which on account of its smallness was not taxed to the tenth (b); the latter is valued in the King's books at 5l. 18s. 8d. WEST LANGDON.

THE next parish northward is West Langdon, which takes its name from the long down or ridge of hills on which it is situated; and to distinguish it from the adjoining parish of East Langdon, in the hundred of Corniloe (b). The manors of Norborne and East Langdon claim over some parts of this parish.

THE MANOR and ABBEY OF WEST LANGDON.

THE manor of West Langdon was antiently part of those lands which made up the barony of Averanches, alias Folkestone (i), of which it was antiently held by the service of one knight's fee and ward to the castle of Dover, by the family of Auberville, or De Albrincis, as they were written in Latin deeds, whose capital seat was at Westenhanger in this county (k); one of them, for William de Auberville, senior, resided there in K. Richard I.'s reign, and held this manor as above-mentioned; and having in the fourth

(l) See carta foundationis in Bod. Cat. Mss. Oxford, 191, 209; among which is likewise a register of this abbey, 226: and in the King's Remembrancer's office is a ledger book of this priory. Among the records in the Tower, are several relating to the Abbey of Langdon, of the years 16 Edw. II, 17 Edw. II, m. 27—19 Edw. II, m. 23—all pro Abbate de Langdon. In the 19th year of that reign, Edward, Earl of Chester, the King's eldest son, guardian of the kingdom of England, and the King's locum tenens in it, was here at Langdon, on August 3. Mary* and St. Thomas the Martyr of Canterbury, he gave this manor, among other lands, as an endowment to it in pure and perpetual alms, free from all secular service and payment (l), which foundation and gift was afterwards confirmed by Simon de Auberville, or Albrincis (m); and in the 30th year of K. Edward I, by for Nicholas de Criol, knt. great-grandson of the founder above-mentioned (n).

But whether the endowment of this abbey was not sufficient for its maintenance as such, so that being unable to support the expence and dignity of an abbat, it seems at times to have discontinued the election of one, and to have remained contented under the government of a prior, as the head of it, and frequently to have been under the estimation of a priory, (as appears by many deeds and instruments at different times relating to it,) in like manner as many other religious houses elsewhere, in which state it continued till the final dissolution of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when the abbat (for so he is styled in the instrument of surrender) and religious of this monastery, foreseeing the impending storm to crush them, and knowing themselves culpable of many irregularities, and being besides so artfully managed by the King's commissioners, that they desired to leave their profession and habit, and to give up their house and possessions to the King, as their founder and patron, on Nov. 13, that year, voluntarily surrendered both into his hands (o), which surrender was confirmed by the act passed it away by sale to Coke, and he devised it by will to his brother, Edward Coke, afterwards of Canterbury, esq., who died possessed of in 1773, and by his last will devised his farm and lands, called Langdon Abbey, with the manor of Langdon, and all lands, tythes, and appurtenances, bought by his brother as aforesaid, to Lewis Cage, junior, esq.; son of Lewis Cage, of Bersted, esq.; by Annette, his second daughter and coheir (t), and he is at this time the possessor of this estate.

Destram, constable of Dover Castle. See vol. iii. of this history, p. 323. Which marriage and inheritance brought this abbey from that time under the patrouage and protection of the family of Criol. Philipott, p. 210.

A Court Baron is held for this manor.

PRESENT STATE OF WEST LANGDON.

THIS parish is but small, containing about 600 acres; the church which is in ruins, with about twelve houses, forming the village, stand round a green of about an acre in compass, in the middle of the parish. About a quarter of a mile eastward from which are situated the ruins of the Abbey, and the house called the Abbey farm, which latter was modernized and new fronted with brick by the Thornbills; but it appears now to be again falling to decay.

It is situated, like the rest of the neighbouring parishes, mostly open and uninclosed, having no wood, and but little shelter within it; the soil is like that of the adjoining parish of Whitfield, chalky and but poor. It has nothing further worth notice in it. There are no parochial charities.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

WEST LANGDON is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which was dedicated to St. Mary, has been long in a ruined state. In 1660, sir Thomas Peyton, of Knolton, bart. had a design to repair it, for which purpose he provided a quantity of timber, but in the night the country people stole the whole of it away, and besides took away the pulpit, pews, &c. which had been left standing, out of the church; in which dilapidated

(t) Edward Coke, esq.; was descended of a younger branch of that family, seated at Heliam in the co. of Norfolk; he married Catherine, daughter of sir Thomas Hales, of Bekeborne, bart. by whom he had a son, who died a youth, and two daughters his coheirs, viz. Mary married to sir William Lynch, of Groves in this co. K. B. privy counsellor, and Envoy extraordinary to the Court of Turin, who died in 1785, without issue, leaving her surviving; and Annette, second daughter and coheir, who married Lewis Cage, of Bersted, esq.; above-mentioned, by whom she has had four sons and one daughter; of the former, Lewis the eldest son, is the present possessor of this situation it still continues, having never since been repaired (u).

The church of West Langdon was antiently appendant to the manor, and as such was of the patronage of the Abbat and Convent of West Langdon, to which it was appropriated, and continued so till the dissolution of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when this church, with the manor, among the rest of the possessions of the abbey, was granted anno 29 of that reign to the Archbishop, who, though he not long afterwards exchanged the manor again with the crown, retained this church, among others, in his possession, and it has continued ever since in the patronage of his successors, bis Grace the Archbishop being the present patron of it.

This church was valued anno 1384, 8 Rich. II, at 6l. 13s. 4d. (v) It is valued in the King's books at 6l. 13s. 4d. but since the dissolution of the abbey it has been esteemed only as a curacy, to which the Archbishop nominates, and is now of the clear yearly value of 16l.

The demesnes of the abbey are exempt from the payment of great tythes, but they are charged with the payment of 6l. yearly to the Curate.

This curacy has been augmented by the Governors of Q. Anne's bounty, with the money from which, a small farm of about 30l. per annum, lying in this parish, Guston, and Little Mongebam, was purchased for the augmentation of the vicarages of the parishes of West Langdon and Guston, by Mr. Quiteville, for the sum of 800 guineas, 40l. of which he himself was the donor of.

There are three acres of glebe, but no vicarage house.

CHURCH OF WEST LANGDON.

THE Rectors of the adjoining parish of East Langdon have been for a long time past successively nominated by the several Archbishops of Canterbury to this curacy, whose names may be seen under the description of that parish, Thomas Delaney, A. M. Rector of East Langdon, being the present Curate of West Langdon, nominated to it by bis Grace the Archbishop, in 1788.

manor. He married in 1791 one of the daughters of the late sir Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, bart. deceased. See more of the Cages, under Bersted, in vol. ii. of this history, p. 487.

(u) The ruins of the church consist of a nave and chancel tolerably entire, excepting the roof. In the chancel, is a grave-stone, now covered with rubbish, for sir Timothy Thornbill, knt. once owner of this abbey; and there is one in the nave, for Robert Dunkin, formerly tenant of the abbey; the date obliterated.

IS the next parish south-eastward from West Langdon, being written in Domesday, Gociston, and in other records both Gouceston and Gusleton.

There is a borsholder for the borough of Guston, chosen at the Court Leet of Dover Priory, which court claims paramount over that district (u).

The manor of Ripple claims likewise over part of this parish, as does the manor of East Langdon, both once belonging to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, who were possessed likewise of which they held as a Prebend in the church of St. Martin, in Dover; but it does not seem to have been given to them till after the taking of the survey of Domesday, in 1080 (x); for it is thus entered in that record, under the general title of the possessions of the Canons of St. Martin of Dover:

In Gocistone ten Ulric 1. jug. & ibi ht 2. villos & 1. bord. cu. 1. car. ad hanc tram ptin. 25. acr træ in Corneli bund. & ibi sunt 5. bord cu dim car. Int tot val 20. sol. T. R. E. 10. sol Elric tenuit in pbenda.

Which is: In Gocistone, Ulric holds 1 yoke, and there he has 2 villeins, and 1 borderer, with 1 carucate. To this land there belong 25 acres of land in Corneli hundred, and there are 5 borderers with half a carucate. In the whole it is worth 20 shillings. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor 10 shillings. Elric held it as a Prebend.

It was not long after this, that this Prebend was given to St. Augustine's Monastery, and in 1179, anno 24 Henry II, the Abbat procured a bull from the Pope to confirm it to them (y), and his successors afterwards obtained several others from the future Popes, for the like purpose (z).

In the 7th year of K. Edward II, anno 1313, in the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Jus-

(u) It appears by the Registers of St. Augustine's Abbey, that Guston was in part one of the tenantries of Ripple manor, and that a court of it might be held here.

(x) In the time of K. Edward the Confessor these Prebends were all held in common by the Canons; but they were divided into separate Prebends by the Bishop of Baieux.

Col. 2257.—In 1220 and 1229, they obtained two more bulls for the confirmation of this Prebend

Itin. the Abbat was summoned by quo warranto concerning certain liberties therein mentioned, which he claimed in this manor of Goncistone, among others, and view of frank pledge, and all belonging to it, and weif within the same, and the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and bis sociates, Justices Itinerant in this county; and he further pleaded, that K. Edward II, in his 6th year, had fully confirmed the same (a). After which, the rolls of the last Iter of J. de Berewick as aforesaid being inspected, it was found that all the liberties then claimed by allowance of that Iter, were allowed in it; upon which every part of the same was allowed by H. de Stanton and bis sociates as above-mentioned (b). After which, K. Edward III, by his charter of inspeximus in his 36th year, confirmed to the Abbat and Convent all their manors and possessions given by former Kings; and by another the several grants, liberties, and confirmations made by his predecessors, among which were those above-mentioned (c); and K. Henry VI. likewise confirmed the same (d).

In K. Richard II.'s reign, the Abbat's temporalities at Gonstone, in the receipt of the Chamberlain, were valued at 4l. 10s. 6d. (e) and the measurement of their lands was 109 acres of pasture (f). or Prebend of Guston, and that of Frith, did not remain long in the hands of the crown, for the King, by his indenture dated the last day of November, in his 29th year, granted them both, with the scite of the priory and other possessions late belonging to it, in exchange to the Archbp of Canterbury and his successors for ever, in which situation these manors both continue, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time entitled to the inheritance of them (g).

There are no Courts held for these manors, nor have they any manerial rights, the manor of Dover Priory claiming such rights over them.

PRESENT STATE OF GUSTON.

THIS small parish is very obscure, and but little known. It lies, as well as those last described, among the high range of hills which extend as far as the sea. From hence the country is alike, much open and uninclosed, and the land very chalky and poor, great part of it being much covered with furze and heath. The village, with the church, is situated in the northern part of it. There is nothing worth further notice in it.

CHARITIES.

THERE was given, by a person unknown, to the use of the poor of this parish, half an acre

(g) In 1643, for William Abetson, kn. was lessee of the manor of Guston, at the yearly rent of 12l. 4s. The family of Master, of East Langdon, were afterwards lessees of it, from whom the lease of it passed to the Furneses, at which time the manor and parsonage of Guston, late held in lease by the Masters of the Archbishop, were valued at 100l. per annum, the yearly rent paid to the Archbishop being 15l. and to the vicar 30s. From the Furneses their interest in this manor and parsonage passed in like manner as the rest of their leasehold estates in this county, to the Countess of Guildford, who, at her death in 1766, gave her interest in them to her second surviving husband, Francis, Earl of Guildford, whose eldest surviving grandson, George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, is now lessee of this manor and parsonage.

As to the manor of Frith; in 1643 Anne Craford, widow, was lessee of it on a beneficial lease from the Archbishop, at the yearly rent of 13l. 6s. 8d. as was Maurice Abbot, esq; of Frith Tythes, with other lands, at the yearly rent of 17l. 3s. 11d. Both these leases came afterwards into the Furnese family, whence they have passed in like manner as the lease of Guston above-mentioned, to the Right Hon. the Earl of Guildford, the present lessee of them.

(i) The following are the particulars of the will of Edward Prescott, of this parish, one of the same family, which are inserted to shew the bequests made to parish churches in conformity to the religion of former times. By his will, in 1482, he ordered his body to be buried in the churchyard of Guston, behind the high altar, and devised 4l. to the buying of a cup for the church—A cow to the maintenance of a taper of wax of 4lb. to burn perpetually before the sacrament at the high altar—A cow to the maintaining of a taper of wax of 4lb. to burn before the sepulchre of our of land, now vested in Samuel Prescott, of the annual value of three shillings (i).

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

GUSTON is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church, which is exempted from the Archdeacon, is dedicated to St. Martin, and consists of only one isle and a chancel, having neither tower nor steeple, nor any monument or thing worth notice in it.

This church was part of the antient possessions of the Priory of St. Martin, in Dover, to which it was appropriated by Edmund, Archbp of Canterbury, by his ordinance, dated at Wingham 5 Kal. Mart. in the year 1239, anno 24 Henry III, with a reserve of eight marks to the vicar for his portion, which was confirmed by Pope Gregory, in the 7th year of his pontificate (k), and in the 8th year of K. Richard II. It was valued at 10l. among the temporalities of the priory (l), on the dissolution of which, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, the appropriation of this church, with the advowson of the vicarage, came into the King's hands, and was granted as above-mentioned, with the other possessions of the priory, in the 29th year of the same reign, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in exchange, subject to the payment of 4l. yearly to the vicar of this parish (m); since which they have remained parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury,

The said kine and ewes to remain with the Wardens of this church for the intent above-mentioned, which if not performed, the Wardens of Bewesfeld should have the same for the same intent and purpose—To the Lord Prior of Dover, for the reparations of the monastery, 5l. 5s. 8d. with sundry other bequests to the religious of Dover Priory and the Maison Dieu, &c. &c.

his Grace the Archbishop being at this time possessed of them (n).

In the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, this church was valued at 10l. and the vicarage at 66s. 8d. and on account of the smallness of it was not taxed to the tenth (o). In 1588, here were 38 communicants. In 1640, here were 39.

It has long since been esteemed as a chapel. The Archbishop nominates a perpetual curate to it, who receives the antient pension of 4l. yearly from the Archbishop, who is entitled to the small tythes of this parish.

Archbishop Juxon, in conformity to the King's letters mandatory, augmented this curacy, by indenture July 10, anno 13 Charles II, with 10l. per annum, to be paid out of the great tythes, and the same was confirmed by indenture June 16, anno 27 of the same reign (p).

It was lately returned to be of the yearly value of 14l. (q), since which it has been augmented by the Governors of Q. Anne's bounty, in conjunction with the adjoining parish of West Langdon, of which an account has been given above, in the description of that vicarage.

THE MANOR OF OXNEY

was in early times in the possession of the family of Auberville, who held it as one knight's fee of Hamo de Crevequer, as of the manor of Folkestone (v). Sir William de Auberville, of Westenbanger, held this manor in K. Richard I.'s time, whose grandson of the same name left an only daughter and heir Joane, who marrying Nicholas de Criol, brought him this manor as part of his inheritance, and his descendant, sir John de Criol, in the 20th year of K. Edw. III. paid aid for it as one knight's fee, which Nicholas Criol and William Hakenor before held in Oxene of the barony of Folkestone. His son sir Nicholas de Criol, or Keriel, died seised of it in the 2d year of K. Richard II, and his son William Keriel alienated it to Tame, and in the 4th year of K. Henry IV. Robert Tame paid respective aid for it at the marriage of Blanch, that King's daughter. After this family was become extinct here, the Sedleys, of Southfleet, became possessed of it, in whom it continued down to John Sedley, of Southfleet, esq; one of the auditors of the Exchequer, in K. Henry VII.'s reign, who added much to the building of the Court Lodge here (w); in the younger branch of whose descendants, seated at Scadbury in that parish, this manor continued down to sir Charles Sedley, of Southfleet, knt. created a Baronet in 1702, whose grandson sir Charles Sedley, of Nutball in the county of Nottingham, bart. passed it away by sale to Rose Fuller, of the co. of Suffex, esq; who died possessed of it in 1777, without issue, and gave it by his last will to his nephew John Trayton Fuller, esq; who married his neice, and he is at this time the possessor of it (x).

There is no Court held for this manor.

PRESENT STATE OF OXNEY.

THIS small parish has nothing remarkable in it. The Court Lodge, called Oxney House, is the only one in the parish (y). The lands consist of open uninclosed corn fields, the soil of which is chalk.

There are no parochial charities (z).

It appears by Tberne's Chronicle, p. 1887, that the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine were possessed of lands in this parish.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

OXNEY is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which was dedicated to St. Nicholas, has been long since desecrated, though there are some remains still left of it (a).

This church was antiently part of the possessions of the family of Auberville, owners likewise of the manor as above-mentioned, one of whom, fir William de Auberville, senior, in K. Richard I.'s reign, having founded West Langdon Abbey in this neighbourhood, as has been already fully mentioned above (b), gave this church to it in pure and perpetual alms, as part of the endowment of it, which gift was afterwards confirmed by his descendant, Simon de Auberville, or Albrincis, and in the 30th year of K. Edward I. by Nicholas de Criok (c). After which, this church continued with the Abbey of Langdon, to which it was appropriated, till the dissolution of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, when it was, among the rest of the possessions of the abbey, granted in the 29th year of that reign to the Archbp of Canterbury, who not long afterwards exchanged the scite of the abbey and other possessions of it, among which was the advowson and appropriation of this church, with the crown, whence it was not long afterwards granted to the family of Sedley, owners of the manor of Oxney likewise, since which the tythes and other emoluments of this desecrated church have continued vested in the owners of the manor down to the present time, John Trayton Fuller, esq; being the present proprietor of them.

In a charge made in 1240, between the Elemosinary and the Chamberlain of St. Augustine's Abbey, of the revenues allotted to each of them, it was stipulated, inter alia, that the latter should pay yearly to the Abbat of Langdon, or to whomsoever for the time being should administer divine offices to the Abbat and Convent's tenants of Oxene, three bushels of barley (d).

(z) The poor of this parish are maintained with the poor of the adjoining parish of St. Margaret at Cliffe, this parish paying after the rate of 6d. in the pound, and the parish of St. Margaret one shilling, towards the relief of the poor of both parishes.

(a) The walls of it still remain; it has a roof, and is now made use of as a barn.

Walter, Archbp of Canterbury, granted licence, that the Canons of West Langdon should have liberty to serve in this church, among others, which thereupon became afterwards esteemed as a perpetual curacy (e).

The church of Oxene, appropriated to West Langdon Abbey, was valued, anno 1384, at 40s. (f). James Jeken, the tenant of the Court Lodge, is the present Rector, and receives the tythes of this parish.

ST. MARGARET AT CLIFFE,

OR St. Margaret's near Dover, as it is sometimes called, to distinguish it from another parish of this name near Rockester, and written in the survey of Domesday, S. Margarita, lies eastward from Gufson, a small part of the parish of West Cliffe only intervening.

A borsholder for this parish is chosen at the Court Leet of Dover Priory.

THE MANOR OF ST MARGARET AT CLIFFE, alias PALMERS, alias EAST COURT, was formerly the estate of the family of Eaton, in which it continued for some length of time, and till Peter Eaton, gent. in 1642, anno 17 Charles I, at length alienated it to Bartholomew Planker, merchant, of Dover, who at his death deviled it, after the death of his widow, to the children of John Francis his kinsman. William Francis was possessed of it in 1679, and was succeeded in it by Mr. John Francis. But in the year 1710, it was become the property of William Denne, gent. from whom it again passed into the name of Francis; for in 1717 William Francis alienated this manor to William Tindale, A. M. of Trinity Hall, in Cambridge, who passed it away to John Chitty, of St. Margaret's, and he conveyed it by sale in 1730, to Mr. Richard Solly, of Sandwich, gent. whose grandson Richard Heaton Solly, of St. Margaret's, esq; is the present owner of it.

A Court Baron is held for this manor (g).

THE MANOR OF REACH,

vulgarly called Ridge, the mansion of which is situated in the southern part of this parish, was part of the antient possessions of the Priory yearly payment to the curate of this church referred to it in K. Henry VIII.'s grant of the scite and lands of Langdon Abbey, which shews the church was not at that time desecrated.

These 100 acres of land were of the Prebends, as is testified. In the whole it is worth 8 pounds. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 7 pounds.*

In the inland of St. Martin there remain 7 borderers, with half a carucate, paying 60 shillings towards the shoes of the Canons. St. Margaret ^{There is one such man.} pays 8 pounds.

ST. MARGARET AT CLIFFE.

THOSE PARTS in the above description in Cornelai Hundred, seem to refer to the districts of Oxney, and Kingsdowne, northward of this parish, and the remainder wholly to St. Margaret at Cliffe, in this hundred of Bewsborough, which continued afterwards part of the possessions of the Priory of St. Martin, till the suppression of it, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when it was dissolved as being under the clear yearly value of 200l. and given up, together with all its lands and possessions, to the use of the King and his heirs for ever; but this manor, with the advowson of the church of St. Margaret appendant, did not continue long in the King's hands, for by his indenture, November the last, in his 29th year, he granted them, with the site of the priory and other possessions late belonging to it, in exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors for ever, in which state they continue at this time, his Grace the Archbishop being now entitled to them (b).

A Court Baron is held for this manor.

PRESENT STATE OF ST. MARGARET AT CLIFFE.

THIS parish lies on very high ground, on the chalk cliffs, from whence it takes the addition to its name, adjoining the sea shore eastward; it is situated in a right angle across the channel to Calais, having the South Foreland at the southern extremity of it. The village, with the church, is situated about a quarter of a mile from the edge of the cliff, which is here of considerable height from the sea shore; on which, below high-water mark, is a spring of fresh water, which issues plentifully on the retreat of the tide (i). Here is a small bay, where one Thomas Laurence, in Abp Morton's time, made a small pier, or jetty, to defend the fishing craft. In and near this bay are caught the finest flavored lobsters of any part of Britain; they are but of a small size, and of a remarkable dark red colour. The parish, like those before described, is partly inclosed, and partly an open uninclused range of arable and pasture; the soil is mostly chalk, and for the greatest part not very fertile. There is no coppice wood in it. The road from Dover to Deal runs along the western bounds of this parish.

There is a fair held here on July 30, by the

(b) In 1643, Robert Bargrave, esq; and others, were lessees of the manor of Reach, under the Archbishop, at the yearly rent of 8l. On the abolition of episcopacy soon after this, this estate was sold by the state to Alderman Philips, of London, in fee. But at the restoration of K. Charles II, anno 1660, it reverted again to the archbishoprick, and various tenants afterwards possessed it as lessees under the Archbishop, till the lease came into the possession of Richard Beckford, and he by deed empowered his brother, Alderman William Beckford to alienate his interest in it to George Leith, of alteration of the stile, formerly on the day of St. Justin and Rufinus, the 19th, for breeches, gloves, ribbons, and toys.

Simon, son of Symon Monyn, resided here in K. Edward IV.'s time, and was, at his death anno 12 of that reign, possessed of several lands and tenements in this parish, as appears by his will proved that year, by which he ordered his body to be buried in the chancel of St. John Baptist, in this church.

Robert Croydon was, in Q. Elizabeth's reign, seized of a mansion in this parish, called Bintons, which, by his will proved anno 1585, he gave to Edward his son.

The family of Upton, at the latter end of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, was possessed of the manor of Wanstou, now called Wanstou Farm, in the southern part of this parish, which continued in it till K. Charles II.'s reign, when Abraham, Robert, and Valentine Upton, joined in the sale of it to Richard Gibbon, of Dover, gent. who at his death in 1679 gave it by will to his grandson Richard Gibbon, in tail general, after which it came by purchase into the York family, in which it continues at this time.

The family of Fenys, or Finnis, as they were afterwards spelt, resided here in K. Edw. VI.'s reign, and were possessed of several lands and tenements in it, as appear by their wills in the Prerogative office, Canterbury, in a continued series, down to Edmund Finnis, of this parish, whose will was proved anno 1710.

A branch of the family of Fincux likewise resided here, from the reign of K. James I, for several descents afterwards, as appears by their wills proved in the same office.

BOTANY.

Cribmum maritimum, samphire; grows plentifully on the perpendicular chalk cliffs here and along them as far as Dover (k).

Lycnis major rotiflora Dubrensis perennis, the great night-flowering Dover campion; found all along on the same. (l)

Crambe maritima, sea colewort; found in this parish (m).

Calendula officinalis, garden marigold; found on the beach here plentifully (n).

Deal, esq; who parted with it lately to Thomas Hatton, of Buckland, who is the present lessee of it.

It consists at present of a capital messuage, &c. and 350 acres of land, 120 of which are inclosed pasture, 100 acre arable, and the rest down land, all within a ring fence.

(i) There are several springs of fresh water in the rocks between this place and Dover, which keep rising when the tide is off.

CHARITIES.

ST. MARGARET AT CLIFFE.

BEWSBOROUGH HUNDRED.

CHARITIES.

THERE were given by a person unknown, for the use of the poor, and chiefly to widows who do not receive alms, three roods of land, now of the annual produce of 1l. 4s. and by another person unknown, for the like use, two roods of land, now of the annual produce of 10s.

There are five roods of land given for tolling the bell at night, called Curfew Land, and there are 50 acres of fine land in two pieces, said to have been given to the poor, and supposed to have been ingrossed by those who cultivate the land.

There is given to the Clerk two acres of land, and for the use of the sacrament one acre, called Sacrament Acre, now of the yearly value of 4s. 6d. and in the occupation of William Barville, husbandman.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church, which is dedicated to St. Margaret, is exempt from the Archdeacon. It is large and strongly built, having a tower steeple at the west end, and is adorned on the outside, as well as within, with many marks of antiquity (o).

This church was antiently an appendage to the manor, and as such was part of the possessions of the Priory of St. Martin, in Dover (p), to which it was very early appropriated, and a vicarage was endowed in it by an agreement made in 1296, between the vicar of it and the sacrist of the priory (q). In which state it continued till the dissolution of the Priory, anno 27 Henry VIII, when it came into the King's hands, and was afterwards granted by him, in his 29th year, as an appendage to the manor, to the Archbishop of

(o) The church is preferable to most of the country churches in this part of the county. The roof is supported by two rows of pillars, and semicircular arches. The chancel is lofty and handsome, being separated from the body of the church by a beautiful semicircular arch. The arch over the west door is ornamented much, after the Saxon manner, and has several rude heads on it. There are several small arches and niches in the side walls of the nave, above the roofs of the two side isles, the nave or middle isle rising above them in the nature of a choir. The tower, which is square, had formerly four small turrets, one at each corner; but about the year 1711, that turret on the west side, with a part of the tower fell down, and the tower having never been repaired, the other three turrets were probably taken down to make the whole appear more uniform.

On some of the arches of the two isles are the arms of Savage. The chancel was handfomely waincotted and carved several years since by the then lessee of the great tythes, Mr. Richard Crook, of Bekesborne.

Canterbury and his successors in exchange, as has been already mentioned above, with a reservation of 40s. yearly pension to the vicar of this church (r), since which it has remained parcel of the possessions of that see, his Grace the Archbishop being now possessed of the appropriation with the advowson of the vicarage of this church (s).

In the year 1384, anno 8 Richard II, this church was valued at 16l. (t) The vicarage is valued in the King's books at 6l. 10s. per annum (u). In 1588, here were 88 communicants, and it was valued at 20l. per annum. In 1661, Archbishop Juxon, in conformity to the King's letters mandatory, augmented this vicarage, by indenture dated June 22d that year, with 26l. per annum, which was confirmed by indenture July 21, anno 28 Charles II. It is now a discharged living, of about the clear yearly value of 46l. (v)

The vicarage-house was burnt down in 1721, and has never since been rebuilt.

WEST CLIFFE

IS so called from its situation westward of the adjoining parish of St. Margaret at Cliffe, last described, and to distinguish it from that of Cliff at Hoo in this county, near Rochester.

THE MANOR OF WEST CLIFFE, alias WALLETT'S COURT, was, in the time of the Conqueror, part of those possessions with which he enriched his half-brother Odo, Bishop of Baieux and Earl of Kent, under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in the survey of Domesday, taken in the 15th year of that reign:

Hugo (de Montfort) ten de epo Westclive. p. 2. solins se defd. Tra. e. In dno. e. 1. car. & 17. villi knt. 2. car. T. R. E. valeb. 8. lib. Qdo recep. 6. lib. modo. 8. lib. De hoc M ten hugo de Montfort. 2. molin de 28 solid. Edricus tenuit de rege. E.

Edward the Confessor it was worth 8 pounds, when he received it 6 pounds, now 8 pounds. Of this manor Hugo de Montfort holds 2 mills of 28 shillings. Edric held it of K. Edward.*

Four years after the taking of the above survey, the Bishop was disgraced, and all his possessions were confiscated to the crown, upon which this manor was granted to Hamon de Crevequer, a man of much note at that time, being one of those knights who were joined with John de Fiennes, for the better defence of Dover Castle; which the King had then put into a new form of government (d). Of the Crevequers, who held this manor of the King in capite, this manor was again held by the eminent family of Criol, who continued in the possession of it in the reign of *K. year of which, John de Criol, younger son of Bertram, died seised of it, leaving Bertram his son and heir (e), and he alienated it to sir Gilbert Packe, knt. who then held it as one knight's fee of the fee of Hamon de Crevequer, who held it again of the King in capite (f). He soon afterwards conveyed it to K. Edward I. and Eleanor his Queen, for the use of the latter, who died seised of it in the 19th year of that reign. How long it afterwards continued in the crown, I have not found; but in the 20th year of K. Edward III. Gawin Corder paid aid for it as one fee, which the Queen of England, formerly consort to the King, held in Westclyve, of the Honor of Perch, viz. of the Constabularie of the Castle of Dover.

Sir Gawin Corder, as it appears, possessed this manor only for the term of his life, for the next year the King granted the reversion of it to Reginald de Cobham for his laudable services, especially in France, to hold to him in tail general (g). He was son of John de Cobham, of Cobham, in this county, by his second wife Joane, daughter of Hugh de Nevill (b), and he died seised of this manor in the 35th year of that reign (i), leaving issue Reginald his son, and Joane his wife, surviving, who possessed it at her death, in the 43d year of that reign (k), and was succeeded in it by Reginald her son above-mentioned, who was of Sterborough Castle, whence all his descendants were called of that place. He had summons to Parliament among the Barons of this realm, and died in the 4th year of K. Henry IV. being then seised of this manor (l), leaving Reginald his son, and Alianore his second wife, surviving, who had this manor assigned to her in dower (m).

Reginald de Cobham, the son, possessed this manor on her death, and was succeeded in it in the 24th year of K. Henry VI. by his eldest surviving son sir Thomas Cobham, knt. who died seised of this manor held in capite, in the 11th year of *K. Edward I. (v) After this name was extinct here, this manor passed into the name of Brockman, and from thence into that of Toke, a family who seem before this to have been for some time resident in Westcliffe (w). John Toke, of Bere, a descendant of the purchaser of this manor in the fourth generation, lived in the reigns of K. Henry V. and VI, and by Joice, daughter of sr Thomas Hoo, knt. had three sons, of whom, Thomas the eldest possessed this manor of Bere, as will be further mentioned below. Ralph, the second, was ancestor of the Tokes of the counties of Cambridge, Dorset, and Hertford; and John left an only daughter and heir, married to Eyre, of the co. of Derby. Thomas Toke, esq; the eldest son, resided here, and was twice married, first to Joane, daughter of William Goldwell, of Godington in Great Chart, esq; whose heir general she at length was; and secondly, to Cecilia, daughter of sr Robert Chicheley, knt. niece to the Archbishop, by whom he had no issue. By his first wife he had three sons, Ralph, who succeeded him in Another daughter married Randolph, whose daughter married Dr. Smith, of Maidstone, by whom she had a daughter, married to Otway, and Deborah married Bradford; the other children died without issue.

In 1718, he was, by patent, dated May 1 that year, created Lord Aylmer, Baron of Balrath in the co. of Meath, in Ireland, and in 1720 Rear-Admiral of Great Britain. He married Sarah, daughter of Edward Ellis, of London, esq; by whom he had issue only one son Henry, and two daughters; he died on August 18, 1720, and was succeeded by his only son Henry, Lord Aylmer, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Priestman, esq; and by her, who died in 1750, he had four sons: Matthew, an officer in the Army, who died before him in 1748—Henry, who succeeded him in title, and was a Captain in the Navy—Philip, who died before him, and John, in holy orders, to whom he devised his estate at Westcliffe.

See vol. iii. of this history, p. 247.

The Tookes, of Bere, bore for their arms—Parted per chevron, sable and argent, 3 griffins heads erased and counterchanged. Four years after the taking of the above survey, the Bishop was disgraced, and all his possessions confiscated to the crown.

Soon after which, this manor was granted to Jeffry de Peverel, for his assistance with John de Fiennes, in his defence of Dover Castle, each having with others sufficient lands assigned for that purpose. Those granted to Jeffry de Peverel amounted to 14 knights fees and a quarter, among which this manor was included, and together made up the barony of Peverel, as it was then called, being held of the King in capite by barony (b). Of the heirs of Jeffery de Peverel, this manor was again held by the family of Cramaville as one knight's fee, and it appears by the Escheat Rolls, that Henry de Cramaville held it in capite at his death, in the 54th year of K. PRESENT STATE OF WEST CLIFFE.

THIS parish lies on high ground, being partly inclosed, and partly open arable and pasture downs; it extends to the high chalk cliffs on the sea shore, and the South Foreland on them, where the light-house stands. The road from Dover to Deal leads through it northward. Its greatest extent is from north to south, in the middle of which stands the church, and the village adjoining to it. It is, as well as the adjoining parishes, exceeding healthy; the soil mostly chalk, but not unfertile; the height and continuance of the hills, and the depth and spacious breadth of the vallies, added to a romantic wildness which appears throughout this part of the country, renders it exceedingly pleasant; and the variety of prospects seen from it are very beautiful.

There are no parochial charities.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

There is a pedigree of this family in the Heraldic Visitation of Kent, anno 1619. They bore for their arms—Argent, on a cross engrailed gules, 5 fleurs de lis of the field; quartering Rolfe, Preston, and Wenlock.

The discharging of the trust in Mr. Matson's will being attended with many difficulties, his affairs were put into the Court of Chancery, and a decree was made, that the Commissioners of Dover Harbour should have Diggs Place, Soltone, Singledge, and other lands, to make up the 150l. per annum, they paying 40l. a year out of these estates to the poor relations of his family, as long as any such of the name should remain according to the devise in his will.

After which, Prior Richard Oxinden, in the year 1327, anno 2 Edward III, with the consent of his convent, assigned and appropriated the parsonage of this church to the Almshouse of the Priory for ever, for the sustaining of the priests, and the maintenance of the chapel and chamber of the chantry, erected and founded there by his predecessor, Prior Henry de Estry, in the year 1319, anno 11 Edward II. (m) In which situation it remained till the dissolution of the priory, in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII., when it was surrendered, among the other possessions of the monastery, into the King's hands, where this appropriation and the advowson of the vicarage did not remain long; for the King, by his Dotation Charter, dated May 23, in his 33d year, settled them both, among other lands, on his new erected Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, part of whose possessions they remain at this time.

In 1384, anno 8 Richard II, the church was valued, as of the Almshouse of the Priory, at 18l. (n)

On the sequestration of the possessions of Deans and Chapters, after the death of K. Charles I., the parsonage of Westcliffe was surveyed in 1650, by order of the state, when it was returned, that the messuage or tenement, called the Parsonage House, with a large barn and yard, with the parsonage close, containing three acres, and a piece of ground lying in Westcliffe common field, containing four acres, together with the tythes of corn and grass, and all other small tythes, all which were within the parish, were of the improved yearly value of 62l.

The vicarage of Westcliffe is not valued in the King's Books. In 1640 it was valued at 10l. communicants 20. The Dean and Chapter pay the sum of 7s. 6d. procurations for this church.

Maurice Callan, Curate, by his last will proved 1466, ordered his body to be buried in this church, and devised, that immediately after his decease, his executors should pave the body of this church with paving tile.

Of this manor, Hugo de Montfort holds 17 acres of land, and one denne and an half, which is valued at 7 shillings.

And a little further, under the same possessions:

The same Ralph (de Curbespine) holds Ewelle. It was taxed at 3 sulings. The arable land is In demesne there is one carucate, and 5 villeins, with 4 borderers, having 2 carucates. There is wood for the pannage of 10 bogs. Of this manor, a certain Knight holds 1 suling of Ralph, and there he has 1 carucate, with 3 borderers.

The whole manor, in the time of K. Edward the Confessor, was worth 12 pounds, and afterwards 20 shillings, now 40 shillings, and yet what Ralph has pays 4 pounds. Hugo de Montfort has the chief seat of the manor, and there are 5 mills and an half of 6 pounds. Molleue held it of K. Edward.

And again, in the same survey, under the title of the land of Hugh de Montfort, is the following entry:

In Estrea Lest. In Beusberge Hund.

Ipse Hugo de Montfort ten Etwelle. Molleue tenuit. p. 3. solins se defd. & mo. p. 1. solin.

Which is: In Estry Latb, in Beusberge Hundred. Hugo de Montfort himself holds Etwelle. Molleue held it. It was taxed at 3 sulings; and now for 1 suling.

The arable land is 1 carucate, and there it is in demesne, and 19 borderers, having 1 carucate. There is a church, and 4 mills and an half of 4 pounds and 17 shillings and 4 pence, and 4 acres of meadow. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 11 pounds, and afterwards 4 pounds; now 8 pounds.

Four years after the taking of the above survey, the Bishop was disgraced, and all his possessions were confiscated to the crown, as were those above-mentioned of Hugh de Montfort, on the exile of his grandson Robert, in the next reign of K. Will. Rufus, (uu) so that the whole of the lands above-described, became at those periods Escheats to the crown.

They comprehended most probably the greatest part of this parish, as well as that of River adjoining. In this parish they constituted the superior manor in it, afterwards called

THE MANOR OF EWELL, alias TEMPLE EWELL, which was at the time of the above survey in the tenure of Hugh de Montfort, and after its becoming an Escheat to the crown as above-mentioned, was granted to William the King's brother, and William Peverelle, who gave it in alms to the Knights Templars, as may be seen by the inquisition taken of their lands and possessions in the year 1185, anno 32 Henry II, and now remaining in the King's Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer; which gift was afterwards increased in this and the adjoining parishes, by the donation of several others (v).

EWELL.

The Knights Templars were most probably first instituted in England, at the latter end of K. Henry I.'s reign, or the very beginning of that of K. Stephen, by whose successor, K. Henry II, they were much caressed, and their possessions (w), though in so short a time, were increased to a large revenue; but at length in the early part of K. Edw. II.'s reign, their over-great wealth and power had so corrupted their morals, and the vicious lives which they most of them led, had so entirely estranged the King's favor, as well as of the nobles and nation in general from them, that for the peace and safety of the realm, it was found necessary wholly to put an end to them; accordingly, being accused of various horrid and detestable crimes, their persons were every where seized and imprisoned, and their lands and goods confiscated, which were seized on by the King and other Lords as Escheats, the Judges affirming that by the laws of the land they might warrantably hold them; this history, p. 218 (d). Dugd. Mon. vol. ii, p. 517.—Bishop Tanner says, they were greatly accused, but that there was but little proved against them, as appears from the whole process, which is printed in Wilkins's Councils, vol. iii, p. 329, &c. The arms of the Templars were—Gules, a plain cross, argent. See Tanner's List of Arms in Monasticon, N. cvii.

(w) In the Testa de Nevill, taken in K. Henry III.'s reign, it is entered: Ewell is an Escheat of our Lord the King of the honor of Peverell; the Bretbren of Knights Templars hold it by William Longespee in alms, and it is worth per annum xx lib.

(x) See the process against them. Dugd. Mon. vol. ii, p. 559, 943; and in several volumes of Rymer's Fœdera, viz. The Pope directed a bull to the King for the seizing of the Templars and their possessions throughout the realm, on the same day, and in the same manner, as the K. of France had done. In this bull, the Pope particularly recites their crimes and enormities, and that one act at their admission was the solemn abjuration of Jesus Christ; dated at Poitiers, 10 Kal. Dec. pontif. anno 3tio. (1 Ed. 2, anno 1307.) vol. iii, p. 32.—The King orders the same to be executed throughout England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, on the Tuesday next after the Feast of the Epiphany, in his 1st year. Clauf. 1, Edw. II, m. 13d. Ibid. vol. 34.—Notwithstanding which, the King, ever changeable, on Dec. 4, the same year, anno 1307, wrote to the Kings of Castile, Sicily, and Arragon, in their favor, and to entreat them not to believe the evil reports concerning them; and on the 10th of the same month, he wrote to the Pope for the same purpose. Ibid. vol. p. 36, 37.—The Pope afterwards granted certain bulls to Commissioners, to enquire into the truth of the accusations against them, and they were secured in the principal castles and strongholds throughout the realm, by the King's command, in his 3d year. and the whole order of them was dissolved in the 6th year of that reign, anno 1312, in a general Council held at Vienna, by Pope Clement V, (x) who immediately afterwards conferred their lands and effects on the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, which the King confirmed next year, saving his own and his subjects rights; and an act passed anno 17 Edward II, by which the King, Nobles, and others, assembled in Parliament, granted that their lands and effects should be assigned, according to the will of the donors, to other men of religion, that they might be charitably disposed of to godly uses, and as such they were by it wholly given to the Knights Hospitallers (y); who thus becoming possessed of this manor, which from the long possession of the former owners, had acquired the name of Temple Ewell, continued in the possession of it till the general dissolution of their order in K. Henry VIII.'s reign (z), when this manor, among the rest of the possessions of it, was sur-

the same at the King's Exchequer. Numbers of them were confined in different monasteries, by sentence of the Archbishop and the Provincial Council, to perform penance; and the several bailiffs were directed to allow to such monasteries 4d. a day, for the subsistence of each within them.—Henry de Cobham, jun. was appointed bailiff or keeper of their lands and tenements in the co. of Kent, Sarry, and Suffex, to account for the same as above, anno 5 Edw. II, 1311, vol. iii, p. 297.—The Pope granted, by bull, all the houses, lands, &c. which belonged to them, in Oct. 1308, throughout the world, excepting in the kingdoms of Castile, Arragon, Portugal, and Majorca, which the Pope reserved to his own intire disposal, to the order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem; dated at Vienna, 6 Nones of May, anno 7 Pontif. clauf. 5, Edw. II, m. 4, 1312. Ibid. p. 323; which bull was confirmed in the General Council there on the day and year aforesaid.—The Pope therefore by another bull, entreated the King to promote and give his assistance and protection in the same; dated at Liberon, in the dio. of Valentin, 17 Kal. June, the same year. Ibid. p. 326—and he directed his bulls likewise to the same purpose to the Bishops, Earls, and Barons of the realm. Ibid.—The King, by his let. pat. directed to the Prior of the Hospital of St. John, prohibited the execution of the above bulls within his realm; dated London, Aug. 1, 6 Edw. II, clauf. 6, Edw. II, m. 29d.—The King, by his letters patent, ordered his several bailiffs to deliver up the possession of all the manors, lands, tenements, &c. belonging to the Templars, to the Grand Master of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, or his deputy, and the Procurator General of the Hospital, in the name and for the use of it; dated at Westminster, Nov. 28, anno 7 Ed. II, clauf. ejus an. m. 16, anno 1313. Ibid. p. 472.

(z) The residence of the Knights Templars was on the north side of the London road; and on the hill above the turnpike, there is a house called the Temple Farm; but the scite of the ancient house of the Templars is about fourscore rods from it. The last remains of the Templars buildings on it were destroyed about fifty years since.

rendered into the King's hands, and was confirmed to him and his heirs by the general words of the act of the 32d year of that reign (a).

The manor of Temple Ewell, with the appropriation and advowson of the vicarage appendant, remained in the hands of the crown, till K. Edw. VI, by his letters patent, dated March 6, in his 5th year, granted them to Edward, Lord Clinton and Saye, lord high admiral, and of his privy council, to hold in capite, at the yearly rent of 30s. 5d. (b) and he on the 1st of September following, reconveyed them to the crown (c), where they staid but till the next year, when the King, by his letters patent, dated June 15, anno 6 Edward VI, granted them to sir William Cavendish, knt. to hold in capite at the rent above-mentioned (d), who the same year alienated them to sir Richard Sackville, knt. chancellor of the Court of Augmentations (e), who in the beginning of Q. Elizabeth's reign alienated them to Winifred, Marchioness of Winchester, and she in the 24th year of it joined with other trustees in the sale of them to Thomas Digge and William Boys (f), who quickly afterwards passed them away to John Daniell, and he dying without male issue, his two daughters and coheirs carried them in marriage to John Mabb and William Wiseman, who at the latter end of that reign joined in the sale of them to Mr. Robert Bromley, of London, mercer, and he about the beginning of K.

(a) The order of Knights Hospitallers was restored by letters patent of 4 & 5 Philip and Mary, and many of their ancient manors and possessions given to them. See Dugd. Mon. vol. iii, p. 108. But their re-establishment seems never to have taken place; and on the accession of Q. Elizabeth, two years afterwards, it was wholly annihilated.

THE

THE MANOR OF TEMPLE, alias BOSWELL BANKS, and DOWNE.

THIS manor, called in the survey of Domesday, Brocestelle, and in other records, Brostall, lies in the southern part of this parish, and partly in the adjoining one of Swingfield. In the reign of the Conqueror, it was part of the possessions of Odo, the great Bishop of Baieux and Earl of Kent, the King's half-brother, under the general title of whose possessions it is thus entered in the above survey, taken in the 15th year of that reign:

Herfrid ten de Hugone Brocestele. & e. de feudo Epi. p. uno solin se defd. Tra. e. In dnio. e. 1. car. & 2. servi. T. R. E. valeb. 60. sol. & post 60. modo. 40. Qdo herbt recep. 3 juga. modo. 2. juga. Ulnod tenuit de rege. E.

And further on:

Isde Radulf (de Curbespine) ten de epo. 1. jugu in Brocestele. Qd Molleue tenuit de rege. E. & ibi. e. un Vills redd. 30 den.

Which is: Herfrid holds of Hugo, Brocestele, and it is of the see of the Bishop. It was taxed at one suling. The arable land is In demesne there is one carucate and 2 servants. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 60 shillings, and afterwards 60, now 40. When Herbert received it 3 yoke, now 2 yoke. Ulnod held it of K. Edward.

And further on: The same Ralph (de Curbespine) holds of the Bishop 1 yoke in Brocestele, which Molleue held of K. Edward; and there is one villein paying 30 pence.

Four years after the taking of this survey, the Bishop of Baieux fell under the King's displeasure, and all his lands and possessions were confiscated to the crown; after which, it appears by an inquisition taken anno 1434 (i), to have been held by sir Robert de Clottingham, knt. who gave this manor of Brosthall, with its appurtenances in the parish of Swynfelde, to the Knights Templars, on the suppression of whose order, it came with the rest of their possessions into the hands of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem (k), with whom it continued till their dissolution, in the 32d year of K. Henry VIII, when it came to the crown, where it staid, till it was at length granted by Q. Elizabeth to Stokes, of Waterend in this parish, in which name it continued, till it was alienated in the same reign to Harvey, from which name in K. Charles I.'s reign, it was conveyed by sale to Capt. Temple, of Dover (l); who was possessed of it in the beginning of the next reign of K. Charles II; after which it passed by sale to Freeman, of this parish, who was succeeded in it by his son, and he sold it to Captain Fagg, of Updown, near Eastry, and he alienated it about the year 1777 to Mr. Henry Belsey, who died seised of it in 1792, and his heirs are now entitled to it.

There is no Court held for this manor.

The family of Digges, of Barbam, were possessed of lands lying at Bostall in this parish, of which James Diggs was found by inquisition to have died seised of, anno 27 Henry VIII, holding the fame of the Prior of the Hospital of St. John, but by what service was not found, and that William Diggs was his kinsman and next heir (m).

The Earl of Guildford is possessed of lands at Bostall here, which came to him from the family of Furnese, of Waldersbare.

PRESENT STATE OF EWELL.

THE village of Ewell, having the church on the south side of it, is situated in the beautiful and capacious valley, leading from Barbam Downs to the land's end at Dover, through which the high London road leads to it. The houses in this village are little more than cottages, being most of them but meanly built of flint, and a great part of them in a very ruinous condition, and it is far from being pleasantly situated.

The head of the river Dour rises in this valley, at the western extremity of the parish, and a little below Casney Court takes in another stream of it, the head of which rises about two miles higher southward, at the hamlet of Drelingore, at Alkham. This stream turns a corn-mill here near the church, and then flows on from hence eastward into the sea at Dover (n).

head of the river Dour, at Chilton, commonly beginning in February and ending in March or April, at which time the wells of 15 or 16 fathom depth are full; and the country people entertain a notion that this water has a subterraneous communication with the waters called the Liddon spouts, in the cliffs at Hougham, at least four miles from hence, of which further mention will be made below. Leland, in his Itin. vol. vii, p. 127, writes thus of this river: "As concerning the River of Dovar, it has no long Course from no spring or Hedde notable, that descendith to that botom, "The principel Hed as they say, is at a place cawled

"Ewell,

EWELL.

The hills rise here on each side very high and mountainous, and the vales between them are very deep and hollow; they are more open and less incumbered with woods than the more western parts of this county. The hills are almost wholly uninclosed and covered with greenward, having furzes and broom interspersed on them at different intervals. These stupendous hills, in comparison of what the traveller has been used to in his journey hither, raise both his pleasure and admiration, the prospects on both sides being beautifully romantic and singular; and they are terminated by the town of Dover, its castle, and the sea, and beyond all, the Bologne hills on the coast of France.

In the valley, at the western part of this parish, on each side of the London road, are the two farms of Great and Little Waterend, so called from the end or rise of the river Dour; the former of them belonging to Mr. George Finch, of Dover. Close behind the latter, on the hill southward, there seems to be a line of breast-works thrown up, and a large mount or barrow above them, which was opened lately, but nothing was found in it (o). On the hill, about a mile northward from the village, is the Court Lodge of the manor, called the Temple Farm, situated, as has been mentioned above, near the site of the antient mansion of the Knights of that order (p). About half a mile eastward from hence is Archers Court; and still further, Old Park Hill, so called from its having once been the park, belonging to the Temple here. On this hill, is the house fitted up by Dr. Osborne, which being white, is a distinguished object between the break of these lofty hills to the adjacent country. On the southern side of the village, this parish extends up the hills; on them is a common, called, from the barrenness of the soil, Scotland Common; and a little further, a large one, called Ewell Minnis. The soil of this parish is in general very unfer-

(o) There are many barrows or tumuli scattered about on the different hills in the neighbourhood of Dover.

(p) Some have doubted, whether this was not the house where K. John resigned his crown to Pandolph, the Pope's Legate, A. D. 1213, on account of the pardon of Archbp Langton, which was one effect of that meeting being dated at the Temple of Ewell. Vide Pat. 15 Joh. N. 48. But others have conjectured that this was done at Dover; but the Templars had no house there. Others again have placed it

There are no parochial charities.

The Master and Fellows of Emanuel College in Cambridge, are possessed of lands in this parish and Liddon, given in 1627 by Walter Richards, for two exhibitions in that college (q).

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is an antient building, consisting of only one isle and a chancel, having a low square tower at the west end (r).

This church was always appendant to the manor. It was very early appropriated to the order of Knights Templars, after whose dissolution it was given, with the advowson of the vicarage to the Knights Hospitallers, and on their suppression, passed with the manor as an appendage to it, in like manner as has been already fully mentioned above, thro' a succession of owners, to William Osborne, of London, esq; M. D. who is the present owner of the impropriation and advowson of the vicarage of this church, appendant to the manor of Temple Ewell.

The vicarage in 1384, anno 8 Rich. II, was valued at 66s. 8d. and as such, on account of its smallness, not taxed to the tenth (s). In 1588, here were communicants 112, and it was valued at 15l. It is valued in the King's Books at 6l. 13s. 4d. and the yearly tenths at 13s. 4d. (t) It is now of the yearly certified value of 13l. 10s. 8d. (u)

In the Register of the Archdeacon's Court is a return and terrier of the glebe and profits of this vicarage, made in 1616.

Imprimis. A vicarage house, with a garden, containing about 10 perches of ground adjoining to it. The tythes belonging to the vicarage were, all manner of tythes, excepting those of at the house of the Commanders of the Templars, at Swyngheld, where, or at this mansion of Ewell, it certainly was. Which of them is left to the reader's option. See vol. iii. of this history, p. 753. Tan. Mon. p. 217, note (f).

(q) It consists of 37 acres, the rents of which are greatly sunk in value since the donation of it, which shews either that the College is greatly imposed on; or that the rents of these parishes are much lowered in value. Most probably the former is the reason of it. See vol. iii. of this hist. p. 355.

(r) In this church was formerly this coat of arms—Vert, 2 bendlets argent, on a chief gules 3 mullets argent. It has at present nothing worth further notice in it.

RIVER

LIES the next parish eastward from Ewell, being written in Domesday, both Ripa and ad Ripam; in other Latin records, Ripa and Riparia; and in English ones, River, taking its name from the river which flows through it.

A Borsholder is chosen for this parish at the Hundred Court, and another for that part of the manor of Archers Court, which is in the parish of Whitfield, at the Court Leet of that manor.

It appears by the Testa de Nevill, that this parish in the latter end of K. John's reign was an Escheat of the crown, and held in three parts; one of which, the Castle (viz. of Dover) held; another part, the Canons of St. Radigund's held; and the third part was held by Soloman de Dover, of the gift of K. John, and the whole was worth xxx pounds. The former of these afterwards came into the possession of the Hospital of St. Mary, otherwise called the Maison Dieu, of Dover; the other part, belonging to St. Radigund's, will be further mentioned below in the ecclesiastical account of this parish; and the third part was, what is now called, the manor of Archers Court, situated likewise within the bounds of this parish.

THE MANOR OF RIVER, which was comprehended in that third part of this parish first above-mentioned, seems to have been in the reign of the Conqueror part of the possessions of Hugh de Montfort, and perhaps described among those lands mentioned in the survey of Domesday above, under the parish of Ewell (d). His lands, on the exile of his grandson Robert de Montfort, in K. Henry I.'s reign, escheated to the crown, whence great part of them in this neighbourhood were afterwards granted to Robert, son of Bernard de Ver, constable of England, who had married Adeliza, daughter of Hugh de Montfort; after which these possessions came to Henry de Essex, who was constable likewise of England, from his succession to which as well as from other circumstances, it should seem that he became entitled to them by inheritance. Henry de Essex was

RIVER.

Baron of Raleigh in Essex, and hereditary standard-bearer of England, but for his cowardice in a battle against the Welsh, in the 10th year of that reign, anno 1163, he forfeited all his possessions, which became Escheats to the crown (e); among them was this manor of River, held of the King as of his Castle of Dover, and it appears to have continued in the crown during K. John's and the beginning of K. Henry III.'s reign, who in the 13th year of it confirmed to Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, and his heirs, for his homage and service, all the land which was Henry de Essex's, with its appurtenances, and of which this manor de la Rivere besides Dover was a part; and further, at his petition gave and confirmed to the Hospital of St. Mary, at Dover, (afterwards called the Maison Dieu), which the said Hubert, Earl of Kent, had founded, this manor, with all its appurtenances, to hold of him and his heirs in pure and perpetual alms, for the support of the poor, and of strangers resorting thither for ever (f); after which, K. Edward I, in his 21st year, summoned by quo warranto the Master of the Maison Dieu, to shew by what right he claimed a manor and the usual privileges of it, in this parish, when the Jury gave it for the Master, and K. Henry VI, in his 2d year confirmed the same to the Hospital (g), part of the possessions of which it continued till the reign of K. Henry VIII, when on the suppression of it this manor came into the King's hands, where it seems to have remained without interruption till K. Charles II.'s reign, when it was alienated by the crown to the Dean and Chapter of Rochester, with whom it remains at this time (h).

ARCHERS COURT

is a manor situated in the northern part of this parish, on the hills adjoining to that of Whitfield, in which parish, as well as in those of Guffon and Waldershare, some parts of it lie.

In the time of K. John this manor was in the possession of Soloman de Dovere, as appears by the Testa de Nevill mentioned above, and it seems as if this person was the same as is mentioned in the pleas of the crown, anno 21 Edward I (i), by the name of Soloman de Champs, or Chauns (k), who might from his residence there be likewise called de Dovere; in which pleas, as well as by the inquisition taken after his death in the 31st year of that reign (l), he is said to hold certain lands, called Coperland and Atterton, containing one messuage and 132 acres of land, (part of this manor, as will appear by the records mentioned below,) of the King in capite, by the sergeantry and service of holding the King's head between Dover and Whitsond, as often as it should happen for him to pass the sea between those ports, and there should be occasion for it (m). He died seised of this manor and land above-mentioned, in the 31st year of K. Edward I, and was succeeded by his son and heir Gregory de Dovere; but I find no more mention of this name afterwards, but that it became the possessions of a family named Archer, and sometimes L'archer, from whom it acquired the name of Archers Court, one of whom, Nicholas Archer, held it in the 1st year of K. Edward II (n), as did Thomas le Archer in the 3d year of K. Edward III (o); his son William Archer, paid aid for it in the 20th year of that reign, as 100 acres of land held in sergeantry (p).

geantry, by the above-mentioned service; and the Jurors witness that the aforesaid sergeantry is entire, and that the said Solomon fully performed the said service. Therefore, &c. Lib. Nig. Scacc. f. 188. See Beckwith's Ten. p. 57, 58.

(m) In vol. ii. of this history, p. 510. This land of Atterton, from the similarity of the name, is supposed to have had relation to Otterden, and is inserted accordingly in the description of that parish; but it appears to be a mistake, as may be seen by the above description, and the reader is desired to correct it accordingly.

It appears by the register of St. Radigund's Abbey, cart. 1192, that the Abbat and Convent of Bec, in Normandy, anno 1237, released all their right and title to the tythes of Cupland, in the parish of Ryver, to the Abbat and Convent of St. Radigund of Bradefole.

(p) By inquisition, taken anno 48 Edw. III, it was found that Agnes, who was wife of William Barry, held at the day of her death, inter alia, one toft, 30 acres of arable, and 60 acres of pasture, in la Ryver, to hold to her, and William Archer and the heirs of their bodies, remainder to Simon de Goldeburg and Christian, daughter of William Archer, in like tail; remainder to William, son of William Archer,

RIVER.

At length, after this name was become extinct here, this manor was alienated to Bandred, or Brandred, in which name it continued for several years, till at length the manor itself, with the Court Lodge, and part of the demesne lands, together with Coperland, were sold by one of them, in the 1st year of K. Edward IV, to Thomas Doilie, esq; (q) and the other part of the demesne lands, since known by the name of Little Archers Court, to sir George Browne, of Beechworth Castle; a further account of which will be given below.

From one of the descendants of the above-mentioned Thomas Doilie, this manor was in K. Henry VIII.'s reign exchanged with the crown, and that King in his 36th year granted it to sir James Hales, in whose family it continued till it was sold to Lee, who passed it away to sir Hardress Waller, of Dublin, knt. and he with others, in 1657, alienated this manor, with the Court Leet and Court Baron, view of frank pledge, and whatever belonged to the same, to Mr. Thomas Broom, of London, one of whose descendants of the same name sold it to Richards Rouse, of Dover, whose daughter in 1768 carried it in marriage to Phineas Stringer, of Dover, esq; who is the present owner of it (r).

A Court Leet and Court Baron is held for this manor (s).

LITTLE ARCHERS COURT.

THE OTHER PART OF Archers Court, which was sold in K. Edward IV.'s reign, as has been mentioned above, to sir George Browne, of Beechworth Castle, was afterwards known by the name of Little Archers Court. Sir George Browne was sheriff of this county in the 21st year of the above reign, but was attainted anno 1 Richard III, and restored again in the 1st year of K. Henry VII. His son sir Matthew Browne died anno 4 and 5 Philip and Mary, seised of this estate, with 60 acres of arable and two acres of wood in River, alias Archers Court, called Copland, held in capite by serjeantry, and the service cher, and his heirs, by the like service of serjeantry, as above-mentioned; and that John Alkham was the next of kin and heir of the said Agnes. In the Court of Shepway of the Cinque Ports, anno 24 Edw. III, John Archer brought a plea of trespass against John Monyn, of Dover, who had imprisoned him at the suit of William Archer his brother. See Jeakes's Charters of the Cinque Ports, p. 77.

This manor claims over the adjoining farm of Little Archers Court, formerly part of the demesnes of it.

mentioned above, as was found by inquisition taken after his death that year. His son Henry Browne, esq; left issue one son, sir Thomas Browne, of Beechworth Castle, knt. who had his lands disgravelled by the two acts of the 1st and 8th years of Q. Elizabeth. He afterwards passed away this estate to Capt. Isaac Honeywood, who was slain at the battle of Newport, and dying without issue devised it by his will to his nephew, Colonel Henry Honeywood (t), who died seised of it in 1662, and was buried in the cathedral of Christ Church in Canterbury (u).

After his death, this estate seems to have come into the possession of his first-cousin sir Thomas Honeywood, of Marks-hall in the co. of Essex, knt. (v) after whose death, in 1666, his two sons, Thomas and John Le Mot Honeywood, became successively owners of it, both of whom dying without issue, the latter in 1693 devised it to his kinsman Robert Honeywood, who was afterwards of Marks-hall. He died seised of it in 1735, whose son Richard dying in 1755, left an infant son of the same name, who died at the age of 10 years, in 1758; upon which his only surviving uncle, Philip Honeywood, of Marks-hall, and general of the King's forces, succeeded to it, who on his death without issue in 1785, devised it by his will to his kinsman, Filmer Honeywood, now of Marks hall, esq; and knight of the shire for the co. of Kent, who is the present owner of it (w).

CASTNEY COURT,

as it is commonly called, but properly Kerjoney, is another manor, situated partly in the western part of this parish, adjoining to the river, and partly in the parishes of Ewell and Whitfield. It was antiently accounted part of the Barony of Saye, being held of the Castle of Dover; and at the latter end of K. Edw. I.'s reign was in the possession of the family of Paganel, or Painall, as they were usually called. John Paganel died seised of it anno 12 Edw. II, leaving a daughter and heir Maud (x), and his widow Ijeld,

This estate, in the parishes of River and Whitfield, consists of 200 acres of land, of which 100 acres are tythe-free.

(t) Philipott, p. 282. Errata.

(u) The Register of Christ Church says, he was a Colonel sometime under that grand rebel Oliver Cromwell. He was one of the sons of Arthur Honeywood, of Lion's Inn, gent. and afterwards of Maidstone, brother of Isaac above-mentioned; the sons of Robert Honeywood, of Charing, by Mary, daughter and coheir of Robert diwater, of Lenham. See vol. ii. of this history, p. 442.

(v) He was the eldest son of Robert Honeywood, of Charing, the eldest brother of Arthur and Isaac Honeywood above-mentioned, by his second wife Elizabeth, daughter of sir Thomas Browne, of Beechworth Castle in Surry, knt.

surviving, who held it in dower at her death in the 17th year of that reign (y); after which, I find it held by Elias de Bolton, as half a knight's fee, situated at La Kersony (z); but in the 20th year of K. Edward III. William Archer and Thomas de Whitfield paid aid for it at the making of the Black Prince a knight, as half a fee, which the heirs of Stephen de Bolton held at Kersener of the Barony of Saye. After this, the family of Norwood became possessed of it (a), and in later times the Ropers, of St. Dunstan's, near Canterbury; for John Roper, of St. Dunstan's, esq; died seised of it in the 5th year of K. Henry VII, holding it of the heirs of William de Saye by knight's service (b). In his descendants this manor continued till the latter end of Q. Elizabeth's reign, when it was conveyed by sale to Best, of Canterbury; the last of which name who held it was George Best, who alienated it to Captain Nicholas Toke, who after the death of K. Charles I. conveyed his interest in it to Charles Fotherby, esq; (c) and he dying without issue, it came to his next brother and heir Thomas Fotherby, of Crixall in Staple, esq; who died possessed of it in 1674 (d), upon which it descended to his only son of the same name, who alienated it to William Richards, of Dover, and he in 1701 devised it to his nephew John Sladden, of Dover, merchant, who bequeathed it to his sister Mary Sladden, and she in 1729 carried it in marriage to Thomas Fagge, of Dover, and afterwards, by the powers vested in her by her marriage settlement, devised it to her husband for life, and afterwards to certain trustees to dispose of, to fulfill the purpose of her will (e); and they, in the year 1783, passed it away by sale to Mr. William Andrews, of London, who in 1788 devised it to Thomas Biggs, of Dover, esq; the present owner of it (f).

A Court Baron is held for this manor.

A see-farm rent of 8s. 11½d. is paid yearly to the crown for this manor.

In the year 1236, Robert de Sandford, master of the Knights Templars in England, with the consent of his brethren, received from the Prior and Convent of Cumbwell, in perpetual ferme, all the small tythes which accrued or might accrue from the demesne of sir Elias de Bolton, knt. which he possessed in the Hamlet de la Kerseny,

The Canons of St. Martin's Priory in Dover, were possessed of 100 acres of land in this parish, at the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, as appears by the following entry in that record, under the general title of their possessions:

And a little further:

Ap Ripa sunt 100 acrae quæ se adgetant ubi. T. R. E. se adgetant.

And a little further: At River there are 100 acres, which are taxed where they were taxed in the time of K. Edward the Confessor.

PRESENT STATE OF RIVER.

THE high London road goes through this parish towards Dover, which is about two miles from hence eastward. On the north side of it, the uninclosed down hills rise very sudden and high. On the south side, the slope of the vale is as sudden for two or three fields, at the bottom of which is the river Dour (b); and on the further bank, among a narrow range of meadows, is a long straggling row of pretty neat-built houses, among which are three paper-mills (i), a corn, and a seed-mill (k), comprehending the village of River, having the church in the midst of them, beyond which the hills rise again very high, being frequently arable, interspersed with small coppices and clumps of wood wildly placed among them. The view of this from the London road forms a most romantic and picturesque scene, when at the same time towards the east, through the opening of the valley, is seen the town of Dover and its churches, and beyond, the British channel and the high hills of Bologne on the coast of France, and on the height of the hills to the right, the stately buildings of Dover Castle.

The soil, in the northern part of this parish on the hills, is mostly chalk, and on those on the other side of it the same, but interspersed with a red earth, intermixed with flints; a barren and hungry soil. In the vale near the river, the meadows are rich and fertile. There are no parochial charities, excepting that the poor have a right to commoning on the Minnis, which is a large common or heath of 300 acres, called River Minnis, lying on the hills in the southern extremity of this parish, next to Polton (l).

A new workhouse is built in this parish, for the united parishes of Alkham, Capel, Hougham, River, Buckland, Charlton, and Whitfield.

Upon the hill, on the north side of the London road, near the lime kiln, are several tumuli, some of which were lately opened, and in each of them was found a skeleton, a sword of about three feet long and two inches broad, and the head of a spear.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

RIVER is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, is a small building, consisting of a nave and a chancel, without any steeple, and has nothing worth notice in it.

K. John, in his 9th year, granted to the Abbat and Canons of St. Radigund of Bradsole, this church of St. Peter of River, and his place and court of the manor, to hold for ever in pure and perpetual alms, for the building of their abbey there, which was then at Bradsole (m). After which the same King, in his 17th year, granted that they might appropriate this church, which was of his own patronage, to the maintenance of themselves and of poor strangers resorting thither (n). Notwithstanding the grant for the removal of the abbey hither, it never took place, but continued at Bradsole, in the adjoining parish of Polton, to the time of its dissolution, which happened in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when this appropriation, with the advowson of the vicarage, and the lands and possessions of the Abbat and Convent in this parish as well as elsewhere, came into the King's hands, who granted them with

Part of it only is within this hundred of Bewshorough; another part is within the hundred of Folkestone; and the residue is within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, and of the Corporation of the Town and Port of Dover.

A Borsholder, for that part of this parish which is within the hundred of Bewshorough, is chosen at the Court Leet of the hundred.

The parish of Hougham was part of those lands which were given by the Conqueror to Fulbert de Dover, for the defence of Dover Castle (w), which made up together the barony of Fulbert, or Fobert as it was usually called, being held in capite by barony, of which Chilbam became the chief seat, or caput baroniæ; of which this place, as appears by the Book of Dover Castle, was afterwards held by knights service as two fees, one of which comprehended at times called by the names of Great Hougham, alias Chilverton; and likewise Southcourt, from its situation in regard to the manor of Northcourt, alias Little Hougham, in this parish.

This manor was held in manner as above-mentioned by a family who took their surname

(w) See vol. iii. of this hist. p. 127 (t). In some records, Hugham is said to be a fee held of Kingston manor, (which must mean a part of this parish only;) which manor was again held of the Barony of Fobert, alias Chilbam. Ibid. p. 748, (z).

(a) Robert, son of Robert de Hougham, who died anno 2 Edward I, died anno 29 Edward I, and is said to have left these two daughters his coheirs; but there was another of the same name, most probably this man's son, who appears by the Escheat Rolls to have deceased anno 11 Edward III, and it is more likely left the two daughters and coheirs above-mentioned.

This family bore for their arms—Argent, 5 chevronels of Hougham from it. Robert de Hougham held it in K. Richard I.'s reign, and was present with that King at the siege of Acon, in Palestine (x), and his son of the same name died seised of it in the 41st year of K. Henry III. (y) His son Robert de Hougham died anno 2 Edward I, possessed of this manor, and of the office of Constable of Rochester Castle (z). At length Robert de Hougham dying without issue male (a), his two daughters became his coheirs, of whom Benedicta was married to John de Shelving, and the other to Waretius de Valoignes, the latter of whom became entitled to this manor, on the share of his wife's inheritance; and in the 14th year of K. Edward III. obtained a charter of free warren for this manor of Hougham, soon after which he died seised of it, leaving two daughters his coheirs, one of whom married sir Francis Fogge; the other Maud, married Thomas de Aldelyn, or Aldon, who in her right became possessed of this manor, and accordingly paid aid for it at the making of the Black Prince a knight, in the book of which it is entered thus: Of Thomas de Aldelyn, by Maud his wife, the daughter of Warin de Valoyns for one fee, which the heirs of Robert de Hougham held in Est Hougham of the Barony of Chilbam of William de Wilton, and it always paid ward to Dover Castle.

Thomas de Aldelyn, or Aldon as it was afterwards written, died seised of this manor in the 35th year of the above reign (b); but it should seem that he had no further interest in it but for his life, for Maud his wife before her death had infeoffed William Tapaline and others in this manor, and they passed it away to Stephen, Richard, and John de Combe, the latter of whom was of Hastingleigh, and afterwards became sole possessor of it. He conveyed this manor in the 10th year of K. Richard II. to John then rector and others (c), probably in trust to sell the same; after which it came into the name of Heron, in which it remained at the end of K. Henry IV.'s reign (d), and from which it was

See vol. iii. of this history, p. 358, 370. William Fineux, the ſecond ſon of William firſt above-mentioned, who had this manor of Southcourt by gift of his father, reſided at Hougham, and dying poſſeſſed of it in 1534 without iſſue, he by his will bequeathed it to William the eldeſt ſon of his brother Richard deceaſed, who afterwards reſided here, and in his direct deſcendants it continued down to Thomas Fineux, of Dover, gent. who in K. Charles II.'s reign paſſed away this manor to Robert Breton, gent. (f)

(e) See vol. iii. of this hiſtory, p. 617. The origin of this family may beſt be given in the words of Leland, in his Itinerary, vol. vi, p. 6, who ſays, that "The name of Finiox thus cam ynto Kent about K. Edward the 2ds days. One Creaulle a Man of Faire poſſeſſions yn Kent was a priſoner in Boleyne yn Fraunce and much deſiring to be at Liberte made his Keeper to be his frend, promiſing hyſſ Lande yn Kent, and if he wold help and deliver him. So that now be two Houſes of the Finiox, the Heyre of Finiox the Juge, and the Heyre of Juſtice Finiox Brother."

William Fineux, of Hougham, gent. next brother to the Judge, in his will, dated 1532, mentions the manor of Southcourt in Hougham, given him by his father William, and the lands and tenements which he had purchaſed in this pariſh, in the tenantry of the Priory of Dover, being the tenantry of Syberſton, the tenantry of Maxton, and in the tenantry called Oxford Tenantry. Richard the younger brother was of St. Peter's, in Dover, in which church he was buried in 1520, having been Mayor there in 1514. In his will he mentions his lands in Deal and Sboldon, in this pariſh, in Charlton Dane, Dovor, and on Aythorn Dane, ſome-time called Monins, and in St. Margaret's Cliffe. William his eldeſt ſon became his uncle William's heir, by his will as above-mentioned, whoſe deſcendants will be further mentioned; and from Thomas his ſecond ſon deſcended Richard Fineux, of Hernebill, gent. in 1589.—William Fineux, the eldeſt ſon above-mentioned, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Warren, of Dover, from whom deſcended Captain Thomas Fineux, of Hougham, who was twice married; firſt to Elizabeth, daughter of William Boone, and ſecondly to Anne, daughter of John Ramſay, of Canterbury; by the latter he had iſſue Thomas, who was of Hougham, of whom below.—John, of St. Margaret at Cliffe.—Henry, of Hougham, gent. who in 1614 married Mary Gillit, of St. Lau-

There are ſeveral entries of their burials in the register of St. Paul's pariſh, in Canterbury, ſo late as the year 1703.

(f) Philipott, p. 195, ſays, that at the latter end of K. Charles I.'s reign, this manor was alienated from Fineux to Mr. Newiew, of Dover; but Thomas Fineux was owner of Southcourt in 1664.

(g) He was deſcended from the Bretons of Barwell, and on the mother's ſide from the Baſſingtons, of Temple Roſhley in the co. of Leiceſter. He was the ſon of Nicholas Breton, of Norton near Darventry, by Elizabeth his wife, (who afterwards married ſir Samuel Clarke, knt. a maſter in chancery;) he died poſſeſſed of this eſtate, and was buried in this church, leaving by Elizabeth his wife a ſon Richard, who married Mary-Adriana, eldeſt daughter and coheir of Thomas Criſpe, of Quex, eſq; by whom he had Robert, of the Elmes, eſq; who died as above-mentioned in 1707. Of whoſe deſcendants, ſee a farther account in vol. iii. of this hiſtory, under Kennington, p. 268. The manſion of Elmes is ſituated in a valley in the north-weſt part of this pariſh.

A Court Baron is held for this manor (l).

THE MANOR OF HOUGHAM COURT, alias NORTH-COURT, which latter name it took from its situation in regard to the former described manor of Southcourt, was comprehended as part of those two knights fees, which, as has been mentioned above, were given by the Conqueror to Fulbert de Dover, and with other lands made up the barony of Fobert, of which it was held afterwards as half a knight's fee, by the family of Basing, of eminent account in the city of London during the reigns of K. John and K. Henry III, for the high offices of trust which they bore in it. From them descended sir William de Basing, knt. who held this manor. He was one of those Kentish gentlemen who accompanied K. Edw. I. in his victorious expedition into Scotland, where he was knighted, with many others of his countrymen, in the 7th and 8th years of K. Edward II; he served the office of sheriff of this county, and in the latter year was one of the knights in parliament for it. He died that same year, and Margaret his wife (daughter and heir of sir Thomas de Normanville) accounted for the profits of this county, as the Pipe Rolls inform us (m). His son sir Thomas de Basing, knt. succeeded him in this manor, which he afterwards alienated to Adam Sare, whose heirs paid aid for it in the 20th year of K. Edw. III. as half a fee, which sir Thomas de Basing before held in Little Houghbam of the barony of Chilbam. In whose possession it remained after this, I have not found, till the beginning of K. Henry VI.'s reign, when it was alienated to Clive, commonly called Cliffe, a family of good account in the counties of Salop and Essex; from whence, at the latter end of that reign, it passed by sale to William Hextal, of East Peckbam, esq; who dying without issue male, Margaret, one of his daughters and coheirs, entitled her husband William Whetenball, commonly called Whetnall, esq; citizen and alderman of London, to the possession of married the daughter of Mr. Richards Rouse, of Dover, by whom he has an only daughter and heir, married in 1785 to Mr. Edward Broadrip, of Dover, gent.

(l) The boundaries of this manor, as I am informed, begin at Higb-cliff, from whence they extend along the coast, to a place called Jews-gut; and there leaving the cliff, on towards Capel, whence including West Hougham, they go down to the Elmes, and the land of Dover Priory.

There was a payment of 3s. 8d. payable to the owner of the manor of Southcourt from the Priory of Dover, which was reserved to him in the grant of the Priory to the Archbishop, anno 29 Henry VIII.

(m) See more of him in vol. iii. of this history, p. 115, under Kenardington, which manor he possessed in right of Margaret his wife; their son sir Thomas de Basing died anno 23 Edward III, as did his son John in the 7th year of K. Richard II.

it (n). His descendant William Whetenball about the middle of K. Henry VIII.'s reign sold it to John Boys, of Fredville, esq; who died seised of it in the 35th year of that reign, in whose descendants it continued down to Major John Boys, of Fredville, who possessed it in 1656 (o).

Before his death, he alienated this manor; but how it passed afterwards, I have not learned, only that it became vested in the name of Woodroofe; and in the year 1720, William Woodroofe, of the co. of Cambridge, Cl. sold one moiety of it to John Walker, citizen and draper, of London, who in 1741 passed it away to Francis Cabot, and he, at his death in 1753, devised it to his widow Barbara, as she did at her death in 1756, to her father Mr. Robert Cooper, of Salisbury, and her brother-in-law William Barnes. In 1786, this moiety was in possession of Robert, son of the above-mentioned Robert Cooper, and of Anne Barnes, and they joined in the sale of it to Mr. Michael Becker, of Dover, who in 1792 sold it to Mr. Philip Leman, of Dover Castle, the present owner of it.

The other moiety continued afterwards in the descendants of William Woodroofe above-mentioned down to the Rev. Mr. Woodroofe, of Shoreham in this county, the present possessor of it; so that this manor remains in undivided moieties at this time (p).

There is no Court held for this manor. A yearly fee-farm of 7s. 6½d. is paid to the crown for it.

SIBERTON, alias SIBERSTON, is a manor in the north-east part of this parish, which made likewise part of the barony of Fobert above-mentioned, of which it was held as the fourth part of a knight's fee. John de Herste held this manor in the 2d year of K. John, as did his descendant Hamo de Herste in the reign of K. Edward II, and in the 20th year of K. Edward III, the heirs of John de Herste paid aid for it as one quarter of a fee, which Hamo de Herste before held in Siberston of the barony of Chilbam (q), and it always paid ward

(p) This estate consists of a farm, called Huffam Court, and 254 acres of land, with the reputed manor, to which is annexed the right to wreck of the sea along the coast, from Higb-cliff to Archcliff fort, and is of the yearly rent of 82l. per annum.

(q) The family of Herste held likewise the manor of Herste in Chilbam, of the same barony; for in the Book of Aid above-mentioned, it is entered under the hundred of Felborough, that the heirs of John de Herste accounted for one knight's fee, which Hamo de Herste held in Felborough, Siberston, and Herste, of William de Wilton, as of his Castle of Chilbam, of which one fourth was in Bewsborough. to Dover Castle; not long after which it appears to have been in the possession of a family who took their surname from it, one of whom, Richard de Siberston, as appeared by an old dateless deed of that time, demised it to John Monins (r). And in another deed, John Monins, of Dover, passed away, in the 39th year of K. Edward, the third part of this manor to John Monins the elder, his father (s), in whose descendants it continued down to Edward Monins, of Waldershare, esq; whose lands were disgavelled by the act of the 2d and 3d Edward VI. He died possessed of it in the 6th year of that reign, and by his will gave this manor of Seberston, and all his lands in this parish, to his second son George Monins, and he sold it to Thomas Pepper, jurat of Dover, who dying in the 17th year of Q. Elizabeth, gave it to Thomas, son of Richard Pepper (t), and he in K. James I.'s reign alienated it to Moulton, of Redriff, in whose descendants it remained at the time of the restoration of K. Charles II, 1660 (u); since which it was alienated, after some intermediate owners, to Mr. Phineas Stringer, of Dover, whose son, of the same name, is the present possessor of it.

But this manor, by unity of possession has for some years since been so blended with that of Hougham, otherwise called the Elmes, above described, that it is now accounted one and the same manor.

PORTION OF TYTHES.

THE tythes of the manor of Siberston, lying in Elms Bottom in this parish, were part of the possessions of the Priory of St. Martin in Dover, and continued so till the dissolution of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when an act passing for the suppression of all such religious houses as were under the clear yearly value of 200l. and for giving them to the King, this portion of tythes, among the rest of the possessions of the priory, came into the King's hands, where it did not remain long, for he granted it with the scite and other possessions of the priory, (r) Philipott, p. 196, says, this deed was in the hands of Mr. Whittingham Wood, of Canterbury.

(s) Philipott, ibid.

(t) He gave the manor of Syberston, with all the lands, tenements, and appurtenances whatsoever belonging to the same, which he severally purchased of George Monins, gent. Mr. Dering, and Mr. Ewyas; by which it should seem that the whole of this manor was not then vested in the former of them.

(u) Philipott, p. 196.

(v) See Shebberswell above, p. 5.

(w) In Q. Elizabeth's reign, the Hanningtons were in possession of this portion of tythes; and Francis, son of William Hannington, of Dover, conveyed his interest in it, anno 25 of that reign, to Richard Dering, of Pluckley; but in in his 29th year, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors for ever, in exchange, in manner as has been already frequently mentioned above (v), in which state it has continued ever since, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time entitled to the inheritance of it (w).

FARTHINGLOE, alias VENSON DANE, is another manor in the eastern part of this parish, which was antiently part of the possessions of the Canons of St. Martin in Dover, under the general title of whose possessions it is thus entered in the survey of Domesday:

In Beusberg Hund.

In Ferlingelai ten Wills fili Gaufridi 1. solin & ibi bt in dnio 1. car. & 4 villos cu 1. car. val. 4 lib. T. R. E. 6. lib. Sired tenuit in prebenda.

Which is: In Beusberg Hundred. In Ferlingelai, William the son of Gaufrid holds 1 suling, and there he has in demesne 1 carucate, and 4 villeins, with 1 carucate. It is worth 4 pounds. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 6 pounds. Sired held it as a prebend.

And immediately following, under the title of the same possessions:

In Hicbam ten Balduin 1 solin & ibi bt 4 villos & 5 bord cu 2. car. val 4 lib. T. R. E. 100. sol. Eduuin tenuit.

Which is: In Hicbam, Balduin holds 1 suling, and there he has 4 villeins, and 5 borderers, with 2 carucates. It is worth 4 pounds. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 100 shillings. Eduuin holds it (x).

As the Canons of St. Martin's Priory had other possessions in this parish, besides the manor of Fartbingloe, the latter entry no doubt contains the description of them, and includes their estate here, called Venson Dane, alias Welcheje, mentioned below, which together with the manor of Fartbingloe, remained parcel of the possessions of the above priory (y), till the final suppression of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when they both came into the King's hands, who granted them in his 29th year to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors, in exchange, 1643 Humphrey Mead was lessee of it on a beneficial lease under the Archbishop, at the yearly rent of 2l. The Eatons, of Woodford in Essex, were for many years afterwards lessees of it. Peter Eaton, of Woodford, esq; died possessed of the lease some few years ago, and bequeathed his interest in it to Mrs. Hannab Markland, of London, whose devisee is now possessed of it.

(x) This last entry in Domesday, is through mistake inserted under Ickbam, in vol. iii. of this history, p. 663; but it certainly relates to lands in this parish of Hougham.

(y) The manor of Fartbingloe was held of the Prior and Canons in K. Henry III.'s time, by a family, who from their residence at it, assumed their surname from it. One of them, Matilda de Farthinglor, is mentioned by Prynne, p. 46, anno 44 Henry III.

as has been already more particularly mentioned above; since which this manor of Farthingloe, with the estate of Venson Dane, alias Wellclose, has remained parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time entitled to the inheritance of them (x).

This estate is exempted from the payment of the great or corn tythes.

There is not any Court held for this manor.

MAXTON, or Maxton Court, is another manor situated in this parish, at no great distance further northward from Farthingloe, which in K. Henry III.'s reign, as appears by the Book of Knights fees kept in the King's Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, was in the possession of Stephen Manekyn, who held it as one quarter of a knight's fee of the barony of Fobert, being part of those two fees in this parish, which together with others elsewhere made up that barony, and were given for the defence of Dover Castle. After this it seems to have been divided into moities, and to have been held by Richard Walsbam, and Alice, daughter of Stephen Manekin, who alienated the entire fee of it to William, son of Nicholas Archer, of Dover (a), and he paid aid for it in the 20th year of K. Edward III, as one quarter of a fee, which Richard Walsbam and Alice, daughter of Stephen Manekin, held before at Maxton and le Regge, of the barony of Fobert, alias Chilbam. His son William Archer, in the 21st year of the next reign of K. Richard II, passed it away by sale to John Alkham, of Alkham, a family of good estate in this neighbourhood, in the descendants of which this manor remained for some time (b), but at the

(x) In 1643, sir Edward Dering, knt. held this manor and lands as lessee under the Archbishop, on a beneficial lease, at the yearly rent of 30l. 6s. 8d. The rack rents were demised by him to the occupier—being for Farthingloe 95l. per ann. and for Venson Dane 45l. per annum.

Sir Edward Dering sold his interest in them anno 13 Charles I, to Anthony Percival, of Dover, and Captain of Arcliff-fort, whose son John Percival, about 1670, parted with it, but to whom, I am not informed, only that in the very early part of the present century, the estate was in the possession of the Harveys.

Richard Harvey, about the year 1730, by his will devised his interest in it to his son Richard, who in 1738 alienated one moiety of it to John Knott, of Dover, and Hambrooke Harvey; the other moiety remained with Thomas Harvey, of Alkham.

The whole of the former moiety became vested in Hambrooke Harvey above-mentioned, who in 1754 passed it away to Mr. Nathaniel Walker, of Dover, who at his death gave it to his widow.

The latter moiety was passed away by the Executors of Thomas Harvey above-mentioned to Richard Marfb.

These estates consist at present of 610 acres of land, arable, pasture, meadow, down, and wood, situated in this parish. The interest of the present lease is vested in the widow of Mr. Nathaniel Walker, deceased, and Mr. John latter end of K. Edward IV. it was become the property of Roger Appleton (c), from whom it passed to Hobday, and thence to Harman, of Crayford in this county (d), from which name it was sold by Thomas Harman to sir James Hales, knt. who at or about the middle of Q. Elizabeth's reign alienated it to Andrews, of Dover, who some few years afterwards sold the fee of it to Pepper, and he in K. James I.'s reign conveyed it to sir Thomas Wilford, of Ilden, knt. who in K. Charles I.'s reign passed it away to Mr. William Richards, of Dover, whose descendant of the same name, at his decease in 1701, devised it to his nephew, John Sladden, of Dover, merchant, as he did in 1720 to his sister Mary, who in 1729 carried it in marriage to Mr. Thomas Fagge, of Dover, and she at her death by the powers vested in her by her marriage settlement, devised it to her husband for life, and afterwards to trustees, to perform the uses of her will; pursuant to which they sold it in 1783 to Thomas Biggs, of Dover, esq. the present owner of it, who has much improved the mansion of this manor, by making several additional buildings to it (e).

A Court Baron is held for this manor.

The Prior of St. Martin's in Dover, had some interest in this manor, as appears by an inquisition taken anno 16 Richard II (f), after the death of John atte Hall, by which it was found that he held lands at his decease of that priory at Maxton (g).

K. Edward VI, in his 7th year, demised to Roger Bryngebome, a close of land and pasture, called St. Richard's Close, alias Maxton Close, late in the tenure of Hugh Richards in this parish, late parcel of the lands and possessions of Marfb (the present occupier); the former possessing the lands, and the latter the great tythes, for their respective shares.

(c) This appears by the will of Thomas Hextal, of Dover, who was possessed of land within the tenantry of this manor, which he describes as bounding to the lands of Roger Appleton, called Maxton. Proved anno 1486.

(d) William Harman held the manor of Mayton, alias Maxton, with its appurtenances, of the Lord Cheney, as of his manor of Chilbam, by knights service. Thomas Harman was his son and heir. Rot. Esch. 2 Edw. VI.

(e) There was a payment of 5s. 1d. due to the lord of the manor of Maxton from the Priory of Dover, which was referred to him in the grant of that Priory to the Archbishop, anno 29 Henry VIII.

In 1783, this estate consisted of the manor, with its rights and appurtenances, and the farm of Maxton, with the house, buildings, and lands belonging to it, arable, pasture, and down lands, (except 13 acres in lease to the crown,) containing by estimation 100 acres, in this parish.

HOUGHAM.

the Archpriest of Dover, for the term of 21 years, at the yearly rent of 13s. 4d. (b)

PRESENT STATE OF HOUGHAM.

THE parish of Hougham lies upon the high eastern hills of Kent, in a healthy though a very rude and wild country. In the midst of it are two streets, called Church Hougham, and East Hougham; in the former of which the church stands, and at the south-west part of it, a hamlet called West Hougham (i). Great part of this parish is full of small inclosures, interspersed with frequent coppice wood, and much rough ground. The soil is but poor and barren, consisting of either chalk or a red earth, covered with a rotten flint stone, with which the narrow roads here abound. Towards the eastern part of it the ground lies high, being an open unclosed down, (across which the high road from Folkestone to Dover leads northward) quite to the sea-shore, over which the chalk cliffs here rise to a great height; from hence there is a most beautiful prospect over the channel, and the Bologne hills on the coast of France. Near the bottom of these cliffs are three holes, called Lydden Spouts, through which the subterraneous waters empty themselves continually on the beach of the shore (k).

When the plague raged in London in the year 1665, it was brought to Dover, and great numbers died there of the pestilence in that and the following years, for the burial of whom a piece of ground was bought in this parish, on the side of the hill fronting the pier fort, and consecrated for that purpose. It is computed that upwards of 900 of those who died of this pestilence were buried in it, since which it has been constantly known by the name of the Graves:

In the Heraldic Visitation of the co. of Kent anno 1619, is a pedigree of Henry Benger, of Hougham, gent. living at that time, and de-

(b) Augtn. off. Inrolm.

(i) In a will proved in 1484, West Hougham is said to be in the Court of the Prior of Dover.

(k) The belief of the country is, that the waters of the Nailborne, at Drelingore in Alkham, at least four miles distant, communicate subterraneously with these spouts, which increase as the springs heighten by wind and weather. Over these spouts, in the middle of the cliff, are two large square rooms cut out of the chalk, one within the other; they are called the Coining-house, and have a very difficult way to come at them, the cliff here being upwards of 400 feet high.

(l) In the chancel of this church lie buried, several of the families of Hougham, and Malmains; the brasses of whose stones have been long since torn off, though the lines of their portraitures still remain. In the chancel is a monument for William Fyneus, esq; son of Robert, who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Warren, of Dover, gent. he died Jan. 15, 1587, æt. 84. Arms—Vert, a chevron between 3 eagles displayed or, crowned gules, impaling azure, a cross or; in the 1st and 4th quarters, a martlet; in the 2d and 3d, a

CHARITIES.

Thomas Pepper, jurat of Dover, by his will proved in 1574, devised to the use of the poor people for ever, within the parishes of our Lady of Dover and Hougham, one annuity of 40s. by the year; to be paid and distributed equally between the poor of the same parishes, by the churchwardens yearly for ever, for the time being, half yearly, issuing and going out of his manor of Syberstone, and all the lands and tenements thereto belonging, with power to the churchwardens to distrain, &c. which manor and lands are now vested in Phineas Stringer, esq; and the money is distributed to such as do not receive weekly allowance of the parish.

There is a house divided into two small dwellings, inhabited by two persons placed there by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor; but how it came to the parish is not known.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

HOUGHAM is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church is an antient building, but small, consisting of two small isles and a chancel, having neither tower nor steeple, but it has a place for three small bells. It is dedicated to St. Laurence (l), and was part of the possessions of the Priory of St. Martin in Dover, to which it was appropriated by Archbishop Stratford, in the year 1345, and a vicarage endowed in it (m), both which were at the suppression, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, granted with the site of the priory and other possessions of it in exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors, with a reservation of the antient pension from the Prior of 40s. to the Vicar, in manner

His youngest son William succeeded to the estate of the Elmes, which he sold, and settled at Twickham; he died in 1710. Arms—Azure, a fesse or. Several of their children lie buried here.—Another for Robert Breton, esq; he died in 1707. Arms—Azure, a bend between 6 mullets pierced or. as has been frequently more particularly mentioned above. In which state they now continue, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time possessed of the appropriation of this church, with the advowson of the vicarage of it (n). The parsonage is called Little Hougham Court, which with the tythes are held under the Archbishop by the widow of Mr. Nathaniel Walker, of Dover.

This church was valued anno 1384, 8 Rich. II. among the temporalities of the priory, at 16l. 13s. 4d. (o) In 1588, here were 120 communicants, and it was valued at 40l. per annum. This vicarage is valued in the King's books at 6l. 13s. 4d. (p) Archbp Juxon, anno 14 Charles II, in conformity to the King's letters mandatory, augmented this vicarage by indenture with 25l. to be paid by the lessee of the great tythes, which was again confirmed by indenture anno 22 Charles II. (q) The vicar still receives the antient pension of 40s. from the Archbishop. It is now a discharged living of about the clear yearly value of 46l. (r)

BUCKLAND

LIES the next adjoining parish north-west from Hougham. It is written in Domesday, Bochelant, which name it took from the Saxon words, boe or book, and land; meaning, that it was land held by charter or writing, being free and hereditary, and passing by livery and seizin. It is usually called Buckland near Dover, to distinguish it from a parish of the same name neat Faversham, in this county.

A Borsholder for this parish is chosen at the Court Lcet of the manor of Dover Priory.

THE MANOR OF BUCKLAND

was, at the time of taking the survey of Domesday, part of the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Baieux, the Conqueror's half-brother, under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in that record:

Ansfrid ten de epo in Bochelande dimid sohn. & ibi bt. in dnio. 1. car. cu uno villo. Tra. e. 2. car. T. R. E. valeb 20. sol. Qdo recep. 30 solid. modo 40. sol.

it was worth 20 shillings; when he received it 30 shillings, now 40 shillings.

Four years after which the Bishop was disgraced, and all his possessions were confiscated to the crown, upon which this manor was granted to Hamo de Crevequer, whose descendant of the same name died seised of it in the 47th year of K. Henry III. (z) From this family it passed into that of Willoughby, one of whom, Peter de Willoughby, was found by inquisition, taken anno 33 Edward I. to hold at his death in Bokeland, one messuage, garden, and pigeon-house, 43 acres of land, and 31s. rent of assize, of the King in capite, as of the honor of Crevequer, by homage and the service of the 9th part of the half of one knight's fee (a); and Thomas Willoughby died likewise seised of it in the 7th year of K. Edw. II, but the title was not long resident in this name, for in the next reign of K. Edw. III. the Barries, of Sevington, were become possessors of it; for Agnes, wife of William Barrie was found in the 48th year of that reign to die seised of this manor, and 42 acres and three roods of land, and 20 acres of pasture, with their appurtenances, in Bokeland, of the King, by the service of paying one red rose yearly to the King, and that John Alkham was her kinsman and heir (b). After which, the Callards, or Calwards, now vulgarly called Collard, became possessed of it, and continued proprietors for several descents (c); they alienated it at length about the end of Q. Elizabeth's reign to Fogge, who not many years afterwards conveyed it by sale to William Sherman, of Croydon, esq; steward to the Archbishops Abbot and Laud successively, and he possessed it in the year 1656. His heirs at length sold it to John Tedcroft, esq; of Horsham in Suffex, who in 1691 sold it to Edward Wivell, of Dover, from whom it passed with his daughter in marriage to Capt. James Gunman of the same place; and he by will gave it to Christopher Gunman, esq; collector of the customs at

Edward III, wherein mention is made, that the former had purchased lands and houses of John Calward. In later times John Callard, esq; was one of those who accompanied sir Henry Guldeford, of this county, to serve Ferdinand, King of Castile, in his war against the Moors, where for his signal service he had this coat of arms assigned to him and his posterity, by Benolt, Clar. viz. Girony of six pieces or and sable, over all 3 black-moor's heads decouped. THE MANORS OF DUDMANSCOMBE AND BARTON, the former of which, vulgarly called Deadsmanscombe, and the court-lodge of it, Combe-farm (e), is situated in the vale in the southern part of this parish, and the latter in the northern part of it, both were the antient possessions of the Priory of St. Martin in Dover, and they are both entered under the general title of the lands of the Canons of it, in the survey of Domesday, as follows:

And a little further, under the same title: In Bocbeland, Godric holds 1 suling, and there be bas 2 carucates in demesne, and 3 villeins, and 4 borderers, with 1 carucate, and one church. It is worth 6 pounds. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 8 pounds.

Both these manors afterwards continued among the possessions of the Priory of St. Martin, till the final dissolution of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when it was suppressed by the act which passed that year, as being under the clearly yearly value of 200l. and given up, together with all its lands and possessions, to the use of the King and his heirs for ever, but these manors did not remain long in the hands of the crown; for the King by his indenture Nov. 30, for the county of Kent, and a jurat of the Town and Port of Dover. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edward Wivell, of Dover, and dying in 1756, was buried in St. Mary's church in Dover; he left issue Christopher Gunman, esq; collector of the customs of the Town and Port of Dover, who died in 1781, and was buried near his father, and his son James Gunman, of Dover, esq; is the present owner of this estate.

in his 29th year, granted them both, with the scite of the priory and other possessions late belonging to it, in exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors for ever; in which situation these manors both continue, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time entitled to the inheritance of them (f).

A Court Baron is held for the manor of Dudmanscombe.

The manor and court-lodge, with the demesne lands, are demised by the Archbishop on beneficial leases to different persons.

The manor is now demised to Mr. Henry Farbrace and Isaac Mushey Teal, in trust, for the two minor children of Mr. George Farbrace, of Dover, gent. deceased.

The court-lodge and demesne lands are demised to Mr. George Horne, of Buckland.

PRESENT STATE OF BUCKLAND.

THE village of Buckland is built mostly on the northern side of the great London road leading to Dover, to which it extends within less than half a mile. It is a long straggling village, not very pleasantly situated in the valley, at the foot of the northern hills, the river Dour running close along the southern side of it, over which there is a new-built brick bridge.

At the west end of the village is a seat, which some few years ago belonged to Admiral sir John Bentley, knt. who devised it to Mr. William Hills, and his widow now possesses it. On the stream in this village is a corn-mill, and a large well-constructed paper-mill, the manufactory of which was greatly improved and afterwards carried forward by Mr. Paine, the late owner of it. There is here likewise another paper-mill, occupied by Mr. Horne, being a beneficial lease from the Archbp, the works of which have been likewise much enlarged (g). These have considerably increased the population of this parish within these few years, the manufacturers employed in them being very numerous, consisting of men, women, and children, who earn their constant (f) In 1643, Henry Lushington, gent. was lessee under the Archbishop for the manor of Dudmanscomb, at the yearly rent of 6l. 13s. 4d. It was lately held by the family of Hodgson, of Dover, (who bore for their arms—Parted per chevron embattled or and azure, 3 martlets,) from whence their interest passed to Mr. George Farbrace, of Dover, gent. above-mentioned; see Dover Priory below. In 1643, Stephen Mounyn, gent. was lessee under the Archbishop of Barton Manor in this parish, and Gufson, at the yearly rent of 9l. 6s. 8d. Capt. James Gunman, of Dover, is the present lessee of it. daily bread, in making the different sorts of paper at these mills.

In this broad and spacious vale, where the lands are open and uninclosed and mostly arable, is situated Combe-farm. On each side here the hills rise stupendous and romantic, on the upper part of which the country becomes very barren, consisting of small inclosures of much rough ground and coppice wood, on a poor chalky soil.

The fair, which used to be held here on St. Bartholomew's Day, Aug. 24, is now by change of the stile held on Sept. 4, yearly.

In 1765, in digging a bank in this parish, a leaden pot was found, filled with the silver coin of K. Edward II. and III.'s reigns.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.

In this parish was an Hospital for poor leproous persons, begun about the year 1141, upon the solicitation of Osberne and Godwin, two monks of St. Martin's Priory, who subjected it to the disposal of their Prior. It was dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and was intended to consist of 10 brethren, and as many sisters; but their revenue not being sufficient for so many, they were reduced to eight of each. It was dissolved by the act for the suppression of hospitals and chantries, at the beginning of K. Edw. VI.'s reign, who in his 6th year granted the scite of it, with all its lands, revenues, and appurtenances, to sir Henry Palmer, knt. to hold in capite (b). There are not now the least traces left of this hospital, or the chapel belonging to it.

John Bowle, of St. Maries, in Dover, in 1556, died possessed as lessee of premises in Buckland, sometime belonging to this Hospital, part of which was a fulling-mill and seven acres of land, and a meadow of nine acres.

It appears by the copy of a certificate, that this man took down this hospital for the sake of the materials, as well as the chapel of it, without any legal commission for this purpose.

(g) The mills in this parish and Charlton, which belong to the Archbishop, are demised by him at the yearly rent of 5l. 10s. on a beneficial lease, to Mr. Thomas Horne.

(b) Secunda pars orig. ejus an. rot. 103. The revenues of this hospital consisted of several small grants of lands, which lay in Buckland, Exwell, Leeds, Bobbing, Swing field, Deal, and Tilmansstone, and of several annuities from tenements in different wards in the Town of Dover. Rot. Esch. ejus an. pt. 5, rot. 103. See Tanner's Monasticon, p. 213.

These rents seem not to have been sufficient for the maintenance of the hospital, for they always pleaded great poverty.

CHARITIES.

Bartholomew Smithcot, of this parish, by will proved 1523, gave to the church of Buckland, yearly, out of his lands in it 20d. for ever, to be bestowed in bread and drink for the poor people, with liberty for the churchwardens to distrain on non-payment (i).

George Colley, by will proved in 1605, gave 5l. to be put in a stock, for the use and benefit of the poor of this parish for ever. Both these legacies have been lost to the parish almost time out of mind, though there were 20s. paid from the last-mentioned legacy in 1664.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

BUCKLAND is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church, which is exempted from the Archdeacon, is dedicated to St. Andrew. It is a small building of two isles and a chancel, having a small chapel on the south side of it. It has a low pointed tower at the west end (k).

The church of Buckland, as appears by the survey of Domesday above-mentioned, was part of the antient possessions of the Priory of Dover, to which it was appropriated by Archbishop Islip, in the year 1364 (l). In the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, this church was valued at 9l. 6s. 8d. and in this state it continued till the dissolution of the priory, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when an act passing for the suppression of all such religious houses as were under the clear yearly value of 200l. and for giving them to the King, this Priory was surrendered that same year, with all its lands and possessions to the use of the King and his heirs for ever; but they did not remain long in the hands of the crown, for the King granted this church appropriate and the advowson of it, together with the scite and other possessions of the Priory, by his indenture in his 29th year, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors for ever, in exchange, in manner as has been already mentioned above (m), subject nevertheless to the payment of 4l. yearly to the Vicar of this church (n); since which it has remained parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, his Grace the Archbishop being at this time possessed of the appropriation of this church, together with the advowson of the vicarage of it (o).

James Gunman, esq; is the present lessee of this parsonage under his Grace the Archbishop.

In 1588, here were communicants 120, and it was valued at 70l. This church being esteemed a chapel, is not valued in the King's books.

The Archbishop nominates a perpetual curate to it, who receives the above-mentioned pension of 4l. yearly from him. Archbishop Juxon, in conformity to the King's letters mandatory, augmented this curacy, by indenture anno 13 Charles II, with 12l. per annum, to be paid out of the great tythes, and the same was confirmed by indenture again, anno 27 of the same reign (p). It is now of about the clear yearly value of 26l. (q)

There was a portion of tythes, at a place in this parish, called Ottertun, alias Ankerton Dane, which in the 37th year of Q. Elizabeth was in the hands of the crown, and the Queen that year demised it, then in the occupation of Thomas Andrews, for 21 years, to John Browne, at the yearly rent of 15s. (r)

It is now held by James Gunman, esq; by the yearly fee-farm of 15s.

LIES next to Buckland eastward. It is written in Domesday, Carlentone, and usually at present Charlton by Dover, to distinguish it from another parish of the same name near Greenwich, in this county. This parish lies only part of it in the hundred of Bewsborough, in which the church is situated, and the residue of it in Charlton ward, within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, and of the Corporation of the Town and Port of Dover.

The Borsholder, chosen at the manor of Dudmanscombe, in the adjoining parish of Buckland, has jurisdiction over that part of this parish within the hundred of Bewsborough.

There is at present no manor distinguished particularly by the name of the manor of Charlton; the manor of Dover Priory claiming over great part of it without the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports. But that there was in antient times such a manor, is very certain; for it appears, that at the time of taking the survey of Domesday, was part of the possessions of the Canons of St. Martin's Priory in Dover, under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in it :

(w) Vicar likewise of Westcliffe, and St. Margaret's Cliffe.
 (x) And Vicar of St. Margaret's Cliffe.

The Archbishop, strictly speaking, is Vicar of this church, as appropriate Rector of it. For whenever the religious acquired the appropriation of any church, and there was no care taken for the endowment of a vicarage, they either served it themselves, or allowed, with the approbation of the diocesan, a small pension to the vicar who served it.— On the suppression these appropriate churches came into the

Which is: In Beusberg Hundred. Ralph de S. Sansone holds 1 manor as a prebend, called Cerlentine, and it is taxed for 1 suling. There he has 3 villeins, and 4 borderers, with 1 carucate. In the whole it is worth 70 shillings. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 100 shillings. Leuvin held it as a prebend.

In the same parish, William the son of Ogerius holds 1 suling, and there he has 1 villein, and 7 borderers, with half a carucate, and 1 mill of 40 shillings. There a certain Frenchman has 1 carucate. The same William holds 1 church in Dovere of the Bishop (of Baieux), and it pays him 11 shillings. The Canons dispute it. The whole of this is worth 6 pounds. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 12 pounds. Sired held it.

This manor, with the rest of the possessions above-described, continued afterwards with the Priory of St. Martin, till the general dissolution of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when they were granted with the scite of the Priory and other estates of it, in exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors, part of whose possessions it continues at this time. But this estate has long since lost even the reputation of having been a manor; and the manor of Dudmanscombe, the scite of which is in the adjoining parish of Buckland, which was formerly part of the possessions of the above Priory, and was after the suppression granted as above-mentioned to the Archbishop, who claims over a part of this parish, and the waste within it.

The Hospital of St. Mary, usually called the Maison Dieu, in Dover, adjoining to the southern bounds of this parish, was possessed of much land in it, which at the suppression of it in K. Henry VIII's reign, came into the hands of the crown, where these lands remained at the death of K. Charles I; two years after which they were surveyed by order of the state, when it was found that they consisted of 351 acres, of the improved rent of 156l. per annum, but hands of the crown, in the like state as the religious held them, and were again granted in the same state, (generally however with the reservation of the payment of the antient pension to others,) ecclesiastics as well as laymen, who becoming Rectors became likewise Vicars of them, and from that time appointed Curates to serve in their respective churches, with the payment yearly of the antient reserved pensions to them; and this is the general case of all perpetual curacies.

that the whole had been of late enjoyed by the Lieutenant of Dover Castle, at the yearly rent of 12l. 10s. 8d. (y) Besides which, the above Hospital was possessed of other lands in this parish; the particulars of which will be mentioned below, under the account of the Hospital, in Dover.

PRESENT STATE OF CHARLTON.

THE village of Charlton, with the church, is situated in the valley, about two fields northward of the great London road, very near the entrance into the town of Dover; and it extends southward on the other side of that road, and joins Hougham up the Black-horse valley, as it does northward to Guston.

The river Dour, an account of which has already been given above, runs through it eastward, and having turned a corn-mill here (z), continues its course on towards Dover Harbour. Above the village, which is situated in a low flat of pasture ground, the hills rise northward very high. In the vale beyond which, still further northward of Dover Castle, is a wide deep space, called Knights Bottom, from the Knights belonging to the Castle having continually made use of it in former times to exercise their feats of chivalry in. From its situation, and the description of it in antient writers, somewhere about this place seems to have bid fair for having been the Portus Dubris of the Romans, which is corroborated by the anchors and planks of ships having been dug up near this village, not many years since.

There are no parochial charities.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

CHARLTON is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Dover. The church, which is a rectory, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a very small building, consisting of a body, a high chancel, and a smaller one on the south side. It has a low pointed steeple at the west end, in which there is one small bell (a).

Henry VIII, in his 29th year, by the description of the water-mill, with the mill-pond and stream of water belonging to it, and one tenement and garden in Charlton, late in the tenure of Hugh Adam, and lately belonging to the Priory of Dover, to Robert Barkenal, of the King's household, esq; for 21 years, at the yearly rent of 101 shillings. It now belongs to his Grace the Archbishop, and is demised by him, with the mill at Buckland, on a beneficial lease, at the yearly rent of 5l. 10s. to Mr. Thomas Horn.

The rectory of this church was formerly accounted a manor and an appendage to the barony of Cbilbam, and as such, had in earlier times the same possessors. From the family of De Dover, it accordingly descended to Ijabel, wife first of David de Strabolgie, Earl of Athol, and secondly of Alexander Baliol; and by the inquisition taken in the 56th year of K. Henry III, she was found to die seised of the barony of Cbilbam, to which appertained, among others, this church of Charlton, Richard de Dover being her son and heir (b). In the reign of K. Edw. II. Bartolomew de Badlesmere, that great and powerful baron, of Ledes Castle, having obtained a grant of the above barony, possessed this church likewise, and in the 13th year of that reign, having procured the King's licence to found a house of Canons Regular in the parish of Badlesmere, settled this church, among others, as part of its endowment; but by reason of the troubles which quickly afterwards followed, and the Lord Badlesmere being attainted and executed (c), nothing further was done towards carrying his intentions forward, till the 4th year of K. Edw. III, when the King confirmed what had been done towards this foundation, and likewise this church, among others, to it; but for what reason is unknown, the design of carrying it forward fell to the ground, and the several possessions confirmed to it continued in lay hands, as did this church, which, the process and judgment against the Lord Badlesmere having been reversed, was restored to his son Giles de Badlesmere, among the rest of his father's possessions, in the 7th year of that reign. He died, without issue, seised of this church in the 12th year of that reign, leaving Elizabeth his wife, daughter of William Montague, Earl of Salisbury, surviving, who possessed it in dower, and died anno 33 (d) of that reign; upon which Maud, his eldest sister and co heir, on the partition of her estates, entitled her husband John de Vere, Earl of Oxford, to the pos-

How long this church continued in this family, I have not found; but it appears by the Escheat Rolls, that Ralph, Baron of Graystock, died feifed of it in the 6th year of K. Henry V, as did Elizabeth, wife of Ralph Boteler, of Sudeley, in the 2d year of K. Edward IV; from which time till the reign of K. Henry VIII (f), I can give no further account of it; only that John Monins, esq; lieutenant of Dover Castle,

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

DOVER lies at the eastern extremity of Kent, adjoining to the sea, the great high London road towards France ending at it. It lies adjoining to the parish of Buckland, last-described, eastward, in the Lath of St. Augustine and Eastern Division of the county. It is within the liberty of the Cinque Ports, and the jurisdiction of the Corporation of the Town and Port of Dover.

DOVER, written in the Latin Itinerary of Antonine, Dubris. By the Saxons, Dofra, and Dofris. By later historians, Doveria; and in the Book of Domesday, Dover; took its name

(q) From hence, the Romans, in several of their coins, represented Britain as a woman sitting on a high rock, or most probably from the British words, Dufir, signifying water, or Dufirra, high and steep, alluding to the cliffs adjoining to it (p).

It is situated at the extremity of a wide and spacious valley, inclosed on each side by high and steep hills or cliffs (q), and making allowance for the sea's withdrawing itself from between them, answers well to the description given of it by Julius Caesar in his Commentaries.

In the middle space, between this chain of high cliffs, in a break or opening, lies the Town of Dover and its Harbour, which latter, cliff, in the sea, as may be seen in those of Antoninus Pius, and Severus.

before the sea was shut out, so late as the Norman conquest, was situated much more within the land than it is at present, as will be further noticed below.

THE CASTLE.

ON the summit of one of these cliffs, of sudden and stupendous height, close on the north side of the town and harbour, stands Dover Castle, so famous and renowned in all the histories of former times (q), though now it is for the most part a useless heap of ruins. It is situated so exceeding high, that it is at most times plainly to be seen from the lowest lands on the coast of France, and as far beyond as the eye can discern. Its size, for it contains within it 35 acres of ground, six of which are taken up by the antient buildings, gives it the appearance of a small city, having its citadel conspicuous in the midst of it, with extensive fortifications, and many towers around, at proper distances, along its walls. The hill, or rather rock, on which it stands, is ragged and steep towards the town and harbour, southward; but towards the sea, eastward, it is a perpendicular precipice of a wonderful height; being

(q) Leland in his Itinerary, calls it The Maine, strong, and famous Castel of Dover; and in his Poem, styled Genethliason Illust. Eaduerdi Principis Cambriæ, he thus speaks of this Castle:

Itin. vol. ix, p. 9.

(r) Kilburne says, there was a tower here, called Cæsar's Tower, afterwards the King's Lodgings; but these, now called the King's Keep, were built by K. Henry II, as will be further mentioned below; and he further says, there were to be seen here great pipes and casks bound with iron hoops, in which was liquor supposed to be wine, which by long lying had become as thick as treacle, and would cleave like birdlime; salt congealed together as hard as stone; cross and long bows and arrows, to which brags was fastened instead of feathers, and they were of such size, as not to be fit for the use of men of that or any late ages. These, Lambarde says, the inhabitants shewed as having belonged to Cæsar, and the wine and salt as part of the provision he had brought with him hither. And Camiën relates, that he was shewn these arrows, which he thinks were such as the Romans used to shoot out of their engines, which were like to large cross-bows. These last might, no doubt, though not Cæsar's, belong to the Romans of a later time; more than 320 feet high, from its basis on the shore.

Common tradition supposes, that Julius Cæsar was the builder of this castle, as well as others in this part of Britain, but surely without a probability of truth; for our brave countrymen found Cæsar sufficient employment of a far different sort, during his short stay in Britain, to give him any opportunity of erecting even this one fortress (r).

That there was one built here, during the continuance of the Roman empire in Britain, must be supposed from the necessity of it, and the circumstances of those times; and the existence of one plainly appears, from the remains of the tower and other parts of the antient church within it, and the octagon tower at the west end, in which are quantities of Roman brick and tile. These towers are evidently the remains of Roman work, the former of much less antiquity than the latter, which may be well supposed to have been built as early as the Emperor Claudius, whose expedition hither was about or immediately subsequent to the year of Christ 44 (s). Of these towers, probably the latter was built for a speculum, or watch-tower (t), and was used, not only to watch the

and the former might, perhaps, be part of the provisions and stores which K. Henry VIII. laid in here, at a time when he passed from hence over sea to France. But for many years past it has not been known what is become of any of these things.

Others, averse to Cæsar's having built this castle, and yet willing to give the building of it to the empire of the Romans of a later time, suppose, and that perhaps with some probability, it was first erected by Arviragus, (or Arivog, as he is called on his coin,) King of Britain, in the time of Claudius the Roman Emperor, who thought so highly of him, that he gave him his daughter in marriage. Lamb. Peramb. p. 153. Harris's Hist. of Kent, p. 371. Burton on Antonine, p. 186.

(s) The Emperor Claudius, in his 3d consulate, sent over Aulus Plautius, a General of Prætorian dignity, with an army into Britain, and soon afterwards followed himself. Plautius staid near seven years in this island, during which time he reduced this part of Britain into the form of a Roman province, and placed a colony of veterans to secure it, most probably on this hill, before any other forts were built in the interior part of the country; this being the nearest part of Britain to the opposite shore, where it could command the harbour in the receiving of a reinforcement from the Continent, and secure a retreat to it, if necessary, with the assistance of their shipping.

(t) Somner differs from most others in his opinion here, for passing by the octagon tower in silence, he says, that he rather chuses to think that which had been the church or chapel of the castle, either to have arisen out of the ruins of the Roman fortress, or that at least the square tower in the middle of it, between the body and the chancel, fitted with holes on all parts for speculation, to have been the Roman speculum, or watch tower; and that after the Romans were gone, the Christians of succeeding times, designing to accommodate the garrison with a church or chapel, made use approach of enemies, but with another on the opposite hill, to point out the safe entrance into this port between them, by night as well as by day.

In this fortress, the Romans seem afterwards to have kept a garrison of veterans, as we learn from Pancirollus, who wrote his Notitia somewhat later than the time of the Emperors Arcadius and Honorius, viz. before the middle of the 5th century, who, in the description of the Government of Britain, tells us, that a principal officer under the Romans, called Comes Littoris Saxonici, or Count of the Saxon shore, having the guard of this coast from the depredations of the Saxon pirates, had among the troops, under his command, in this part of Britain, a company of soldiers under their Chief, called Præpositus Militum Tungricanorum, stationed within this fortress.

Out of the remains of part of the above-mentioned Roman buildings here, a Christian church was erected, as most historians write, by Lucius, K. of Britain, about the year 161; but it is much to be doubted whether there ever was such a King in Britain—if there was, he was only a tributary Chief to the Roman Emperor, under whose peculiar government Britain was then accounted. (u)

This church was built in honour of Our Saviour for the promotion of Christianity, and no doubt for the use of that part of the garrison in particular, who were at that time the true use of this speculum, and added to it those parts whereof the rest of the chapel then consisted.

The design of the octagon tower is simple, but admirably contrived for its use as a pharos, or watch tower. The base is octagonal without, and a square within, but the sides of the square and octagon are equal, viz. 15 Roman feet, which reduces the wall to the thickness of 10 feet. In this manner it was carried up to the top, which was much higher than it is at present, but it retires inward continually from all sides, with much the same proportion as an Egyptian obelisk. Upon four of these sides are narrow windows handsomely turned with a semicircular of Roman brick, six feet high. The door to it is on the east side, about six feet wide, well-turned over-head, with an arch made of a course of Roman brick and stone alternately, 14 feet high. All the stones of this building are of a narrow scantling, and the manner of the compofure throughout is perfectly the same with that at Richborough. There are first two courses of this brick, which are level with the bottom of the windows; then seven courses of hewn stone, which mount up to the top of the windows; then two courses of brick and seven of stone alternately, to the top. Every window, by this means, reaching to a stage or story. There are five of these stages left, which are visible enough to a discerning eye; though some are stopped up, others covered over, and some have more modern church-like windows put in—the inside might probably have been entirely filled up with a staircase. The height left of this building is 40 feet, and it might have been 20 feet higher originally. The whole number of windows in the side was eight. This tower was cased over most likely in K. Henry V.'s reign, believers of the gospel, and afterwards during the different changes of the Christian and Pagan religions in these parts, was made use of accordingly, till St. Augustine, at the request of K. Ethelbert, soon after the year 597, re-consecrated it, and dedicated it anew, to the use of Christianity, and in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

His son and successor Eadbald, K. of Kent, who during his father's life had been entrusted with the government of this Castle, having at the latter end of his reign renounced the errors of Paganism, founded a College of Secular Canons and a Provost in this church, whose habitations, undoubtedly near it, there are not the least traces of. These continued here till after the year 691; when Widred, K. of Kent, having increased the fortifications, and finding the residence of the religious within them an incumbrance, removed them from hence into the Town of Dover, to the antient church of St. Martin; in the description of which below, a further account of them will be given.

On the removal of these Canons it seems probable, that K. Widred immediately pulled down their college, but the church remained as such for the use of the garrison; and in later times, as appears by the Wills in the Prerogative-office in Canterbury, it came to be esteemed a parochial church, having the district of the Castle as a parish to it, by the name of the Parish of the Blessed Virgin Mary within the Castle of Dover (v). This church had after-for Thomas Erpingham being then Constable, whose arms—2 bars and a canton, are placed on a stone in the north side of it; but this casing is now dropping off, and the old work is again exposed to view. The last use made of this tower was to hold a ring of bells, the largest of which, as appears by the inscription on it, was given by ſir Roger Abboton, constable and warden, anno 4 Richard II. These bells ſir George Rooke begged of Q. Anne to remove to Portsmouth, for which town he was Member in Parliament; and the lead, which covered the tower, being soon after sold for a trifling sum, left this antient building open to the corroding effects of the sea air, and to perish by the violent effects of every winter storm.

(u) It is probable, that at this time there was one Lucius, son of Coilus, who might be a King under the Romans, in Britain, and was in friendship with Marcus Antoninus Verus Cæsar, as may be learned from Archbishop Usher's Primordiæ, chap. iii, p. 39, 40. Baxter, in his Glossary, says, he was a person feigned by the Monks, interpolaters of Bede; nor was there, in the time of Pope Eleutherius, any such Monarch of Britain. As to the epistle sent by that Pope to him, and found in Bede, Spelman thinks it came in with the Conqueror, nor was heard of here before, because of the word, manuteneri, in it. Stillingfleet mentions nothing of it.

(v) In particular, John Fordrede, in his will proved 1501, styles himself of the parish of the B. Mary, in the Castle of Dover; and Giles Love, of Dover, gent. by his will proved in 1519, gave to the high altar of the church of Our Lady, in the Castle of Dover, for his tythes forgotten, 3s. 4d.

Henry VIII.'s reign, when they were removed, and one Chaplain only was appointed in their room, who officiated in it till about the end of K. James I.'s reign, and then the church seems to have been disused (x), and afterwards fell to ruin; the tower between the body and chancel, and part of the walls, are the only remains of it at this time (y).

But to return to the state of the Castle itself, after the departure of the Romans, of which history is silent till the reign of K. Edward the Confessor; though it is not possible to suppose that the Monarchs of the Saxon Heptarchy, and the great and prudent Alfred, or even his successors, should neglect to strengthen this important fortress, by continued additions to it; the former by ditches and intrenchments of earth only, and the latter with fortifications of stones and mortar, to secure the sea-coast and themselves against the cruelties of their inveterate enemies, the Danes (z); who were kept so much in awe of this Castle, that they never once, in their continued ravages of this kingdom, attempted to land, or come within reach of it.

In the time of K. Canute, about the year 1019, Godwin being created Earl of Kent, had

The Chaplain is still appointed, who enjoys the antient salary; but as he never performs any duty, or even resides here, his appointment is made more to answer political than religious purposes; and the inhabitants of the Castle know little farther of him than by name.

(y) There have been several persons of eminence buried in this church, particularly for Robert Asbeton, knt. a man of much eminence, Constable and Warden of the Cinque Ports, who died Jan. 9, 1384; but the stone, having his effigies and inscription in brass, has been long since broken to pieces, and the brass stolen. Sir Richard Malmains, his lieutenant, was buried beside him; but his stone is gone. John Copeldike, lieutenant of this Castle in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, under for Edward Guildford, lies likewise buried here, having had a monument erected to his memory, now gone. On the right-hand side of the south chapel, was buried in a marble coffin, Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, Constable and Warden, who died in 1614. A noble monument was erected over him of great cost and beauty; but by reason of the ruinous condition of this church, the Earl's body, as well as the monument, was by licence removed by the Mercer's Company in 1696, to the Chapel of the Hospital at Greenwich, founded by him, (see vol. i.

most probably the government of this Castle entrusted to him; at least in the year 1051, in K. Edward the Confessor's reign, he appears to have been Governor, and to have made additions to the fortifications of it (a). But about that time, the Earl resenting the King's behaviour, in regard to his complaint of a disturbance, which happened between Eustace, Earl of Bologne, (who had come hither on a visit to the King,) and his followers, and the Townsmen of Dover, in which several were slain on both sides, he was forced to hasten elsewhere, to avoid the King's displeasure at his insolence, who seizing this Castle, shut up Earl Eustace and his followers in it, to secure them against the resentment of the townsmen.

So important was the Castle of Dover accounted at this time, that whoever attempted the conquest of this kingdom, made it the first object of his attention; nor was any progress thought to be made towards it, till the possession of this fortress was first gained:—Thus, when Harold, second son of Earl Godwyn, who had succeeded his father in the government of this Castle, made his expedition into Normandy to Duke William, to induce him to restore his nephew Hacun, the Duke promised it, if Harold would give him his assistance in gaining the crown of England after K. of this history, p. 313) and a tablet was set up on the wall here, giving an account of this removal; but this has been long since broken to pieces, and lies buried among the ruins. A few years since there was likewise a part of a stone here, and these words remaining—PETRUS DE CREONE ET P ANIMA EJUS—and a stone, with the marks of the effigies of a religious, mitred; the brass long since torn away. William Crispe, lieutenant of the Castle, who died in 1576, anno 19 Q. Elizabeth; and afterwards for James Wake in 1632, were both buried in this church. Besides which, in the Wills in the Prerog. off. Cant. mention is made of several persons buried here, and among others, of William Horns, of Dover, buried in 1498, before the B. Cross in it, who gave 6s. 8d. to the reparation of this church. John Randolph, in 1513. John Pakenham, clerk of the Castle of Dover, gent. in 1615, as near to his uncle Mark Pakenham, clerk of the Castle, says his will, as might be.

Behind the ruins of this church is a burial-place for the soldiers, who die in the Castle; very few of whose graves have had any remembrance placed over them.

(z) The works of the interior parts of this fortress seem for the most part to have been made towards the south-east, where the church and oZagon tower stand, by the Romans. Towards the north, adjoining to this, where the keep is, by the Saxons, to which the Normans made great additions; and the exterior parts in general by the Normans and their successors.

of Hastings, in which K. Harold was slain, he marched directly hither, to take possession of this Castle, to which numbers had fled for safety, as to a place then deemed impregnable; but it was surrendered to his mercy, after a feeble resistance, by Stephen de Asburnham, then governor of it, and Allan de Evering, his lieutenant; the former of whom was immediately executed (c). After which, the Conqueror spent eight days here in examining the works, and giving orders for the repairing and strengthening the weak parts, and at his departure left William Peverel governor of it; at which time, as Will. Piſſavenſis, who was the Conqueror's chaplain, writes (d), this place, towards the sea at least, was not so much fortified from art as nature, or a mixture of both; the rock, or cliff, at top being cut with tools of iron into such notches and indentures, so as to resemble and serve instead of walls and battlements, which afterwards decaying, as the cliff, consisting of chalk-stone, crumbled away, other works of stone and wall were erected in their room (e).

But to return;—after the Conqueror had taken sufficient care for the safety of this fortress, and leaving his sick and wounded men in it, he marched towards London, having first received here deputies from the City of Canterbury, to make their submission to him.

Soon after his coronation, the King having intrusted his half-brother Odo, Bishop of Baieux, whom he had made Earl of Kent, with the government of this Castle, which from its strength and importance, was called the lock and key of the kingdom, clavis et repagulum regni, and committed this whole county to his charge, sent him with a strong force for its defence, against any attack which might be made upon it (f). But Odo behaved with such tyranny and op-it, says, this well is reported to be in the north angle of the Keep, or Palace, being now arched over, and the same which Harold, before his advancement to the crown, promised upon oath to deliver up with the Castle to William, Duke of Normandy. The present noted well is in another part of the Castle, in a tower called from it, the Well Tower. Little if any thing is known with certainty concerning the sinking of it; but tradition ascribes it, as well as other works here, to Julius Cæsar—though as there is another well, now arched over, within the Roman camp here, and they had not so large a garrison to require another well out of it, there is little likelihood that it was done by the Romans. Besides this, there are three wells within a few rods of each other, and probably more within the Saxon works, each of them about 370 feet deep. The present well is always shewn to strangers as a great curiosity. The bucket of it holds half a hoghead, which is drawn up by two men in a crane.

pression afterwards, especially when appointed Regent of the kingdom during the King's absence in Normandy, that the Kentish men, finding their complaints treated with insults instead of redress, applied to Eustace, Earl of Bologne, for his assistance, to free themselves and the rest of their countrymen from the oppression of this proud and avaritious prelate; accordingly they concerted a plan to surprize and possess themselves of Dover Castle; for which purpose, the Earl landed with his men in the night-time, but in their approach towards the Castle they were discovered, as they were ascending the hill, by the centinels of the garrison, and whilst they were endeavouring to scale the walls, the besieged made a sudden and unexpected sally, and as the assailants were wholly unprepared for it, the Earl lost many of his best men, some of whom were slain and others driven over the precipice; upon which he retreated to his ships, with such of them as had escaped, and left the Kentish men to the mercy of the Regent (g).

At length, Odo falling under the King's displeasure, was sent prisoner by him into Normandy, and all his possessions were confiscated to the crown (h); upon which the King being persuaded that nothing could be of greater importance to the safety of the realm than this Castle, seized it into his own hands, and immediately fortified it anew, and for the further security of it, put it under an entire new system of government; for which purpose he chose a noble person, his kinsman John de Fiennes, of whose courage and fidelity he had had sufficient proofs, and committed to his custody, not only the government of it, but of the rest of the Ports too, by gift of inheritance, naming him Constable of Dover Castle and Warden of the Cinque Ports (i); and that he might be of suffi-

Mr. Cunningham, in his account of the Rights of Election to Parliament, quotes a grant of the fee of this Castle to Pharamus de Bologia, at the time of the conquest; the purport of it being that Pharamus de B. came in at the conquest, and then obtained the ward of Dover Castle in fee, which he possessed the whole of the Conqueror's reign, and to the time of *K. cient ability to bear the charge of it, he gave him 171 Knights fees and upwards (k) in lands, in order that he should distribute part of them among such other courageous and trusty Knights, as he best approved of, for the defence and preservation of it. Accordingly he made choice of eight others, to whom he liberally distributed in portions, the greatest part of what he had received from the King. The names of these were, William de Albrincis, Fulbert de Dover, William de Arsic, Galfridus Peverel, William Maminot, Robert de Port, Hugh Crevequer, and Adam Fitz-williams; each of these were bound by the tenure of their lands, so given, to maintain 112 soldiers.

THESE LANDS were held in capite by barony, at first of the Constable and of his eight Knights respectively, and afterwards of the King as of his Castle of Dover. Those granted to the Constable made up together the barony, called from thence the Constabularie, and consisted of 56 Knights fees and three quarters, for which he performed ward accordingly; those which lay in this county, were in Ashford, Welles alias Estwelles, Parva Wilmington, Postling, Sellinges, Polton, Blackmanstone, Bonington, Horton, Street, Trienstone, Wilmington, Rucking, Orlanstone, Kenardington, Sillowbridge, and in Woodchurch. The rest were, 13 fees in Essex, seven and a half in Suffolk, and 15½ in Norfolk. The lands which the Constable distributed to his eight Knights were as follows:

Those granted to William de Albrincis, consisted of 21 Knights fees, which were at first held of him as Lord of Folkestone, and afterwards of the King by barony, and were together called the Barony of Averanches, alias Folkestone, which fees performed ward to the Castle for 28 weeks, by the service of 21 soldiers; three of whom were to keep guard for a month at a time in their turn, so that their rotation was completed in the time above-mentioned. These lands lay in Langdon, Swingfield, Folkestone, Hawking, Alkham, Evering, Boynton, Enbrooke, Caseborne, Cheriton, Arderne, Hawkeswell, Lidon, and in Pyrie, all in this county; five fees in Norfolk, and two in Suffolk.

Those to Fulbert de Dover, consisted of 15 fees and a half, which were likewise at first held of him, then of the Earl of Athol, and afterwards of the King by barony, and were together called the Barony of Fobert, which fees performed ward for 20 weeks, by the service of as many soldiers, of whom three kept guard for a month at a time in their turn, completing their rotation in the 20 weeks as above-mentioned. These lands lay at Hurst, and in Chilham, in Esture, Easting, Luddenham, Wicberling, Hugbam, Tapington, Parva Hugbam, Ellesford, and Kingston, all within this county.

Those to William de Arsic, consisted of 18 fees and a half, held first of him, then of Robert de Gray and William de Gardyng, and afterwards of the King by barony, and were together called the Barony of Arsic; which fees performed ward for 24 weeks, by the service of 18 soldiers, of whom three kept guard for a month at a time in their turn, completing their rotation in the time above-mentioned. These lands lay in Cumbe, Buckwell, and Barton, in this county; three fees in Dorset, Wilts, and Oxon, five fees and a quarter in the co. of Lincoln, six fees and a quarter in the co. of Oxford, and one fee in the co. of Surry.

Those to Geoffry de Peverel, consisted of 15 fees, held first of him, and afterwards of the King by barony, and were together called the Barony of Peverel; which fees performed ward for 20 weeks, by the service of 14 soldiers, of whom three kept guard for a month at a time in their turn, completing their rotation in the time above-mentioned. These lands lay in Wrensted and Ashurst, in Wicbling, Sandling, and Akemere, in Solton and Gravesend, in Tbrowleigh, and in Eastling Dei Inimicus, all in this county; one fee in Bucks, one fee in Essex, and two fees in Surry.

Those to Robert de Port, consisted of 12 fees, held first of him, then of John de St. John, and afterwards of the King by barony, and were together called the Barony of Port, which fees performed ward for 24 weeks, by the service of 12 soldiers, of whom two kept guard for a month at a time in their turn, completing their rotation in the time above-mentioned. Richard I, and had married Sybell, daughter and sole heir of Pharamus de Bologne, the son of William, son of Jeffry, brother of Godfry de Bo- logne, King of Jerusalem—the sons of Eustace, Earl of Bologne.

To reconcile these accounts, and the List below, of Constables of Dover Castle, attested by so many authorities, is left to the reader's better judgment.

(k) The total of these fees, as well as the particular number to each knight, are different in the several records; but the difference is so small, as not to be worth notice here.

Hamme, Popeball, Betteshanger, Barfreston, and Bakestons, all in this county; and two fees in the co. of Hertford.

Those to William Maminotb, consisted of 23 fees, held first of him, then of William de Say, and afterwards of the King by barony, and were together called the Barony of Maminotb; which fees performed ward for 32 weeks, by the service of 23 soldiers, of whom three kept guard for a month at a time in their turn, completing their rotation in the time above-mentioned. Those lands lay in Pevington, Estwell, Davington, Cocklescombe, Waldershare, Cowdbam, Breddingherst, Thurnbam, Kerfoney, and Bingbery, all in this county; two fees in Bucks, two fees in Hertford, three fees in Northampton, and two fees in Suffolk and Surry.

Those to Hugh de Crevequer, consisted of five fees, held first of him, and afterwards of the King by barony, and were together called the Barony of Crevequer; which fees performed ward for 24 weeks, by the service of five soldiers, of whom each singly took his month in turn, completing their rotation in the time above-mentioned. Those lands lay in Pirie, Wodnesberie, Ripph, Badlesmere, Soles, in Rokeste, and Westwood, all in this county.

Lastly. Those to Adam Fitzwilliam, consisted of six fees, held first of him, and then of Simon Fitz-Adam, and lastly of the King by barony; which fees performed ward for 24 weeks, by the service of as many soldiers, each entering singly on duty for 15 days in turn, completing their rotation in the time above-mentioned. Those lands lay in Dane, Hartangre, Gravenel, and in Dunca.

Besides these lands, there was a considerable quantity in this county, as well as others, which was held by the tenure likewise of ward to this Castle, for the common defence of it, by which means there was always a garrison of 1000 men in it, for its defence; which service, in like manner as those before-mentioned, was afterwards changed into a payment of money, to be applied to the like purpose. These lands, dispersed in different parts of this county, the reader will find, under the description of those parishes in which they are situated, in the several volumes of this history, being much too numerous to be again particularized here. And the Constable so divided these soldiers, by the months of the year, that 125 were to enter, to perform watch and ward within the Castle, for their several allotments of time, (exclusive of the ward performed by him,) and the rest were to be ready whenever they were commanded on any urgent necessity; and they each of them had their several charges given them in particular towers, turrets, and bulwarks of the Castle, which they were enjoined to build, and from time to time to maintain and repair; in consequence of which, they afterwards bore the names of their respective Captains (l).

And thus, this Castle being well fortified, and furnished with a numerous garrison, from the service of these fees, as well as from those lands held by the service of ward, which were very great and numerous, under a Governor and officers of approved courage and trust, gained the reputation of a most important, strong, and necessary hold, not only among the Princes and Nobility of this kingdom, but with those foreign ones, who made war against this realm; infomuch, that whatever wars or commotions happened afterwards, either foreign or domestic, this Castle was always the chief object to which every one directed his first attention to gain possession of it; so that K. Stephen, in his contention with the Empress Maud, for the crown of England, being well convinced of the use which this Castle would be of to him, never ceased his solicitations to Wakelyn de Maminot, then governor of it, till he had prevailed on him to deliver it up to him (m). After which, to secure the possession of it, his successor, K. Henry II, in 1153, being the year before he ascended the throne, arriving here from Normandy, for the relief of Wallingford Castle, built a new keep, or palace, in this Castle, upon the plan of Gundulph, Bishop of Rochester, and inclosed it with a new wall; and the strength of it was at that time such, that in K. John's reign, when Lewis, Dauphin of France, invaded this kingdom, at the instigation of the Pope and invitation of the Nobility, and had, through terror and the treachery of the discontented Barons, become possessed of most of the castles and forts in the southern parts of England, he esteemed, whatever he had gained, of little account, and himself far from safe, not having become master of this important fortress (n).

For which purpose, he immediately marched hither with the whole of his power, and besieged it vigorously (o); but Hubert de Burgh, being told the contrary; he swore that unless he had, he had not gained a single foot of land in England. Lamb. Peramb. p. 159.

(o) It is said, that the Dauphin cast up a work from the foot of the hill to the gate going into the Castle, to cover his men, which work may still be traced on that side of the hill next the town, and is now called the Port Dyke.

(m) Lamb. Peramb. p. 159. Wakelyn seems to have been terrified to this by the severities exercised on the Governors of those other castles, which had been surrendered to the King.

(n) His father Philip being informed of his son's success, enquired if he had gained possession of Dover Castle, and

Earl of Kent, then Constable of it, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, defended it with such resolution and courage, that the French gave over all thoughts of possessing it, and raised the siege (p). And as Lambarde observes, the delivery of this land from foreign servitude at that time, was entirely owing to the bravery and conduct of this great man (q), who, finding much inconvenience in the antient arrangement for the defence of this Castle, afterwards, with K. Henry III.'s consent, in the year 1263, changed the system of it, and instead of the personal attendance of those, who were bound by the nature of their tenure to defend it, he ordained that they should pay a sum of money (r), to maintain a regular garrison; the land being charged with 10s. for every warder, which new rent was called from thenceforward castle-ward. By adopting this plan, he secured a number of men, who were regularly trained to their duty, and were no longer, as they had been before, ignorant of the service required of them; after which he new regulated the guard and watch, and increased the number of the garrison, and warders; and he influenced the King, by his free charter, in his 11th year, to abolish the custom of forage, due to the Castle (s).

Some years after this, the King being defeated at Lewes in Suffex, in 1264, was compelled by the Earl of Leicester, who had almost all the royal family in his power, to sign an order to the Governors of his castles, to deliver them up to the confederate Barons, and this, among the rest, was taken possession of by them; and being considered as a place of safety, the Earl sent such prisoners to it, as he wished to keep in the greatest security. Among these, was Prince Edward, who was kept a prisoner here for more than eight months, till he was delivered, by order of

An anonymous Chronicler tells us, that Louis, son of Philip, then K. of France, sailed from Calais, where, against his arrival, Eustace Le Moine had well equipped 600 ships and 80 cogs to Thanet in Kent. K. John was at that time at Dover, but as his army was composed of foreigners, who were more attached to Louis, he would not risk a battle; that after Louis had taken many cities and castles, he attempted Windsor, but doing nothing there, he retired in confusion, and after having besieged the Castle of Dover for three years, he at last retired in confusion likewise; that the French fleet was vanquished not far from Dover, Eustace Le Moine, the Admiral, being slain in 1217. See Leland's Coll. vol. i, p. 265.

(p) Hubert de Burgh, as Sheriff of this county, in the 4th year of K. Henry III., fortified this Castle by the King's command. See Madox's Exchequer, p. 254.

(q) See a full account of him and his behaviour here, vol. i. of this history, p. lx. Lamb. Peramb. p. 160.

(r) This service, whilst it was personal, was styled per wardam, and was a tenure of Knights service; but when it became pecuniary, it was styled ad wardam, and was a tenure in free socage.

parliament; but on the King's affairs afterwards becoming more prosperous, the Barons of the Cinque Ports thought it necessary to take charge of the Castle themselves, to secure the prisoners in behalf of the Barons; but Prince Edward marching immediately to the relief of his friends confined here, the Barons capitulated, and delivered it up, with the prisoners in it, to him.

So fully were the nobility of that time persuaded that both the safety and danger of the realm consisted in great measure in this Castle, that when K. Henry III. called over, from beyond the seas, his brother Richard, King of the Romans; they were so jealous of him, that that they would not permit him, nor any belonging to him, to enter within the walls of it (t).

In K. Edward III.'s reign, great improvements were made in the accommodations for the commanders and officers in the castles in different parts of the realm; and it cannot but be concluded, that this Castle, the principal one within it, was not neglected, since several of our Kings and great men in their passage to and from the Continent, as well as at other times, frequently lodged in it; and the former often staid here to transact public business, as may be seen by the various records, dated and signed at this place.

The several succeeding Kings from time to time continued to improve and make additions to the fortification here, in particular K. Edw. IV., by the advice of Lord Cobham, expended 10,000l. in repairing and fortifying the several works, and beautifying the apartments in it. K. Henry VIII., and Q. Elizabeth, again repaired this Castle, at the expence of very large sums (u); and K. Charles I. laid out a great deal of money on the apartments here, to prepare them for the reception of Q. Henrietta-Maria, at her first coming over from France; and here the King met and entertained her, till he went with her to Canterbury, where they were married.

In and before K. Henry III.'s reign, the Constable of Dover Castle, and his men there, used to make captures upon the Kentish men, of straw, hay, vetches, peas, beans, corn, and other like things, by the name of forage, (in Latin, furragium.) till K. Henry III.'s charter, as above-mentioned, which is printed in Decim Script. col. 1880, under his great seal, pardoned and released that custom; and he granted to the Men of Kent, that for the future no such forage should be taken of any man.

It is evident from antient records, that the Constables, Knights, and Sergeants, which were in castles, as well those belonging to the King, as to the Barons, used in former times to exercise a great superiority over the towns near them, as well as the adjacent country. No wonder, says Mr. Madox, that men, who were covered with steel, should domineer over Burgesses and Peasants, the armed over the unarmed; the former making captures upon the latter of hay, corn, beer, and other things, under the denominations of prize, tyne of castle forage, &c.

The regulation for the government of this Castle, made by Hubert de Burgh, in K. Henry III.'s reign, continued for the most part in force, till that of K. Henry VIII, in the 14th and 15th years of which, an act passed, that such manors, as were formerly holden of this Castle, should be holden of the King; and in the 32d year of it, another act passed, for altering both the place, and the penalties of the non-payment of the Castle-guard rents. For being before payable only at the Castle, and being doubled perpetually for every default, it was now enacted, that the rents should in future be paid into the King's Exchequer at Westminster, on the day of St. Simon and St. Jude, or within 15 days after, and the forfeitures, or sursize as it was called, should be the rent doubled only for once, and further, that 160l. should be paid quarterly to the Constable of this Castle, by the King's Receiver-General, for the stipend of the officers and soldiers in garrison (v). This act most probably gave the finishing stroke to Hubert's former regulations, after the most part of them had continued in force for near 300 years, and from this time may be dated the beginning of the decay of this once important fortrefs (w).

So late as the civil commotions of K. Charles I.'s reign, this Castle attracted the attention of the leaders of both parties, and whilst the one endeavoured to keep, the other strove as constantly to gain the possession of it; but it was wrested out of the King's hands, being taken in 1642 by surprize, in the night, by one Drake, a merchant, and a zealous partizan for the Parliament (x).

Drake, who was a merchant, had formed a plan to besiege this fortrefs, and Aug. 1, 1642, was the time fixed for putting his design in execution. Every thing being prepared for the purpose, he, with ten or twelve men, by the assistance of ropes and scaling ladders, reached

(v) And it was further enacted, that the Constable should survey and control the Keepers and chief officers of the castles, block-houses, and bulwarks of Kent and Suffex, and all officers, soldiers, and munitions in them.

The establishment and pay of this garrison in 1682 was, the Lord Warden 500l.—the Lieutenant of the Castle and Deputy Warden 182l. 10s.—Upper and Under Porter, and eight Gunners, 121l. 13s. 4d.—In all, in gross money, 803l. 3s. 4d.

(w) There were at this time in this Castle, a Commissary, who held his court here; a Lieutenant; Marshal; a learned Steward, and Clerk of the Exchequer; (for in this Castle, there was an office of Exchequer;) a Gentleman Porter; four Yeomen Porters; a Sergeant at Arms; Boder;

the top of the high cliff, with their muskets, undiscovered. Drake was probably well acquainted with this part of the Castle, and knew that it was left unguarded, as it was thought inaccessible from the side next the sea. Having reached the summit unmolested, they immediately proceeded to the post where the centinel was placed, and having secured him, they threw open the gates, and the garrison being few in number, and in the confusion of the night, concluding he had a strong party with him, the officer on command surrendered up the Castle to them. Drake immediately dispatched messengers to Canterbury, with the news of his success, and the Earl of Warwick being there, he sent him 50 men, and the city 70, to defend the Castle in future (x).

The King having lost this fortrefs by an insufferable neglect, by which the reputation of the Loyalists suffered greatly, immediately attempted to recover it again, and sent a general officer with a force to besiege it; but the Parliament sending a superior force, the siege was raised, and the Parliament afterwards kept possession of it.

Nothing of material consequence, worthy of notice, has happened of late years to this Castle, which has been from time to time repaired by government, as occasion has required, excepting that a bastion of earth was erected on the height of land, at the north-west extremity of the Castle, to the landward, to command the neighbouring country and the approach from it, by direction of William, Duke of Cumberland, who in 1745 surveyed this Castle, and ordered, at the same time, a sufficient number of barracks to be built, to contain a regiment of soldiers, of which, together with the several warders and inferior officers under the Constable and Lord Warden, the garrison at present consists; and though it is now little more than a venerable and majestic heap of old and useless buildings of little or no consequence, yet it is astonishing, what exaggerated ideas our opposite neighbours on the Continent have in general, that Dover Castle is at this time an exceeding strong and almost impregnable fortrefs (y).

Serjeant of the Admiralty, who was likewise the Marshal's Deputy; Serjeant of Arrest; Serjeant of Artillery; a Serjeant to serve process for the Castle-guard Court; and besides these, an Armourer, Smith, Plumber, Carpenter, two Warrenners, and a Chaplain Priest, whose house was called Cocklice; all of whom had their particular offices. See Lamb. Peramb. p. 161.

(x) See Rushworth, vol. v, p. 783. In the year 1648, an ordinance of parliament passed for making the Governor of Dover Castle Lieutenant of it. See vol. viii, p. 1293.

(y) The late Master-General of the Ordnance began in the year 1794, great preparations for considerable repairs and alterations in the Castle, but to what purpose is not known.

Dr.

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

Dr. Stukeley in 1724 visited Dover Castle, and says, he beheld with the highest regret this most noble and venerable fortress, once esteemed the key of Britain, which had at different times saved the kingdom from conquest and slavery, then become a common prey to the people belonging to it. In the then late wars with France, there had been kept 1500 prisoners in the great castle, or King's keep; but within the space of a twelvemonth, they had carried away most of the timbers and floors, disabling it even for that use.

As to a more particular description of the present state of this Castle, it consists of an amazing congeries of walls, ditches, mounts, and all the imaginable contrivances of former times, to render it impregnable. After ascending the first hill, which is natural and immense, you come to the outer gate, before which is the draw-bridge, over a large ditch. On the right hand, as you enter, are the Constable's and Lieutenant's lodgings, and the armory of small arms; and on the left, the Porter's lodge. In the apartments of this gate are shewn, two old keys, an old sword, said to be Cæsar's, but probably a sword of state or office; two horns, one of which is a heavy brass one, with an inscription. About the gate are a number of modern barracks. Hence you ascend another hill and bridge, over the second foss, leading to the inner court, in the centre of which is a square tower; the walls near 20 feet thick, with a small tower at each corner, first built by K. Henry II, and rebuilt afterwards of hewn stone, being entered up by steps on the south side, and used as barracks. The stairs wind round two sides of the Tower, under several magnificent arches, and the landings are adorned with Saxon arches in the wall (z). The Court is surrounded by a stone wall and towers, within one of which, called the well tower, is the noted well, called Cæsar's well, and a large reservoir. Hence you pass through several ruined gates and works to the south-east point of the hill, where, on an eminence, within a circular work, stand two of the oldest buildings in England,

(z) See some observations by Mr. King, on the dispositions in the building of this ancient tower, with a plan of it, in his Dissertation on ancient Castles, printed in the Archæologia, vol. iv, p. 380, 393, et seq.

(a) See above.

(b) Kilburne says, there was in his time remaining in this Castle, a curious brass piece of ordnance, near 24 feet long, called Basilisco, reported to be given by the Emperor Charles V. to K. Henry VIII; perhaps a mistake for the above.

See a description of the present state of this Castle, in Gough's late edition of Camden's Britannia, which the reader may compare with the above.

(c) Mr. Lyon, in his account of this prison, has given a the shell of the first Christian church, and the Roman pharos; both built of Roman bricks, intermixed with flints and rude stones; the arches entirely brick, of which and the rude stones the corners are formed. The church is in the form of a cross, with a square thick tower in the centre; the north porch in the Saxon style. The Roman pharos, which is an octagon, joins the west end of it. The bricks, of which it is built, are some of a bright red, with the blue flinty grit in the middle; others are of a cream-colour, or white, all of the same dimensions, except some of the latter, near the ground, on the south side, near three feet long, of the same thickness, marked with striae, or flutings, straight or chequered, strongly glazed, and having more flint in their composition (a). The Castle has two Sally-ports with barbicans, and 13 towers. The keep, as already mentioned, has been much damaged by the French prisoners. Much of the south-west wall falling down in 1771, was repaired at the expence of the round or mill tower. The cliff, on the south-east side, is 320 feet perpendicular; on the summit of which, lies a beautiful piece of brass ordnance, called Queen Elizabeth's Pocket Pistol, 24 feet long, cast by James Talkys, of Utrecht, anno 1544, and adorned with emblematical figures and the Arms of England; it carries a 12-pound ball, and was made a present to the Queen from the States of Holland (b).

There is a prison in this Castle, under the custody of an officer, under the Warden of the Cinque Ports, called the Bodar of Dover Castle, who is likewise a Sergeant at Arms. By virtue of his office, he has power from the Warden to take within his peculiar jurisdiction, crown and other debtors under an arrest, and to confine them in safe custody in a prison, made in Fulbert de Doure's tower (c).

The north turret of the keep of Dover Castle is 465.8 feet above low-water mark, spring tide, and 91.9 feet above the ground on which it stands; and yet the top of the keep itself is lower than the land to the south-west by west and north-west of the Castle (d).

The limits of Dover Castle appear antiently to melancholy description of it. He says, there are but two rooms in this building, for the confinement of prisoners of all sorts, in which they are obliged to eat and sleep, and in which it has so happened, that different sexes have been locked up in the same apartment. They have not the least outlet to perform the common occasions of nature, or to breathe a little fresh air. To add to the horrors of this jail, there is no allowance whatever for the unfortunate prisoner to subsist on; so that if he has not a trade to work at, or a supply from the benevolence of others, he may be left to starve in misery and wretchedness.

(d) Its latitude is 51° 7'—47. 7. N. Its distance from the spire of the church of Notre Dame, at Calais, is 26 M. O P. 10 R. and from Dunkirk, 46 M. O P. 24 R. which measures have been a parochial district of themselves, by the name of the parish of St. Mary, as has been already mentioned above; and they certainly were a jurisdiction within themselves, exempt from any other; but from neglect, and the trouble arising from the exercising of these privileges, those antient franchises have been for some time past disused, and both the civil and military powers have been frequently exercised within them, independent of any control from the Constable of the Castle.

Among other liberties and franchises belonging to the office of Constable of this Castle, he now claims, as such, to have a right of warren, and to be lord paramount over the manors within a certain district of land, called THE WARREN; in which he appoints gamekeepers and warreners, to preserve the game. The bounds of the warren, as settled in 1676, were as follows:

From the Cross-way at Charlton, leading from the river, strait along the Sandwich road from Pinam, and so to Maidensole; thence to Studolph, along the way called the Warren way, and so directly to Betsbanger-mill, leaving Betsbanger-house to the left hand; thence to Updown in Eastry parish; thence to Ham-bridge, and so to Word-mill, and thence the direct way to St. Bartolomew's Hospital; thence a little beyond the hospital, on the right hand, over a stone bridge, leading over a river, or water-course, into a lane, coming out upon the highway between Sandwich and Deal, near the place where two or three windmills formerly stood, and thence pointing over the marshes down to the sea-side. The warren extends to the river running through Dover, as far as Charlton-bridge; and all the lands within the above bounds to the cliff and sea-shore are within the said warren.

In an apprehension of an invasion, some years ago, as I was informed by a late Surveyor-General of the Ordnance, this Castle, as a place of some consequence, was well garrisoned, the commanding officer of which, upon a minute inspection of the several parts of the Castle, was convinced in his own mind, that an opening he had found in it, was the entrance of a subterraneous passage, which was continued to some distance without the walls of it; upon which the Surveyor-general was immediately sent down to see into it, and a number of workmen were employed, who, after clearing away the rubbish, and gaining an entrance, found the cavity opened wider and wider as they penetrated further into it, till at the length of 20 or 30 yards they could walk six or eight men abreast, figures are taken from Gen. Roy's curious papers, in the Philosophical Transactions, describing his method of measuring but then they came to the solid natural chalk rock; and after some fruitless endeavours to penetrate further, the work was given up, and the commanding officer was fully satisfied of his mistake.

In the 50th year of K. Edw. III, the Commons of the county of Kent complained in parliament against the Officers of the Castle of Dover, for arresting them by their catchpoles, to answer before them whereunto they were bound; to which it was answered, that the officers should have no jurisdiction out of the fee of the Honor and Castle of Dover, nor should make any process by copies out of the Libertie of the Cinque Ports. And again, in the 13th year of K. Richard II, the Commons in parliament, by their petition, required, that the Constable of Dover should hold no foreign plea done in Kent, unless the same concerned the ward of the Castle; whereunto was answered, that sith the same touched the King's inheritance, the King would fend for his Ministers of the Castle, and take order therein. And again, anno 2 Henry IV, among the petitions of the Commons, was one, that the Constable of Dover might be certainly limited, so as they hold plea of no matters done out of the Castle, and the land belonging thereto; to which was answered, that the Castle should enjoy their liberties duly used. In the next parliament, anno 4 of the same reign, the Commons of the county of Kent made complaint against the Constable, as in the last parliament; when the answer was, that the King's Council, upon sight of the old liberties, should have power to take order therein; and next year they made the like complaint, and had the like answer (e).

Whatever further relates to the history of this Castle must be sought for elsewhere; for there is hardly a record now remaining here of the great number of curious ones formerly preserved in it; for the antient records of the Ports, and the rolls of the Court of Shepway, are said to have been removed hither as to a place of safety, when that court fell to decay. Where to fix the cause of their destruction, perhaps, may not be difficult, though it may be said to have happened through ignorance, or neglect, rather than through design. However that may be, the shameful loss of them has been owing, according to Dr. Stukeley, who visited the Castle in 1724, as he was assured by the person belonging to it, to their being deposited in the King's keep here, where, by the rains coming through the roof, by neglect of repair, the greatest part of them were destroyed; but I have been assured, by a respectable inhabitant of Dover, far advanced in life, who lately died in 1790, who affirmed, that within memory of antient persons, whom he had conversed with, in order to clear out one of the apartments above, for the use of the Lieutenant of the Castle, there was removed into the arch, under the gateway, at the entrance of the Castle, a large quantity of papers and parchments, being the antient records of it. These were left here without any care taken of them; many of them perished from the dampness of the vault, and others were purloined at the pleasure of whosoever would take them; and there has not been for many years a single writing of them left (f).

A LIST OF THE CONSTABLES OF DOVER CASTLE, AND WARDENS OF THE CINQUE PORTS.

GODWYNE, Earl of Kent, was Governor of Dover Castle in the reign of K. Edward the Confessor, and died in the year 1053 (g).

Harold, second son of Earl Godwyne, succeeded his father in 1053, and to the crown of England in 1066, in which year he was slain at the fatal battle of Hastings (b).

Bertram de Afburnham was, on K. Harold's accession to the crown, appointed by him Governor of this Castle; but was put to death that year by the Conqueror, upon his taking possession of this Castle immediately after the above battle.

William Peverel was, on the Conqueror's departure hence, intrusted with the temporary government of this Castle; but he continued in it but a very short time.

Odo, Bishop of Baieux, the Conqueror's half-brother and Earl of Kent, was not long afterwards made Governor by him; being the first permanent office of power and trust, which the King conferred on any one after his coronation (i).

John de Fiennes was made Constable of this Castle, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, by K.

(f) Darelle, in his History of Dover Castle, says, that the records in the Clopton tower, which was assigned to the Treasurer for the keeping of them, were very serviceable to him in his compiling the history of this Castle; and that they would have been more so, had they not been doomed to destruction by one Levenisbe, out of spite to Captain John Monins, whose competitor he had been for the Lieutenancy of it. From these accounts we find, that through carelessness and envy, these records have been at different times destroyed, and we are left to collect the scattered and imperfect memorandums of the Castle and Cinque Ports, from historians, and such manuscripts as have by good chance been disposed of elsewhere.

John de Fiennes, his son, succeeded; but was removed by K. Stephen, for taking part with the Empress Maud, upon which the King resumed these offices (m).

William Marshal, Master of the Revels to the King, was next appointed by him; but being taken prisoner by the Empress, she placed in his room, anno 4 K. Stephen, Richard, Earl of Ewe, was made Governor of it (p).

Eustace, Earl of Bologne, only son of K. Stephen, succeeded him; and dying in the 19th year of that reign (q), Henry de Essex, Baron of Raleigh, Constable of England, and Hereditary Standard-bearer, was made both Constable of this Castle and Warden of the Cinque Ports; but by a misbehaviour against the Welsh, in the 10th year of K. Henry II, anno 1163, he forfeited all his high offices, as well as all his possessions (r).

Simon de Sandwich was Constable and Warden in that reign (s); as was Henry de Sandwich; after whom

Alan de Fiennes, a descendant of John de Fiennes above-mentioned, was, as such, restored by K. Henry II. to these offices, and was succeeded in them in the next reign of K. Richard I. (t) by his eldest son,

James de Fiennes, who was the last of this family who inherited them (u); for in his room, Mattew de Clere was appointed by K. Rich. I. He imprisoned, in this Castle, Geoffry, Archbp of York, the King's brother, at the instance of

Hugh de Windlesore, Oct. 31, in the 8th year of that reign (d), and was April 13, next year, succeeded by

Sir Geoffry de Sburland, as he was next year (d) by William de Averencbes, to whom the King, March 14, in his 10th year, granted the Wardenship of the Cinque Ports; joining with him, in that office, Tergufius, Provost or Mayor of Dover (d).

Hubert de Burgh above-mentioned, then Earl of Kent, who was become the greatest and most powerful subject of that time, had in the 12th year of that reign, among other offices of trust, granted to him for his integrity and eminent services, the custody of this Castle again committed to him, and the Port of Dover likewise,

But in the 16th year of that reign, losing the King's favour, he was removed from these offices, among others, which he held at that time (f); being succeeded in these, of Constable and Warden, that year, by

Stephen de Segrave, who was displaced the same year (g); and

Symon Hoese was appointed Constable in his room (h); who was succeeded before the end of it by Bertram de Criol, who held it from the feast of St. Michael that year, to the same feast in the 17th year of it (h).

Roger Northwood succeeded, on June 9, to both these offices (q).

Nicholas de Moels succeeded him in January that year, being Sheriff for this county in the March following (q), at which time he probably resigned these offices; for Richard de Grey, of Codnor, was made both Constable and Warden, on July 28, in the 42d year of K. Henry III, and the next year had his commission of Constable renewed, by patent (r); but he was before the end of that year displaced by the great Barons, as unworthy of his trust, upon the report of Hugh Bigod, Justice of England, whom they had sent to him; who took the custody of this Castle and all the Ports, out of his hands.

Hugh Bigod was younger brother of the Earl of Norfolk; he kept the custody of this Castle till next year, when he resigned both these offices, as well as the Chamberlainship of Sandwich (s).

Robert Waleran was made Constable, May 3, in the 45th year of K. Henry III, and continued so in the 47th year of it (t). After him this office was supplied by Henry Braybrooke (u).

Edmund and Robert de Gascoyne were made joint Constables in the 47th year of that reign (v); and that year, by the King's command, delivered it up (v), July 18, to

Henry, Bishop of London; as he did two days afterwards (v) to

Walter de Bersted, who was made both Constable and Warden (v); but he held them likewise but a very short time, for in the same year

It is difficult to ascertain the names and succession of the Constables and Wardens in these unsettled times; for sometimes the King, and at other times the Barons, and then again the Parliament, as they each became superior in power, placed and displaced these officers continually and frequently within a few weeks, and even a few days of one another.

Henry Montfort, son of Simon, Earl of Leicester, who was made both Constable and Warden, by patent, on May 8, that year (y); and he was likewise Chamberlain of Sandwich: all which offices he surrendered up in the 48th year of that reign (z). Upon which

Roger de Leyborne was appointed Warden of the Cinque Ports, by patent, on Nov. 26, that year (a), and had a new appointment next year. In the 50th year of that reign, he had the guardianship of the coast of Kent against the inhabitants of the Cinque Ports, who then took part with the Barons against the King; and the Sheriff was ordered to reimburse him what money he had laid out in that service (b); at which time he surrendered up both these offices to

Edward, Prince of Wales, afterwards K. Edward I (c), who continued Constable and Warden till he ascended the throne, during which time he first made Henry de Cobham, of Cobham, his Deputy (d), afterwards Roger de Leyborne, then Roger Beling, and lastly sir Stephen de Penchebster, who continued so till the King's accession to the throne (e); when he appointed the same

Robert de Kendale was appointed, by patent, Nov. 14, anno 1 Edward II, both Constable and Warden (p), and continued so in the 6th year of that reign (q).

Robert de Kendale was again Constable and Warden in the 9th year of the same reign (s).

Sir John Devereux, Knight of the Garter, was appointed Constable and Warden, by patent, Jan. 4, anno 11 Ric. II (z), and held both offices in the 15th year of that reign (a).

Henry de Cobham, son of Reginald above-mentioned, was next Constable and Warden; and died the same year, anno 15 Richard II (b).

John, Lord Beaumont, (in Latin, de Bellomonte) was next year, anno 16 Richard II, made both

Edward, Duke of York and Albermarle, son of Edmund de Langley, Duke of York, was again appointed Constable and Warden, in the 20th year of that reign (d); and was succeeded next year by John Beaufort, Marquis of Dorset, who was appointed to both those offices, on Feb. 5, in the 21st year of that reign (e). He was succeeded, on the King's death, by

Sir Thomas Erpingham, Knight of the Garter, who, in the 8th year of K. Henry IV.'s reign, caused a survey to be taken of the decayed towers and buildings in this Castle, to have them repaired. He held these offices till the 11th year of that reign (f); when

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

Thomas Fitz-alan, Earl of Arundel, was made both Constable and Warden in the 1st year of that reign; and died in the 3d year of it (b).

Humphry, Duke of Gloucester, fourth and youngest son of K. Henry IV, was made both Constable and Warden, by patent, Jan. 20, in the 7th year of K. Henry V, and continued so till the end of that reign (i), and in the next reign of K. Henry VI, till the 24th year of it (k).

Sir James Fienes, Lord Say and Seal, was made Constable and Warden, by patent, on Feb. 24, in the 25th year of K. Henry VI, to him and his heirs male, in like manner as his ancestor, John de Fienes, had them granted by William the Conqueror; and at the same time he had the grant in like manner of Castle-ward service, of 200*l.* per annum, out of the customs and all forfeitures and wreck of the sea, from the east end of the Isle of Thanet to Beaucliffs in Suffex, and the office of Admiral within the Ports and their Members (l). He afterwards, in the 28th year of that reign, granted all his right and title to these offices, to Humphry Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, who that year took possession of them, holding them in like tail (m). He was slain in the battle of Northampton, in the 38th year of that reign, fighting with much bravery on the King's part; upon which

Edmund, Duke of Somerset, was appointed to them (n), and afterwards Simon Montfort (o); upon the accession of K. Edward IV, Richard Nevill, the great Earl of Warwick, was, in the 1st year of that reign, appointed Constable and Warden (p); but afterwards again taking part with K. Henry VI, he was displaced, and

Sir John Scott, knt. was, in the 10th year of that reign, appointed in his room (q), he held these offices but a very small time; for the same year

William Fitz-alan, Earl of Arundel, was made Constable and Warden (r), and he held these offices till the accession of K. Edward V, when

Richard, Duke of Gloucester, the King's uncle, afterwards K. Richard III, held them (s); but on his assuming the crown, he appointed

Henry Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, who being attainted (t) in the 1st year of that reign, William Fitz-alan, Earl of Arundel, above-mentioned, was appointed in his room, by patent, Oct. 23, that year, and held them till his death, which happened in the 3d year of K. Henry VII (u); when

Sir William Scott, son of sir John Scott, knt. who was Comptroller of the King's Household, a Privy Counsellor, and Deputy Governor of Calais, was appointed in his room (v). After which,

Henry, Duke of York, the King's younger son, afterwards K. Henry VIII, was made Constable for life in the 8th year of that reign, and Warden during pleasure (w), by writ, dated at Canterbury, April 5; and in the 10th year of his reign, the King renewed the patent, with the addition of the Castle-guard and other services (x); but the Duke resigned them both in the 20th year of that reign; for

Sir Edward Poynings, Knight of the Garter, son and heir of Robert, a younger son of Robert Lord Poynings, was that year appointed both Constable and Warden, which commission was renewed by K. Henry VIII, on his accession to the crown (y), and he was sworn in at Shepway, being a man much in favour with both these princes; but he held these offices for that year only, for

Sir George Nevill, knt. Lord Abergavenny, was appointed to them in the 2d year of that reign (z); and he held them till

Sir Edward Poynings, Knight of the Garter, was again appointed to them, by patent, May 17, anno 5 Henry VIII (a); and he held them till the 13th year of it, when Sir Edward Guldeford, Knight of the Garter, was both Constable and Warden in the 13th year of K. Henry VIII (b).

George Boleyn, Viscount Rochford, was made both Constable and Warden. He was beheaded in the 28th year of that reign (c); upon which Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Richmond, the King's natural son, was that year appointed to them. He died that same year (d).

Arthur Plantagenet, Viscount Lisle, natural son of K. Edward IV, on his death succeeded to these offices; but falling under the King's displeasure, he was, in the 33d year of that reign, committed to the Tower (e). Before which, however,

Sir Thomas Cheney, Knight of the Garter, was, in the 31st year of that reign, made both Constable and Warden, and continued in these offices till the last year of Q. Mary's reign (f); when

Sir William Brooke, Lord Cobham, was made both Constable and Warden, and continued so at the Queen's death. On the accession of Q. Elizabeth, his patent for both these offices were renewed; and he was made Chamberlain of the Queen's Household. He continued in office till his death in the 39th year of that reign (g); when

Henry, Lord Cobham, his son and heir, was made Constable and Warden in his room, and held these offices till the 1st year of K. James, when he was found guilty of treason, and his estates were confiscated; but his life was spared, and he lived many years afterwards in great misery and poverty, and died in 1619 (h). Upon his disgrace,

Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, younger brother of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, was appointed both Constable and Warden, in the 1st year of K. James I (i). He died in 1614, anno 13 of that reign, and was buried in the church of this Castle, whence his body was afterwards removed to Greenwich, as has been further mentioned above.

On his recovery, he set sail for England in a pinnace, supposing England to have been conquered, and that he should immediately be put in possession of this Castle; without further intelligence of

Edward, Lord Zouch, of Haringworth, was made Constable and Warden on his death, and resigned them both in the 21st year of that reign (k), in favour of George Villers, Duke of Buckingham, who was stabbed at Portsmouth, by Felton, in the 23d year of that reign (l); after which they were put into commission, and continued so, until Theophilus Howard, Earl of Suffolk, was appointed to them for life, by patent, July 24, 1628, anno 3 Charles I (m).

James Stuart, Duke of Richmond, succeeded him in both these offices, in the 16th year of K. Charles I, being appointed, by patent, June 9, for the term of his life; but he seems never to have been sworn into them (n).

Robert, Earl of Warwick, was appointed to these offices; but his patent was repealed by ordinance of Parl. in the year 1648 (o). After which

The Council of State was ordered to execute them under the parliament; after which they were put into commission, and

Colonels, John Lambert, John Desborough, and Robert Blake, executed these offices; but another commission was afterwards granted to Charles Fleetwood, and the above-mentioned John Desborough.

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

Prince George of Denmark, husband of Q. Anne, afterwards held them; and was succeeded on his death, Oct. 28, 1708, by Lionel Cranfield Sackville, Earl of Dorset, made Constable and Warden, in December, in the year 1708. He resigned these offices in 1713, and in his room, James, Duke of Ormond, was appointed that year, anno 12 Q. Anne, and he held them till the accession of K. George I, when

Lionel, Earl of Dorset, was again appointed to these offices of Constable and Warden; but he resigned them in 1717, and John Sidney, Earl of Leicester, was appointed to them in his room, and he continued Constable and Warden until the accession of K. George II, when

Lionel before Earl, but then Duke of Dorset, having been so created in 1720, was again re-appointed to these offices; and on July 5, 1757, had a renewal of his patent, with a grant of them for the term of his life. He died in 1765, and in his room,

Robert Darcy, Earl of Holderness, was that year made both Constable and Warden, for life. He died on May 16, 1778; upon which

Frederick North, Lord North, K.G. afterwards Earl of Guildford, was appointed to these offices, and was confirmed in them for life, by patent, April, 1782, anno 22 George III. He died on Aug. 5, 1792, and was succeeded by

The Right Honourable William Pitt, who was appointed, by patent, dated August 18, 1792, both Constable and Warden, and was sworn into office at Dover; and he continues at this time both Constable of Dover Castle and Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports.

OF THE OFFICE OF WARDEN OF THE CINQUE
PORTS.

THE office of Warden of the Cinque Ports, is of high honour, as well as trust, as he is at the same time both Chancellor and Admiral of the Cinque Ports, the two antient towns, and their Members (b), and his office has been for a long time consolidated with that of Constable of Dover Castle, that he may have a strong post under his command within the Ports, and an honourable residence within them. He is usually styled LORD Warden, not only from the eminence of his trust, but from its having been held at most times by nobility, and sometimes by princes of the blood royal, and none below a Knight, and not of the King's Council, ought to hold it.

(a) And one of the Judges of the Admiralty of the Cinque Ports. 3 pars orig. anno 1, rot. 43.

(b) In his patent, he is styled Constable of Dover Castle, Warden, Chancellor, and Admiral of the Cinque Ports, the two antient towns, and their members.

After

After the Roman government was established in Britain, Kent was under the governor of that part of it, called Britannia Prima; but the sea-coast, which they termed Littus Saxonicum, the Saxon shore, had, (like the opposite shore from the Rhine to Xantoigne,) a peculiar governor, from the time of Dioclesian, called by Marcellinus, Count of the sea-coast; and in the Notitia of Pancirollus, Comes Spectabilis Littoris Saxonici, whose particular business it was, to guard the coast, and to fix garrisons at convenient places on it, to prevent the plunders of the barbarians, especially of the Saxons, who heavily infested Britain; for which purpose he had under him 2200 foot, and 200 horse (c). His residence being usually in this county, but always in some place on the southern coast of Britain (d). But after the departure of the Romans from hence, we read nothing further about this officer, or any other, who supplied his place, and most probably it was the want of such a one, that occasioned the British coasts soon afterwards to be insulted so continually by pirates from abroad. During the time of the Saxon heptarchy, of course there could be no such officer, to take care of the ports and towns upon the sea-coast; for the Saxons themselves, who, in former times, were most to be dreaded for their ravages, were then become masters of Britain, and had divided it into kingdoms among themselves; and three of their kingdoms being placed along the south-eastern, southern, and south-western parts of what was formerly called the Saxon shore, each King took care of his own coast, and no one person could be appointed to govern the whole. But after England had become an entire monarchy, the succeeding Kings of it were necessitated to fit out from time to time mighty fleets of shipping, to encounter their common enemies, the Danes; towards which the several ports along this shore so often contributed, and were of such continued service, that in K. Edward the Confessor's days, five of them, viz. Hastings; Hythe, Romney, Dover, and Sandwich, afterwards called the Cinque Ports, were rewarded with great privileges and immunities; but all these armaments seem to have been constantly under the direction of the Admirals appointed by the several Kings for this purpose (e), and thus it remained till after the Conqueror had gained the crown, by his victory, at the fatal battle of Hastings, in the year 1066, when he not only appointed a Governor, or Constable of the Castle of Dover, which he looked upon as the key of the kingdom, but in imitation of the Romans, constituted a Governor likewise, whom he styled Warden of the Cinque Ports, whose jurisdiction in the nature of Admiral, as well as Chancellor, extended over them, with the addition afterwards of the two antient towns of Rye and Winchelsea, as principals (f), and some other inferior districts as Members only, and over the shore along the same; and as these Ports and their Members were liable to be called upon on every occasion of danger, and to furnish their particular quotas of shipping, those immunities and privileges were granted to them, which were from time to time confirmed, by the charters of the several succeeding Kings. The last charter granted was by K. Charles II, in his 20th year, who reciting all those of his predecessors, not only confirmed them, but granted that they should enjoy all such privileges and exemptions, as their predecessors had in the times of K. Edward the Confessor and K. William I, with other liberties in addition to them; and under this charter the Ports are at this time governed (g);

(c) Camden, p. 217.

(d) The Count of the Saxon shore, according to Pancirollus, presided over nine ports on this shore, namely:— 1, Othona, being the old City of Ithonester, situated in Dengy Hundred in the co. of Essex, in the same place, or near where St. Peter in the Wall is, the adjacent town of Brithlingsca remaining a member of the Cinque Ports at this time; 2, Dubris, or Dover; 3, Lemanus, or Limne; 4, Branodunum, or Brancaster, in Norfolk; 5, Garriannonum, Yarmouth, in the same county; 6, Regulbium, or Reculver; 7, Rutupis, or Richborough; 8, Anderida, or Newenden; 9, Portus Adumi, either Arundel, or Edrington, near Shoreham, in the co. of Sussex; which ports were all in this order placed in his ensign, or banner, in the form of forts; and in the dexter corner was the picture of his book of instructions. The whole in a plane, encompassed round by the sea; a figure of which is engraved in Philipott's Villare, p. 8.— Camden, p. 205. Philipott, p. 9. Harris's Hist. of Kent, p. 467.

(e) Their navy was antiently the whole of the King's navy; for he had no other, properly speaking, for some hundred years.

(f) These towns, situated in the co. of Sussex, seem to have been added to the Cinque Ports, as early at least as K. Henry III.'s reign, and incorporated with them, in a participation of all their privileges, as were, at different times afterwards, several other places, which were therefore called Members, or Limbs of the Ports. The Members of Dover were, at first, Folkestone, Faversham, and Margate St. John's; to which were afterwards added, Goresend, Birchington, Wood, alias Woodchurch, and St. Peter's, all in Thanet; Kingsdowne, and Ringwood.

(g) This charter of K. Charles II. recites, by inspection, the letters patent of Q. Elizabeth and Q. Mary, K. Edward VI, K. Henry VIII, and VII, K. Edward IV, K. Rich. II, K. Edward III, II, and I; which last is the most antient written charter now extant; and mentions that the Ports should enjoy all the privileges any of their predecessors had in the reigns of K. Edward the Confessor, K. William I, and II, K. Henry I, K. Richard I, K. John, and K. Henry III, and this charter was confirmed by K. James II, in his 4th year (b).

The whole quota of shipping to be provided for the Cinque Ports, with their members, and the two antient towns, yearly, were in all 57, furnished with 1140 men and 57 boys, (of which, Dover and its members furnished 21 ships; in every ship, 21 men, and one boy, called a gromet,) able, fitly qualified, well-armed, and well-furnished for the King's service, on a summons on his behalf 40 days before, and the ships and men to remain in the King's service for 15 days, reckoning from the time they should first hoist up the sails of the ships, to sail to the parts to which they ought to go, at their own proper costs and charges; and if the King should have further need of their service, to remain at his costs and charges so long as he pleased. The master of each ship to have 6d. a day; the gunner of each of them, and every other, 3d. a day (i).

These numbers, both of ships and men, vary in the different records relating to them, as well in the total, as the particular quota of each; for it must be observed, that as occasion required, alterations were made in each, more or less, as to some towns, by decree of the Portsmen, among themselves, in their courts of brotherhood, or guesling, further charging or easing one another, according to consent or complaint.

But after the Royal Navy had increased in the number and size of its ships, these of the Cinque Ports being small, the whole number above-mentioned was not exacted; but at times, one, two, or three, or more, the equipping of which has been as to the charge equivalent to the fitting out of the whole number, considering their burthen and the difference of the expence at the time; and how chargeable soever this might have been, they constantly performed it, and at the same time guarded the narrow seas from pirates infesting the coasts; besides which, as another principal service imposed on them, they were always prepared to transport the person of the King, and his army, across the sea, between England and France, during the continuance of the frequent wars and intercourse between the two realms. Among other signal marks of assistance, afforded in former times, and in different reigns, by these Ports, when K. John, in his 17th year, was forsaken by almost all the kingdom, and had retired to

III, according to the charters granted respectively to them by those Kings; but none of these have been for a long time extant. K. Charles II.'s charter then mentions, by inspeximus, without reciting them, the charters of K. James and K. Charles I. This charter is printed by Jeake, in his learned Treatise on the Charters of the Cinque Ports, with the Isle of Wight, he secured himself, by the assistance of the ships and mariners of the Cinque Ports, till he recovered the whole of it again; and in the 2d year of the next reign of K. Henry III, anno 1217, these Ports armed 40 tall ships, and put to sea under Hugo de Burgh, then Warden, who meeting with 80 sail of French ships, coming to the aid of Lewis, the French King's eldest son, gave them an entire overthrow, and taking their Admiral prisoner, beheaded him on Dover sands; and in the 8th, 10th, and 11th years of the same reign, the Ports, to assist the King, fitted out for him double their usual quantity of ships, completely armed and accoutred. In the year 1293, anno 22 Edward I, the fleet, fitted out by the Ports, consisting of 100 sail, fought at sea with double the number of French ships; of which, notwithstanding their superiority, they took and sunk so many, and slew so many of the men, that the French were by it for a long time afterwards in great measure destitute, both of men and shipping. In the 10th year of the same reign, the navy of the Ports, together with other vessels taken up for the service, under the command of Geoffry de Say, Admiral of the sea, from the Thames mouth to the southern and western parts, defended the narrow seas, and prevented any succours being brought from foreign parts to the King's enemies in Scotland.

In the year 1406, anno 8 Henry IV, this navy, commanded by Henry Page, surprized 120 French ships, all richly laden with salt, iron, and oil, and took the whole of them. In the 49th year of K. Henry VI, et recaptiois regie potestatis primo, the navy of the Ports was set out to convey Q. Margaret and the Prince out of France. In the 15th of K. Edward IV, the King commanded the navy of the Ports to be ready at Sandwich, to transport him and his army over sea; whither he came accordingly. Anno 7 Henry VII, this navy transported that King and his army from the same port into France; and the next year it brought the same army back from Calais. In the 5th year of K. Henry VIII, the Ports navy transported the King's army from Sandwich and Dover, to France; as it did again in the 34th and 35th years of it. And in the beginning of Q. Mary's reign, this navy was fitted out to transport K. Philip over the sea.

But the Royal Navy of England being soon after this greatly increased, and the ships being built of a much larger tonnage, the small ships fitted out by the Ports, became of little use, and very insufficient for the purposes intended, so that, as has been already noticed, the Ports were required, instead of the former number of small ships, to fit out fewer, but of a much larger size. Thus we find, in the 30th year of Q. Elizabeth's reign, anno 1588, the memorable year of the Spanish Armada, the Ports at their own charge fitted out six ships, of one hundred and sixty tons, and upwards, each; every one of which had a pinnace, of thirty tons, to attend her; the whole charge amounting to 43,000*l.* and among other service performed against the enemy, one of their ships, of Dover, the mariners of which were well acquainted with the flats and banks in the channel, decoyed the great Galleass of Spain, and run her aground on the coast near Calais, and afterwards burnt her. In the 38th year of that reign, the Ports, at the Queen's command, set out five serviceable ships, of 160 tons each, for five months, at their own charge; and in the 2d year of K. Charles I, at the King's command, they set out two serviceable ships, for three months, which cost them upwards of 1800*l.* Besides these instances of the eminent services performed by the navy of the Ports, there are many others of a less sort, where they have fitted out their shipping partially, for the service of the kingdom (k).

The Ports have the privilege each of them of returning two of their freemen, called Barons, to Parliament; and at the Coronations of the Kings and Queens of England, they choose from among their inhabitants 32, called Barons likewise, to support the royal canopies of the King and Queen, who, for their fees, have the canopies with the silver bells, and the staves supporting them. They have a table allotted for them in Westminster Hall, on the King's right hand, well spread, and furnished for them.

This service, called their honours at court, is mentioned in the charter of K. Edward I, not as there granted, but as confirmed to the Ports. These 32 Barons, to be of the more noble sort, were to come honourably clothed with one suit, at their own costs, but their expences to (k) See Jeake, p. 28.

(l) These Barons were to provide themselves, for the Coronation, scarlet robes, or purple in grain, at their own cost. But the charge of their journey to London, and of their subsistence there, was to be born by the Ports. At K. James's Coronation, the 32 Barons were summoned; but the King found the scarlet for their robes; which, I suppose, has been done ever since. The Ports now usually depute their Members of Parliament, and other persons of gentility, who make interest among them for this purpose, to perform the honourable service, who gladly take off all be of common (l); to bear over the King and Queen cloths of silk, or of gold, each cloth upon four staves, overlaid with silver, every staff having one little silver bell, overlaid with gold, and at every staff were to go four Barons, so that each cloth should be borne by 16; the King under the middle of one cloth, the Queen under the other, and these 32 Barons, together with all the other Barons as should be present, to have the next table in the King's great hall, at the right hand of the King himself, according to his table; and when they had the King's licence to return, they were to have the cloths, with the staves, bells, and all the appurtenances thereof; and the Barons of Hastings were wont to have one cloth, with the staves, bells, and appurtenances, and were used to give their cloth to the church of St. Richard of Chichester; and the Barons of Romney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, were used to have the other cloth, &c. and were used to give their cloth to St. Thomas Becket, in Christ Church in Canterbury; but they divided the staves and bells among themselves. For a long time past the Barons of the Ports have divided the whole equally among themselves (m).

The Court of the Cinque Ports for the holding of pleas, and the great assemblies of them, was held, in early times, at a place called Shepway-Cross, near Limne, and there the Lord Warden received his oath at his first entry into his office. But this court was not restrained to be held there only, but might be kept elsewhere at any place within the Ports, or their Members, at the pleasure of the Lord Warden, as well for swearing him in, as for other occasions (n). The Lord Warden is now usually, and has been for several years past, sworn at Bredenstone Hill, being that on the south-west side of Dover, opposite the Castle, where the antient Court of Shepway is now kept, and most of the general business of the Ports transacted (o). The Lord Warden, besides the above court, holds a Court of Chancery, or Equity, as Chancellor, and a Court of Admiralty as Admiral; both usually kept in the church of St. James, in Dover; and since these latter have been more frequented, they have withdrawn most of the matters determinable in the former court from charges from the Ports, for their attendance on this occasion.

(m) See Jeake's Charters, p. 21, 27, 129.

(n) In 1597, this Court of Shepway was held at Bekeborne, at the manor-house there of the Lord Warden for Henry Brooke, Lord Cobham, for the purpose of swearing him in.

(o) This has been so ever since the Revolution. Henry, Viscount Sidney, appointed Lord Warden in 1694, being the first ever sworn in on Bredenstone Hill, at a Court of Shepway then held there.

it, and have occasioned it to be of much less account than it ever was in former times (p).

Besides these, there is another Court of an inferior sort, called a Guestling, or Brotherhood, which is held annually on the Tuesday after St. Margaret's day, to consult about such things as concern the common good of the Ports, being usually held in the Town of New Romney, for that purpose (q).

The DESCRIPTION, which Cæsar gives in his Commentaries, of the place where he first intended to land in Britain, answers so well to the situation of this town and harbour, that making an allowance for the sea having withdrawn itself, and become circumscribed within a narrower compass, it cannot be more exact, or a doubt remain, but that Dover was the spot described by him (r). For he says, that on his arrival on the coast, from the continent, he saw all the cliffs covered by the Britons in arms, and observed, what would render the execution of his design most difficult at this place, that the sea being narrow, and pent in by the hills, the Britons could easily throw their darts from thence upon the shore beneath (s); upon which, not thinking this a proper place for landing, he sailed about eight miles further, and then came to a plain and open shore (t).

It appears, by the above account, that the sea came much more within the land between the hills than it does at present; and it is supposed that the haven was once situated as far within it at least as the south-west, or inland

(p) The seal of the Chancery and Admiralty Courts is of silver, and good workmanship. It represents a man of war under sail, with flags all charged with the cross of St. George, and a pendant at the fore-top-mast-head, passing by a castle on a hill, with a union flag displayed. Inscription: Magnæ sigil Castræ Dover & Criarum Cancell et admir quinq port.

The Register of the Castle has two seals nearly alike, with a castle of three towers, but without any inscription. These are used for sealing writs.

(s) Cæsar says: Loci hæc erat naturâ; adeo montibus angustis mare continebatur ut ex locis superioribus in littus telum adjici possit. And Cicero, speaking of this expedition of Cæsar, in his Epistle to Atticus, says, Constat; aditus insulæ mirificis molibus esse munitos—both sufficiently descriptive of the situation of this haven.

(t) See vol. i. of this history, p. ix. The chalk cliffs continue almost from Deal hither, for the space of eight miles on one side, and again as far as six miles from Folkestone on the other.

(u) Dr. Platt, and other learned men, join in supposing, that the Portus Dubris was in those times somewhere about this place, which makes the distance between it and Canterbury much nearer to that between them set down in Antoninus's Itinerary.

THE PORT AND HARBOUR.

DOVER does not seem to have been in much repute as a harbour, till some time after Cæsar's expedition hither; for the unfitness, as well as insecurity of the place, especially for a large fleet of shipping, added to the character which he had given of it, deterred the Romans from making a frequent use of it, so that from Boleyne, or Gessoriacum, their usual port in Gaul, they in general sailed with their fleets to Richborough, or Portus Rutupinus, situated at the mouth of the Thames in Britain, and thence back again; the latter being a most safe and commodious haven, with a large and extensive bay (v).

Notwithstanding which, Dover certainly was then made use of as a port for smaller vessels, and a nearer intercourse for passengers from the continent (w); and to render the entrance to it as safe as possible, the Romans built two specula, or watch-towers, here, on the two hills opposite to each other, to point out the approach to it, by night as well as by day, and one likewise on the opposite hill at Bologne, for the like purpose there (x). Sufficient proof of its having been esteemed a port of some resort and consequence by the Romans, is the mention which Antoninus makes of it, in his Itinerary of the Roman ways through Britain, in which ITER III. is, A Londinio ad Portum Dubris, i. e. From London to the Port of Dover (y). To land, where the narrow passage of the sea now is between Dover and Calais, in vol. i. of this history, p. iv.

(x) The watch tower, built on the opposite hill to that of the Castle, and almost of equal height, has been demolished a long time past, and there is only a small fragment of it remaining. It is now usually called Bredenstone, and Bridenstone Hill; and by the vulgar, the Devil's drop of mortar. Darell calls it, ara Cæsaris, or Cæsar's altar. John Twine, of Canterbury, a learned old man, who lived in K. Henry VIII's and Q. Elizabeth's reigns, affirmed, that he saw it in his youth nearly entire. The tower over against it at Bologne, in France, built by the Romans for the like purpose, as a guide from one port to the other, falling to decay, was repaired in later times by Charles the Great, in the year 810, (as Regino writes.) This was afterwards called by the French, Tour d'ordre. It was undermined, and fell down in 1644, from the high cliff on which it stood, on the shore below, where vast fragments of it now lie; the foundations, built of brick, eight feet or more from the ground, still remaining above. See Camden, p. 250; and a full account of it in Archæologia, vol. iii, p. 257. The building, now called the Old Man of Boulogne, is still remaining on the heights, on the opposite side of the harbour there.

which may be added, the fort erected by the Romans on the hill, (where the Castle now stands,) in which they kept constantly a strong garrison of soldiers, to guard the entrance to it; and the remains of a Roman bath, and several burial urns, having been within these few years discovered at St. Mary's church in this town (z); of which further mention will be made below.

But after the departure of the Romans from Britain, when the port of Bologne, as well as Richborough, fell into decay and disuse, and instead of the former a nearer port came into use, first at Whitfan (a), and when that was stopped up, a little higher at Calais, Dover quickly became the more usual and established port of passage between France and Britain, and it has continued so to the present time.

When the antient harbour of Dover was changed from its antient situation is not known; most probably by various occurrences of nature, the sea left it by degrees, till at last the former scite of it became entirely swallowed up by the beach (b). That Dover Harbour was much further within land, even at the time of the conquest than it is at present, seems to be confirmed by the survey of Domesday, in which it is said, that at the entrance of it, there was a mill which damaged almost every ship that passed by it, on account of the great swell of the sea there. Where the scite of this mill was, is now totally unknown, though it is probable it was much within the land, and that by the still further accumulation of the beach, and other natural causes, this haven was in process of time so far filled up towards the inland part of it, as to change its situation still more to the south-west, towards the sea (c).

The strong presumption is, that the harbour had once an entrance between the Bulwark cliff

The last distance from Canterbury to this haven, of 14 miles, shews the latter to have been situated much nearer within the land, the present distance being near 16 measured English miles, as the highway now goes.

(z) Archæologia, vol. v, p. 331.

(a) Among the Tower Records, pat. anno 17 Edw. II, is one for confirming the agreement made between the Barons of Dover, for the taking of the profit of the passage between Whitfan and Dover.

(b) Arviragus, or more properly Ariovog, K. of Britain, who by some is reputed to be the founder of the Castle here, is said to have first stopt out the sea from this valley, and to have contracted it within narrower bounds, so as to have formed the haven still farther outward to where the present Town of Dover stands; but the force of the tides, and high winds, seem to have operated most towards this change.

(c) The scite of this harbour was certainly greatly north-eastward of its present situation, and the entrance of it from that part of the present bay, into which the river likewise then emptied itself strait forward, a little to the southward of the east. This mouth of the river afterwards, and the Chapel rock, through to Paradise Pent, as mooring-rings have been found in a piece of a tower standing near the Pent, and that from some extraordinary tempest, and the reasons above-mentioned, this entrance was stopped, and the beach continuing to gather on the shore, made a bay towards the Mould rocks, and northward towards the Castle fall, forming a kind of basin within-side, which, it is probable, the fresh water from the river overflowing, broke through the beach at low-water south-eastward, and formed the entrance to the present harbour.

From the time of the Norman conquest, as appears by every history and record of former times, this port continued the usual passage to and from England, not only for the royal personages, nobility, and others, of this realm, but of foreign ones; and to confine the intercourse to this port only, there was a statute passed anno 4 Edw. IV, that none should take shipping for Calais, but at Dover (d). But in K. Henry VII.'s time, which was almost the next reign, the harbour was become so swerved up, as to render it necessary for the King's immediate attention, to prevent its total ruin, and he expended great sums of money for its preservation, towards which, in the 16th year of it, John Clerk, Master of the Maison Dieu of Dover, under the King's patronage, built a round tower at the south-west side of the harbour, to defend the ships lying within it, from the violence of the winds from that quarter, and they rode close to it, by rings fastened to the tower, for this purpose, which made (e) this part of the bay so pleasant, that it was called Little Paradise, which name it bears at present. But though this was of great use, yet it could not answer the end proposed, without the building of a pier to seaward, which was determined by the beach forming a high bar against it, turned its course south-westward, and emptied itself through the Pent, at the mouth of the present harbour, the changes of which, whenever they happened at different times, were always occasioned by the vast quantities of beach driven along coastways by the south-west winds, and this harbour being situated in a natural bay, in which the beach was less impelled by the winds than on an open coast, and being there in a place of rest, the entrance of it was constantly filled with it; and the water being pent up by this means made itself a new opening in various places at different times.

(d) This statute was repealed anno 21. James I. It was part of the duty of the Constable of Dover Castle to prevent persons going out of the realm at this port, without a proper licence from the King.

on about the middle of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, and ſir John Thompson, Cl. Parson of St. James's in Dover, drew a draft of one, and made a proposition to the King to repair the harbour, which being approved of, he was appointed Chief Surveyor, with others, who were experienced mariners, in conjunction with him (f); and they first, in 1533, anno 25 Henry VIII, built an exceeding strong wall, called the Pier from Archcliff Chapel, being the south-west part of the bay directly eastward into the main sea, 131 rods in length, leaving the entrance only at east-south-east; but it was not finished by 350 feet so far as the foundation was carried on, the extremity of which was called the Mole-head, and was made of rocks. This pier was compiled of two rows of main posts, and great piles of 25 feet and upwards in length, which were let into holes hewn in the rock underneath, and some were shod with iron, and driven down into the main chalk. The posts and piles were fastened together with iron bands and bolts. The bottom was first filled up with great rocks of stone, of 20 tons a-piece, and the remainder above with great chalk stones, beach, &c. (g) During the whole of this work, the King greatly encouraged the undertaking, and came several times in person to view it; and in the whole is said to have expended near 63,000l. on it (b). But his absence afterwards abroad, his ill health, and at last his death, joined to the minority of his successor, K. Edward VI, though some feeble efforts were made in his reign, towards the support of this pier, put a stop to, and in the end exposed this noble work to decay and ruin.

Q. Mary, indeed, attempted to carry it on again, but neither officers nor workmen being well paid, it came to nothing, so that in process of time the sea brought up such quantities of beach again upon it, especially about a fort, called the Black Bulwark, that it drove quite through the piles, and choked up the harbour, making a shelf of beach from thence easterly, to the bottom of the cliff, called the Castle Ray, and this, with the neglect of repairs, and the iron, wood, and other materials being continually plundered from it, increased the ruin of it rapidly; for now the shelf of beach increasing every day more and more, no ship could get over it, excepting in that place, where the river coming down from the town, forced a passage into the sea, or where a channel was dug through it; and the loss of Calais happening about the same time, threatened the entire destruction of it. Providentially the shelf of beach was of itself become a natural defence against the rage of the sea, and it was observed, that if a passage could be made for ships to get safely within it, they might ride there securely.

(f) The King rewarded Thompson with the Mastership of the Maison Dieu in Dover. Those in conjunction with him were, Edward May, Robert Justice, Richard Cowebie, and John Steward.

(g) The former were brought from Folkestone hither, on frames of timber, supported by empty casks, &c. on the water, at a small expence, by the contrivance of one John Young, whom the King rewarded with a yearly pension.—The latter were brought from the north-east side, in a great boat called Gaboth, which had nine keels.

To effect this, several projects were formed, and Q. Elizabeth, to encourage it, gave to the town the free transportation of several thousand quarters of corn and tuns of beer (i); and in the 23d of her reign, an act passed for giving towards the repair of the harbour, a certain tonnage from every vessel above 20 tons burthen, passing by it, which amounted to 1000l. yearly income (k); and the Queen appointed the Lord Cobham, then Lord Warden, Richard Barry, his Lieutenant, and others, Commissioners for this purpose (l). They made one John True Surveyor, who undertook to build a wall of stone, (to be brought from Folkestone,) from the Water-gate, where the river runs into the sea, to the Black Bulwark, 200 rods in length; on this he bestowed about 1300l. in hewing and preparing the stone, and if the wall had been finished, it would have cost 100,000l. but being paid by the day, he protracted the time, which being discovered, he was dismissed. After which, one Ferdinando Poins, who understood the works in the Low Countries, and who had been much employed in stopping up the breaches at Woolwich and Earith, was employed in this work. He undertook to make several knocks, or groins, which should make such a depth of water, that the harbour should be quite dry at low-water, so that a wall might be built 120 rods in length, from the Water gate above-mentioned near the Castle Ray, running within the shelf of the beach directly towards the end of the pier, where the Black Bulwark was placed. And at the end of this another, of about 40 rods in length, was to be placed across it, reaching to the shore at the northern cliff. To begin this work, he had at times 1200*l.* paid him, and he made two groins, and got a good depth of water at the mouth of the harbour; but his charges being thought to be twice as much as they ought to have been, he was stopt from doing any more of it, though at the same time it was concluded, that nothing could be so effectual to secure the harbour as such walls as he had purposed; but the question was, how, and with what materials they should be made (m). Poins gave his opinion, that they might be made sufficient of ouze and beach; but Pet and Baker, two skilful shipwrights, proposed a wooden wall, and gave in a model of such a building, but this was thought too chargeable and insufficient, nor had it been tried elsewhere. Sir Thomas Scott proposed doing it in the same manner, as the wall against the sea in Romney Marsh is done, and after much enquiry and consideration, the Romney Marsh men undertook the work, under his direction (n). The work was begun in May 1583, anno 26 Elizabeth, the walls being made of earth, with chalk in the middle, and silex on the outsides, and lined with faggots. The cross wall was made 90 feet broad at the bottom, and 50 at top, and 40 rods long. The long wall 70 at bottom, and near 40 at top, in length 120 rods (o); and so wonderful was the dexterity and application used in this work, that in less than three months, the whole perimeter, or inclusion of the harbour, was finished in so compact a manner, that it continued without a leak in it for three years; and then at quarter-flood, a ship of 50 tons might come in, and at full seas one of above 300; and there were then finishing two jetty heads, which would perfect the mouth of the haven, so that any merchant-ship whatever might come into it. The charge of which two walls, with their appurtenances, amounted to 2700*l.* But the pent of water was so great, that on the breaking of one of the gates of the sluices, the beach and sand came in, and swerved it up so much in four days time, that no boat could come in, or go out. However, it was soon afterwards repaired to the same state it was in before. In the doing of which, the small sluice, at first layed in the cross wall, was taken up, and one of 16 feet broad, and 80 feet long, and 13 deep, was laid in its room, which had two gates; and as it was a whole month laying, the Lord Cobham, then Lord Warden, kept a public table for the encouragement of the workmen; for a universal diligence and public spirit appeared in every one concerned in this great and useful work.

(m) The Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalties, of Dover, at this time presented a petition to the Lords of the Council, stating the importance of Dover Harbour, the ruinous state and condition it was then in, and proposals for the reparations and works, which were then thought necessary to be made, and praying their Lordships to devise some means for carrying the proposed plan into execution, which petition, containing several curious facts, is printed in the Archæologia, vol. vi, p. 191.

(n) James Hales was made Treasurer; John Smith, Expenditor; and Thomas Diggs, Surveyor.

During the whole of the Queen's reign, the improvement of this harbour continued without intermission, and several more acts passed for that purpose (p); but the future preservation of it was owing to the Charter of Incorporation of the Governors of it, in the first year of K. James I, by an act of parliament passed that year (q), by the name of the Warden and Assistants of the Harbour of Dover, the Warden being always the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports for the time being, and his Assistants, his Lieutenant, and the Mayor of Dover, for the time being, and eight others, the Warden and Assistants only making a Quorum; six to be present to make a Session; at any of which, on a vacancy, the Assistants to be elected; and the King granted to them his land or waste ground, or beach, commonly called the Pier, or Harbour ground, as it lay without Southgate, or Snargate, extending north east to a tenement or messuage, being then Mr. Mitchell's, near the Pier, and south west to Arckcliff Bulwark, and its bridge; from the rocks and cliffs there, unto the outermost shore of the great standing water there, the Great Pent, or the Pent Wall, and unto the Port itself, called the Harbour of Dover, and unto the inwardmost bound of the sea there, called the Low-water mark (r).

Under the direction of this Corporation, and anno 43 Eliz. cap. ix. In this reign a strong mount was cast up on the north side, near the Camber, at Rye, an excellent road for ships, though now decayed, to which they made when driven from the Downs. For in a great north and west wind, the ships being driven from thence, and forced to repair to this harbour of Dover, where they might lie safely, until the wind blew greatly from by east and south, and then they were forced to depart from hence into the Camber above-mentioned, or to the Isle of Wight; for on a sudden gale or storm of wind, at south-east, there has been seven or eight ships broken to pieces in one day on the cliffs here.

(q) Act 1, James I, cap. 32.

have the works and improvements of this harbour been carried on, and acts of parliament have been passed in almost every reign since, to give the greater force to their proceedings (s).

THE FIRST WORK OF CONSEQUENCE which this Corporation effected towards it, was the running forward two piers, south-east, many hundred feet from the bottom of the bay, composed of vast timbers, tied with iron on the outside, the cavity being filled up with the large pieces of rock, made use of for the former piers. After this large and expensive work, an excavation was made for a reservoir, called the Pent, for storing up the tide and river waters, and sluices were provided for letting these waters go in full current, for scouring away the bars, when formed at the mouth of the piers; but these means proved still inadequate for this purpose, for the bars still formed, and oft times remained till a change of wind removed them; and as the Pent was not made deep enough for the reception of ships; therefore, when the tide was ebb'd out, the vessels were all left aground. This evil and insufficiency, after many years, led to the next work, which was that of forming a basin, or inner harbour, between the outward one and the Pent, for ships to ride in afloat, and to increase the quantity of tide and river water, to be pent up for these purposes.

This basin was formed below the Pent, by means of a cross wall, in which was an opening of about 38 feet wide, furnished with a pair of strong gates, pointing to landward, for the purpose of retaining the waters, and of letting vessels into and out of the basin, at high-water, and with sluices for letting off the water contained in the Pent, or Basin, for the purpose of removing the bars; but this not answering the expectations formed from it, the next method pursued was that of a turn-water, as it is called, which was a floor made upon the bed of the outward harbour, pointing from the east, (excepting some few parcels of freehold land) and are of the yearly value of about 300l. The King granted to the Earl of Northampton, Warden of the Cinque Ports and Constable of Dover Castle, and other Trustees for the Harbour of Dover, all the lands, from the Pier-gate to the Pier, most part whereof was afterwards built upon; the builders of the houses paying small rents for them to the Trustees.

The seal, belonging to this Corporation, which is used at present, was not made till 1646. It is of silver, and of an oval form, and has the Ports Arms within a shield. The inscription—Dover Harbour and Dom 1646.

(s) K. Charles I, in his 11th year, granted a new commission for the repair of this harbour; in which it is recited, that the King being informed by the petition of the Mayor, &c. of the Town and Port of Dover, and others, that there were divers great breaches in the walls of their harbour, towards the head of the west pier, and in it posts and boards were applied, as a means of penning up the water, by contracting its passage, and thereby throwing it more forcibly against a particular part of the bar, to cut a passage through it, and by disuniting its parts make the remove easier; but this not answering the effect, the next method proposed, was that of erecting jetties along the coast to the westward of the harbour, by means of which, it was imagined, that the quantity of beach, that would reach the harbour's mouth, would be much less than before, and this appears to have been pointed out by the effect, which was observed to arise from large quantities of chalk, that had fallen from the very high cliffs, and formed great projections, or promontories, into the sea, which during their continuance, (some of which lasted for many years,) the harbour's mouth was not annoyed by so many, nor such large bars, as when they did not subsist; and it was observed, that the effect was immediately after the falls happened, and that the bars began to increase in size and number, in proportion as these accidental jetties were washed away; and therefore, as these were accidental, and their continuance uncertain, it was determined to apply artificial ones, which would be more permanent, which has since been done, as the only means thought of, to prevent the mouth of the harbour being stopped up, and rendered impassable, by the strong winds at south-west. But after all, this, with some other endeavours pursued since, have proved very insufficient; for during the spring of the year 1792, the beach increased so much by those strong winds, as to form so high a bar at the mouth of the harbour, that not even the packet-boats could gain an entrance into it, till at length, by the labour of a great number of hands, a channel was cut through for the purpose; and whenever those winds blow equally strong, they do now, and will in future, without doubt, produce the same effect.

which was so much out of repair, that it would cost 2000l. and more to put it into repair, the revenues of it being by no means sufficient to answer the same; and understanding that merchant strangers paid no more than natives for entering their goods at the custom-house there, and for enjoying the benefit and protection of the port and harbour; he therefore granted a further impost, to be paid by them for three years towards such repairs and amendment. See Rym. Fœd. vol. xix, p. 752. Acts passed for repairing this harbour, 13 and 14 Charles II, cap. xxvii.—11 and 12 William III.—2 Anne, and 4 Geo. I. Acts for enlarging the terms of the former, 9 Geo. I. Acts for completing the repairs of it, 10 Geo. I.—11 Geo. II.—31 Geo. II. Acts for making the former more effectual; and likewise 2 and 4 Geo. III, and 26 Geo. III, for the continuance of the terms of the Acts, for the repair of this harbour.

Such

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

Such is nearly the present state of Dover Harbour, excepting, that by the advice of the late Surveyor, Mr. Nickalls, several of the works have been repaired more substantially with Portland stone, and a larger and more useful opening made of the same materials between the Pent and Dover Harbour.

Several surveys have at different times been taken of Dover Harbour; one by Captain Perry, in 1718, and another by Mr. Smeaton, in 1769, who gave their opinions of the improvements necessary in the works of it; but neither seem to have been approved of. Certainly the necessity of a harbour on the coast, between the river Thames and Portsmouth, to which ships might at all times find access, and when in, constantly ride afloat, and that particularly in the vicinity of the Downs, has at all times been, and is universally acknowledged and wished for, both for the safety, and repairing of the Royal Navy, and trading ships at large, as well as for the importance of it in a French war, both for the King's ships and cruizers (t). But the present use of it, is, from the state of it, confined to the necessary intercourse of the packets, and passage-boats, between England and France; as a reception for small ships of the Royal Navy, both for safety and repairing, and for trading vessels at large.

From what has been said above therefore, the reader will observe, that this harbour has always been a great national object, and that in the course of many ages, prodigious sums of money have been from time to time expended on it, and every endeavour used to keep it open, and render it commodious; and that after all these repeated endeavours and expences, it still labours under such circumstances, as in a very great degree renders unsuccessful all that has ever been done for that purpose.

A very ingenious gentleman of high reputation as an Engineer, now living, in a printed letter concerning Dover Harbour, says, that this harbour, which he allows to be the best between Portsmouth and the Medway, now gives a bad impression, indeed, to the numerous foreigners who see it, of either genius, or regard to the means of increasing our Marine. It must be

(t) Dover Harbour, says Mr. Nickalls, in his Survey, under its present general disposition, cannot be made fit for such purpose, but only for small vessels, there being not more than 10 feet and an half water, over the cell of the cross wall into the basin, at neap tides; and as storms and contrary winds do as frequently happen at neaps, as at spring tides; therefore he could not estimate this or any harbour, but by its acceptable depth of water, and clearness of the mouth, at neap, or very few tides before or after. Mr. Nickalls, in 1775, made An accurate Survey and Plan of this Harbour, with his observations on the former works and their defects, and his proposal for the future remedy of them, and improvements of it; all which with them, he says, matter of no small surprize, that a people so high in character for knowledge of whatever respects the sea, should so totally neglect to turn this port to the advantage only that nature has given it, as an over-balance against Dunkirk; and that the contrast of such apparent extravagance at Ramsgate, in attempting impossibilities, is what none of them can understand, comparatively with the national parsimony exhibited here. War is made against every law of nature there, and an unlimited expence allowed in a fruitless endeavour to make an artificial harbour, while a trifling sum, in comparison, would give a permanent and most useful sea-port at Dover; a place which must, whilst the station of the Downs exists, be the depôt of the stores, &c. of our men of war.

The above letter was written by Mr. Thomas Hyde Page, knight, F. R. S. of his Majesty's Corps of Engineers, who in 1784 published Considerations upon the State of this Harbour, with its relative Consequence to the Navy of Great Britain. In which he strenuously contends, that the present situation of Dover Harbour is contrary to nature, and impracticable of answering any good effect; and as the only means of rendering it adequate to general utility, he advises the restoring of it to its original antient situation, to the eastward of Lord North's Battery, having its opening into the bay there.

The toll of this haven was, as some write, granted by K. Lucius to the church, which he had erected within the Castle of Dover. Afterwards K. Henry III. granted to the Hospital of St. Mary, in Dover, founded by Hubert de Burgh, 10l. out of the profits of the passage of the Port of Dover, towards the endowment of the church of it, which had been dedicated in his presence; and 10l. more out of it, towards the support of the brethren and sisters of the poor of it, and 50s. out of it likewise for the support of a Chaplain in it, and likewise the tenth part of the profits of it, the same to be first had and taken out of it, to hold in free, pure, and perpetual alms, for ever; all which they were yearly to receive by the hands of the Bailiffs of Dover (u).

THE ANTIENT AND PRESENT STATE, WITH THE CIVIL HISTORY OF DOVER.

DOVER, as has been already mentioned, was of some estimation in the time of the Roman empire in Britain, on account of its Haven, and afterwards for the Castle, built by them here, in which they kept a strong garrison of soldiers, not only to guard the approach to it, but to keep the natives in subjection.

This station of the Romans is mentioned by Antonine, in his Itinerary of the Roman roads in Britain, by the name of Dubris, as being situated from the station named Duroverno, or Canterbury, fourteen miles (v); which distance, compared with the miles as they are now numbered from Canterbury, shews the town, as well as the haven, for they were no doubt contiguous to each other, to have both been nearer within land than either of them are at present. The sea, indeed, seems antiently to have occupied in great part the space where the present Town of Dover, or at least the north-west part of it, now stands; but being shut out by the quantity of beach thrown up, and the harbour changed by that means to its present situation, left that place a dry ground, on which the Town of Dover, the inhabitants following the traffic of the harbour, was afterwards built (w).

This town, called by the Saxons, Dofra, and Dofris; by later historians, Doveria; and in Domesday, Dovere; is agreed by all writers to have been privileged before the Conquest; and by the survey of Domesday, appears to have been of ability in the time of K. Edward the Confessor, to arm yearly 20 vessels to the sea, for the space of 15 days together, each having therein 21 men. In consideration whereof, that King granted to the inhabitants, not only to be

(w) See above, p. 80 (y). In proof of the residence of the Romans at this station, the Rev. Mr. Lyon some years since discovered the remains of a Roman structure, which he apprehended to have been a bath, at the west end of the parish-church of St. Mary in this town, which remains have since repeatedly been laid open for the purposes of interment.

This structure appears to have been a Roman bath, on the ruins of which the west end of the church was built, and the foundations of the church-tower were built upon the floor of the hypocaustum, or sweating-room. This floor was supported with columns of tiles, about 9 inches each side, and 20 high, and 15 inches space between each; on these small columns were laid large tiles, near two inches thick, and over them a strong cement, four inches thick, and this formed the floor of the room. The heat was carried round the room by flues, placed in the walls. The walls are from two feet ten inches to three feet thick; the first course of stone being laid in a deep bed of fine clay. This Roman building was certainly extensive, and consisted of several apartments, and it is evident, from a bare inspection of the Itchnography, which Mr. Lyon has given of them, that there free from the payment of Tbol and other privileges throughout the realm, but pardoned them all manner of suit and service to any of his courts whatsoever. In those days, the town seems to have been under the protection and government of Godwin, Earl of Kent, and Governor of this Castle; for in the year 1051, when Eustace, Earl of Bologne, (who had married Goda, K. Edward's sister,) came over sea to visit the King, his brother, his harbinger demeaned himself so imprudently in taking up lodgings in this town, that a quarrel arose between him and the townsmen, one of whom being killed, the rest took arms, and killed 18 of the Earl's servants, and drove the remainder away; on which the Earl complained to the King, and the townsmen did the same to Earl Godwin, who thinking the King did not do them justice, raised a large force; but in the end was forced to fly, and was with his son banished the realm (x).

Soon after the conquest, this town was so wasted by fire, that almost all the houses were reduced to ashes, as appears by the survey of Domesday, at the beginning of which is the following entry of it: were four rooms at least on the same floor, with a passage between two of them. The ruins have been frequently dug up both in the church and church-yard, for the purposes of interment; and the few remains now left are between eight and nine feet deep in the church-yard, and about four feet below the pavement of the church. By an inscription on one of the tiles, this building was erected by the Romans towards the decline of their empire in Britain. The inscription is, C. J. B. R. which may be read, Cobors prima Britannica.

DOVERE Tepore regis Edwardi reddebat 18 libras de quibus denarijs habebat rex. E. duas partes. & Comes Goduin tercia. Contra hoc habebant Canonici de Sco Martino medietate aliam.

The Legio Secunda, called also Legio Augusta, and Legio Britannica, was stationed on the coast of Kent, being divided into cohorts. The first of them was stationed at Dover, and this being their head quarters they built their bath here.

(w) Kilburne, p. 83, says, the town was first under the Castle; the market at a place called Up-market; and the houses, where the closes of a house, called the Ho-se-see, the Garnet-cloze, Pidgeon-house, and Garçons, late were.

Which is: DOVERE, in the time of K. Edward, paid 18 pounds, of which money, King E. had two parts, and Earl Goduin the third. On the other hand, the Canons of St. Martin had another moiety. The Burgesses gave 20 ships to the King once in the year, for 15 days; and in each ship were 20 and one men. This they did on the account that he had pardoned them Sac and Soc. When the Messengers of the King came there, they gave for the passage of a horse 3 pence in winter, and 2 in summer. But the Burgesses found a steerman, and one other assistant, and if there should be more necessary, they were provided at his cost. From the festival of St. Michael to the feast of St. Andrew, the King's peace was in the town. Sigerius had broke it, on which the King's Bailif had received the usual fine. Whoever resided constantly in the town paid custom to the King; he was free from tholl throughout England. All these customs were there when King William came into England. On his first arrival in England, the town itself was burnt, and there-

(y) Ora was a nominal money among the Saxons, often mentioned in Domesday, as of the value of zod.

(z) Lambarde seems to understand the word, mansura, to mean mansions, or houses; and accordingly says, the fore its value could not be computed how much it was worth, when the Bishop of Baieux received it. Now it is rated at 40 pounds, and yet the Bailiff pays from thence 54 pounds to the King; of which 24 pounds in money, which were 20 in an ore (y), but 30 pounds to the Earl by tale.

In Dovere there are 29 plats of ground (z), of which the King had lost the custom. Of these, Robert de romenel has two. Ralph de Curbespine 3. William, son of Tedald, 1. William, son of Oger, 1. William, son of Tedold, and Robert niger, 6. William, son of Gaisfrid, 3; in which the Guildball of the Burgesses was. Hugo de Montfort 1 house. Durand 1. Rannulf de Colubels 1. Wadard 6. The son of Modbert one. And all these vouch the Bishop of Baieux as the proteetor and giver of these houses. Of that plat of ground, which Rannulf de Colubels holds, which was a certain outlaw, they agree that the half of the land was the King's, and Rannulf himself has both parts. Humphry the lame man holds 1 plat of ground, of which half the forfeiture is the King's. Roger de Ostrabam made a certain house over the King's water, and held to this time the custom of the King; nor was a house there in the time of K. Edward. In the entrance of the Port of Dover, there is one mill, which damages almost every ship, by the great swell of the sea, and does great damage to the King and his tenants; and it was not there in the time of K. Edward. Concerning this, the grandson of Herbert says, that the Bishop of Baieux granted it to his uncle Herbert, the son of Ivo.

And a little further, in the same record, under the Bishop's possessions likewise:

In Estrei Hund.

Wibtus ten dimid Jugu qd jacuit in gilda de Dover. & mo defd se cu tra Osbti filii Letard. & valet p. annu 4. solid.

Which is: In Estrei Hundred, Wibertus holds half a yoke, which lies in the gild of Dover, and now is taxed with the land of Osbert, the son of Letard, and is worth per annum 4 shillings.

From the Norman conquest, the cities and towns of this realm appear to have been vested either in the crown, or else in the clergy or great men of the laity, and they were each, as such, immediately Lords of the same. Thus, when the Bishop of Baieux, to whom the King had, as may be seen by the above survey, granted this town, was disgraced. It returned into the King's hands by forfeiture, and K. Rich. I. afterwards granted it in ferme to Robert Fitz-bernard (a).

After the time of the taking of the survey of Domesday, the Harbour of Dover still changing its situation more to the south-westward, the town seems to have altered its situation too, and to have been chiefly rebuilt along the sides of the new harbour, and as an encouragement to it, at the instance, and through favour especially to the Prior of Dover, K. Edward I. incorporated this town, the first that was so of any of the Cinque Ports, by the name of the Mayor and Commonalty. The Mayor to be chosen out of the latter, from which body he was afterwards to choose the assistants for his year, who were to be sworn for that purpose (b). At which time, the King had a mint for the coinage of money here; and by patent, anno 27 of that reign, the Table of the Exchequer of Money was appointed to be held here, and at Yarmouth (c). But the good effects of these marks of the royal favour were soon afterwards much lessened, by a dreadful disaster; for the French landed here in the night, in the 23d year of that reign, and burnt the greatest part of the town, and several of the religious houses in it, and this was esteemed the more treacherous, as it was done whilst the two Cardinals were here, treating for a peace between England and France (d); which misfortune, however, does not seem to have totally impoverished it, for in the 17th year of the next reign of K. Edward II, it appears in some measure to have recovered its former state, and to have been rebuilt, as appears by the Patent Rolls of that year, in which the Town of Dover is said to have then had in it twenty-one wards (e), each of which was charged with one ship for the King's use; in consideration of which, each ward had the privilege of a licensed packet-boat, called a passenger, from Dover across the sea to Whitsan in France (f), the usual port at that time of embarking from thence.

In the 33d year of K. Edward I, certain persons of the Town and Port of Dover had committed a rescus. The Barons, or Men of Dover, were fined for it; their fine, or composition was—that they should find a ship at their own charge to serve against the Flemings; they neglected to find it; for that neglect and contempt they were attached to answer at the Parliament; they appeared there. Upon the matter, the King, with the advice of his Council, in full Parliament, willed and adjudged, that the said Barons of the Town of Dover should be banished from their town for four months, and afterwards should come to the King's Exchequer, and make fine for the trespass. In the beginning of K. Richard II.'s reign, it seems there was a charter granted to Dover; for it appears by the Tower Records, that in the 10th year of that reign, it was adjudged in Parliament, that the charter granted to Dover, under the great seal, though it passed by warranty, should be revoked and utterly cease (g). In which reign the ability of this town was of some account; for the Mayor and good men of Dover, in the 21st year of it, among many other public bodies, ecclesiastical and civil, and other private persons throughout the realm, lent the King 40l.

The state of this place in the reign of K. Henry VIII, is given by Leland, in his Itinerary, as follows:

This was the state of Dover just before the time of the dissolution of religious houses, in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, when the abolition of private masses, obits, and such like services in churches, occasioned by the reformation, annihilated the greatest part of the income of the priests belonging to them, in this as well as in other towns, in consequence of which most of them were deserted, and falling to ruin, the parishes belonging to them were united to one or two of the principal ones of them. Thus, in this town, of the several churches in it, two only remained in use for divine service (k), viz. St. Mary's and St. James's, to which the parishes of the others were united (l).

After this, the haven continuing to decay more than ever, notwithstanding the national assistance afforded to it, added to the suppression of the religious houses, and the loss of Calais not long afterwards, seemed altogether to threaten the impoverishing of it. What the state of it was in the 8th year of Q. Elizabeth, may be seen, by the certificate returned by the Commissioners appointed by her in her 8th year, to survey the maritime places in this county, by which it appears that there were then in Dover, houses inhabited 358—void, or lack of inhabitours 19—A Mayor, Customer, Comptroller of Authorities, not joint but several—ships and crayers 20—one of four tons—one of 10 tons—two of 15—two of 17—two of 18—one of 20—one of 25—one of 26—one of 33—four of 40—one of 41—one of 43—one of 101—one of 120. Persons occupied in and about the trade of merchandize, and of fishing in their ships.

This probable ruin of the town, however, most likely induced the Queen, in her 20th year, to grant it a new charter of incorporation, in which the manner of choosing Mayor, Jurats, and Commoners, and of making freemen, was new-modelled, and several further liberties and privileges granted, and those of the charter of K. Edward I. confirmed likewise by inspeximus. After which, K. Charles II, in his 36th year, anno 1684, granted to it a new charter, which, however, was never inrolled in Chancery, and in consequence of a writ of quo warranto was that same year surrendered, and another again granted next year; but this last, as well as another charter granted by K. James II, and forced on the Corporation, being made wholly subservient to the King's own purposes, were annulled by proclamation, made on Oct. 17, anno 1688, being the fourth and last year of his reign (m): but none of the above charters being at this time extant (n), Dover is now held to be a Corporation by prescription, by the style of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of Dover. It consists at present of a Mayor, 12 Jurats, and 36 Commoners, or Freemen, together with a Chamberlain, Recorder, and Town-clerk.

and restoring all Corporations to their antient rights and privileges.

(n) The charters of this Corporation, as well as those of the other Cinque Ports, were, in 1685, by the King's command, surrendered up to Colonel Strotte, then Governor of Dover Castle, and were never returned again, nor is it known what became of them.

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

The Mayor, who is Coroner by virtue of his office, is chosen on Sept. 8, yearly, in St. Mary's church (o), and together with the Jurats, who are Justices within this liberty, exclusive of all others, hold a Court of General Sessions of the Peace and Gaol Delivery, together with a Court of Record, and it has other privileges, mostly the same as the other Corporations, within the Liberties of the Cinque Ports (p). It has the privilege of a mace.

By a Perambulation, taken so long ago as the 17th year of K. Edward IV, these were the metes and bounds of the franchises of the Town and Port of Dover, which the Mayor and Jurats, and certain of the Combarons of the town, with the young people of the town, according to custom of the same, used and approved from the time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, viz. from the Market-cross of Dover to Snargate, and from thence down to a low-water mark, and as far into the sea as a man and a horse can ride with a spear, and reach ground (q). To these bounds towards the sea, in this Perambulation, must be added, that they extend from Moat's Bulwark, being the fort under the Castle, along the shore to Highcliff Point, and there strike up into the highway leading to Folkestone, to a place called Markstone, and from thence over the hill into the highway leading to Huffam, and all along within a line to be drawn from one of those places to the other, at low-water mark, and as far into the sea as a man on horseback can ride, and touch ground with a spear; all within

(o) I find, by the Books of the Corporation, that the election of Mayor was antiently in the church of St. Peter, which going to decay, a bye-law decree was made in Dec. 1581, (in the mayoralty of John Garrett, esq;) for removing the election of all future Mayors from that church to that of St. Mary; and the last Mayor elected in St. Peter's was Thomas Andrews, esq; on Sept. 8, 1582, and rechosen on the same day next year in St. Mary's church, by the antient summons of a horn blowing, for all votes to repair to that church, instead of St. Peter's; and all elections of Mayors and Barons to serve in Parliament, have from the above time been made in St. Mary's church. These elections here, as well as elsewhere in churches, set apart for the worship of God, are certainly a scandal to decency and religion, and are the more inexcusable here, as there is a spacious Court-hall, much more fit for the purposes. After this, there was another bye-law made, in June, 1706, for removing these elections into the Court-hall; but why it was not put in execution does not appear, unless custom prevented it—For if a decree was of force to move them from one church to another, another decree was of equal force to remove them from the church to the Court-hall. Within these few years, indeed, a motion was made in the House of Commons, by a gentleman not much addicted to speak in favour of the established church, to remove all such elections, through decency, from churches to other places not consecrated to divine worship; but though all allowed it which is within the limits of the Corporation, which includes the whole harbour, and the pier-heads, which are left dry every spring-tide.

Besides which, the jurisdiction of this Corporation extends over certain places, as Members or Limbs of this Cinque Port of Dover, not being incorporated; viz. of Margate alias St. John's, Goresend, Birchington, Wood alias Woodchurch, and St. Peter's, all in the Isle of Thanet; and Kingsdowne, and Ringwold, in this county; as will be further mentioned in their proper places. And within these limits, as well as of the Town of Dover, and within the harbour and without, the process of the Court of Record, holden before the Mayor and Jurats, has always been executed by their officer, the Water Bailiff; the appointment of which officer, (together with the office of Keeper of the Prison here,) was by Q. Anne, in her first year, granted to the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty.

K. CHARLES I, in the year 1638, granted to George Digby, esq; the office of Water Bailiff of Dover, and the office of Keeper of the Prison of the Ville and Port of Dover for life, in reversion (r).

Among those who have borne the office of King's Bailiffs, are the following:

highly proper, yet party resentment prevailed, and the motion was negatived by a great majority.

The Mayor of Dover is chosen by the resident Freeman. The Jurats are nominated from the Common Councilmen by the Jurats, and appointed by the Mayor, Jurats, and Common Councilmen, by ballot.

(p) The Cinque Ports were in very early times enfranchised with divers privileges and customs; though of what antiquity they were, or when enfranchised, has not as yet been with any certainty discovered, and therefore they are held to enjoy all their earliest liberties and privileges, as time out of mind, by prescription; and these were confirmed to the Cinque Ports and their Members by Magna Charta, by the style of Barons of the Cinque Ports; and again by one general charter of K. Edw. I, which by inspeximus received confirmation, and sometimes additions from most of the succeeding Kings and Queens of this realm; Dover being one of the Cinque Ports, and the particular charters granted to it, being none of them extant, became thus a Corporation by prescription, with the enjoyment of all the liberties and privileges which they had enjoyed at the time of K. Edward the Confessor, or at any time since.

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

Nicholas Burton, in K. Edw. IV.'s reign (s).

The common seal of this Town and Port has on one side, an antique ship, and on the other side, St. Martin on horseback, dividing his cloak with a poor cripple, following him on foot (t).

The TOWN of DOVER was in antient time strongly walled round and embattled, especially toward the sea, but it seems not to have been ditched round. The wall, in which there were ten gates, has been long since demolished (u), and some few fragments of it only are left; and of the gates there is not one remaining.

These gates were—1, East Brook gate, which stood near Mansfield corner, under the east cliff; 2, St. Helen's gate, next to the former south-west, near Copthall, alias Moorball, and St. Helen's cross; 3, the Postern, alias Fishers gate, next to the last, near the bridge, made by Mr. Garrett, in his Mayoralty; 4, Butchery gate, which opened towards the south, and by which in antient time the filth was carried out to the sea; 5, Snargate, which was towards the south-west, where sometime was Pennills Bench, still so called, but afterwards made like a platform, paved with stone, where merchants used to resort every day between 11 o'clock and one, and over the entry into it the Custom-house was built; 6, Severus's gate, south-west towards the Pier; 7, Adrian's gate, afterwards called Up-wall, on the hanging of the hill, on the west part above the other gate; 8, Common gate, being large, and going out to the then Common, which by usage of driving cows out of the town through it, was afterwards called Cowgate; 9, St. Martin's gate, alias Monks gate, alias Postern gate, towards the hill; and 10, Biggin gate, taking its name from the street near it, but antiently called Northgate (v).

The walls extended south-west from Biggin-gate to Cowgate, and from thence south to the cliff's edge, at the bottom of which cliff stood Snargate, which opened to the waste beach, which then lay in a rude manner, as the sea had left it, from hence along under the cliffs to the Bulwark, near which is a chalk rock, on which stood Our Lady of Pity's chapel. From Snargate, on or near a strait line north-east, the wall extended to the Bench, and from thence on a kind of rampart to a prison, now called the Hole, and from thence to the cliffs under the Castle, and from thence north, taking in St. James's church-yard, across the fields to the house called Upmarket, where the market is supposed to be formerly kept; and from thence west, across Daystone and St. Mary's church-yard to Biggin gate above-mentioned.

It did not encompass a space of more than half a mile square, yet there were five parish churches within it, and one parish church and two others belonging to the Priory and the Maison Dieu without it. The parochial churches were, those of St. Martin le Grand, St. Nicholas, St. John, and St. Peter, all long since demolished, and those of St. Mary and St. James remaining; all which will be further mentioned below.

After Q. Elizabeth had thought it necessary to encourage this place, by bestowing on it, as a mark of her royal favour, a new charter of incorporation, in the 20th year of her reign, as above-mentioned, and had taken under her royal protection the repair and further improvements of the harbour, for which several acts passed during the course of her reign, the intercourse with foreigners, as well as trade and merchandize, greatly increased, as did the number of houses and inhabitants, especially in the next year of K. James I, when the waste beach being granted to the Trustees of the harbour, began to be built upon, and in a short progress of time was covered with dwellings and warehouses.

From this time, the Town of Dover has continued in a flourishing condition, insomuch, that it is at present exceeding wealthy and populous, containing near 10,000 inhabitants, among which are some, but yet not a great number of Dissenters, of different persuasions, who have their respective meeting-houses within

(s) Boys's History of Sandwich, p. 793.

(t) Mr. Boys, in his History of Sandwich, thus describes this seal:—The Corporation seal is a large round seal of brass, and was made in 1305. On one side is an antique vessel, with a bowsprit and a mast, with a pennon of three tails; the sail furled; a forecastle, poop, and roundtop, all embattled; the steersman at the helm; two men on the forecastle blowing trumpets, and another climbing up the shrouds, and two men below forward at a rope; a flag at the stern, charged with the Ports arms—Inscription: Sigillum Commune baronum de Dovorria. On the reverse, is St. Martin on horseback passing through the gate of Amiens, and dividing his cloak with his sword, to cover a person naked to the waist, and leaning on a crutch. The whole within an orle of lions passant guardant, in separate compartments respecting one another.

The old seal of Mayoralty is silver, and represents the same legend of St. Martin within a quarterfoil, with 4 demi ships conjoined with 4 demi lions in orle. Sigillum Maiorats ports Davorr. The seal of Mayoralty, in present use, is of steel, and of elegant workmanship; it represents the legend of St. Martin, and has nearly the same inscription.

The Arms of the Corporation of Dover are—Sable, a cross argent between 4 leopard's faces or; being the same arms as those of the Priory of Dover.

(u) Among the Tower Records are two patents: 1ma, anno 18, and pat. 2da, anno 19 Edw. II. Muragium pro Villa Davorr.

this town; viz. the Quakers, and Baptists, and two different persuasions of Methodists (w). The town extends from the foot of the Castle-bill in a half circle south-westward along the foot of the opposite cliffs, and so on beyond the harbour. There are several good principal streets in it, which, with the rest of the town, were greatly improved, by an act, which passed in the year 1778, for the new paving, watching, lighting, and otherwise improving it. The two former parts of the act have been put in execution; but the latter, of lighting it, the Commissioners have not ventured to attempt, so numerous are the contraband traders here, whose success is chiefly owing to the darkness of the night; and at this time there is not a single light in the night throughout the whole Town of Dover. There are a number of handsome modern-built houses in the several different parts of the town, mostly built from fortunes chiefly acquired by traffic and merchandize.

At the entrance of the town from London, in Biggin-street, near the place where the ancient gate of that name stood, are the remains of the Hospital of the Maison Dieu, now made use of as the King's Victualling Office, and adjoining to it is the Agent's house; opposite to which, at a small distance from the street, are the ruins of the Priory. Further on, at the end of this street, is St. Mary's church, and a little beyond it a square, on the west side of which are the ruins of St. Martin's le Grand church. In the midst of it is the Court-hall, built in 1623, underneath which the Market is held on every Wednesday and Saturday; and in this square there is a large Fair, formerly held yearly on Nov. 11, being St. Martin's Day, the tutelar saint of this place, but now, by the alteration of the style, on Nov. 22, which continues for three market-days; besides which there is another Fair held near the town, where there was once a chapel, (w) In 1572, there was a Dutch church in this town.—James Ginion, of Dover, grocer, by will proved 1704, gave 10l. in trust, to be put out at interest, the benefit thereof to be paid towards the entertainment, diet, and horse-meat, of friends, called Quakers, who should from time to time come and preach the truth among the congregation of friends living at Dover.

David Simpson, of Dover, mariner, by will proved in 1723, gave to the Protestant Dissenters, then meeting at Dover, of which he was an elder, 100l. to be paid to trustees, to be by them put out at interest, or laid out in the purchase of lands and tenements; the profits or interest thereof to be distributed to the Minister, or Ministers of the said congregation, or to the poor members of the same.

(x) By a statute, made anno 4 Edw. III, it was enacted, that, as formerly a man with his horse used to pay only two shillings, for his passage from Dover, and a man on foot only sixpence;—in the Port of Dover the passengers should pay no more than was usual, and that the Keeper of Dover Castle should have notice of this, and put the law in execution at his peril; and if he should find any one who infringed the law, he should be punished at the suit of any one who would make complaint. A law, says Burrington, in his Observations on the Antient Statutes, which deserves much to be put in execution, though it had escaped most Lawyers, he believed, both from its antiquity and from its not being translated; and he particularly doubts, whether the Keeper of Dover Castle knew any thing of such a regulation, though the observance of it is so strongly enjoined to him, and that by an Act of Parliament, which still continues unrepealed.

dedicated to St. Bartholomew, on the day of that saint, being August 24, yearly.

At no great distance, eastward, from the above square, two narrow streets intervening, is a square platform, on which are mounted three guns, called from hence the Three-gun Battery, pointing over the beach towards the bay. Hence to the left leads to St. James's church, being the high road to Dover Castle, and so on to the Town of Deal. And to the right, through Snargate-street, leads to the Harbour and Pier; close to which are situated the Custom-house, the public inns, the Agents offices, the two banking-houses, and the warehouses and magazines for merchandize; all which being centered near together here, causes a perpetual bustle and hurry of business, and a crowd, especially of sea-faring people, as well of English as of other nations.

Here, whatever relates to the shipping, or their cargoes, and refitting them, is transacted; here the packets and passage-boats lie (x); and every one embarks and lands—so that here all the wealth and business of the town seems concentrated.

There are three forts; one at the south-west end on the height, called Arckcliff-fort; another called Lord North's battery, at the south-west end of the Rope-walk; and the other at the east end, under the Castle cliff (y). The first and last, under the command of a Captain, Lieutenant, &c. were repaired in the late reign of K. George II; and the other was built whilst Lord North was Constable and Warden, and called after his name.

Here are in this town, Establishments of the Offices of Ordnance, Customs, Excise, Victualling, and Post-office. A Court of Requests is established in it, by an act passed in the year 1784, anno 24 George III, for the recovery of small debts in this town, and in several of the adjacent parishes mentioned in it.

(y) Underneath this cliff, near the upper end of the Rope-walk, was cut and hollowed out, in the year 1735, a range of wine-vaults, which extend inward, from the entrance, 189 feet within the cliff, in a direct line to which, if the parts that branch off are added, they make 366 feet; they are 14 feet wide, and vary in height from 8 to 16 feet. These vaults are well worth the observations of the curious.

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

The TOWN of DOVER is placed in a most beautiful and romantic situation; for the most part at the foot of the high chalk cliffs, which hang tremendously over the roofs of the houses close underneath them. The air is exceedingly healthy; on which account, and for the benefit of sea-bathing, there being a fine open bold beach all along this shore, numbers of families resort hither during the summer season. Whoever visits this place cannot fail to receive a still further pleasure, from the views of the high and stupendous white cliffs along the shore, and the grandeur of the neighbouring hills; of the azure sea, with the moving prospect on it, bounded by the variegated Bologne hills, on the coast of France; and from the continued novelty afforded, in the time of peace, by the packets and passage-boats to and from France, almost every hour, filled with passengers of every rank and country.

In this town, the Lord Warden holds a Court of Lode Manage, called, by some, the Trinity-House, to which there is a Clerk and Sergeant belonging, at which are chosen and appointed a certain number of skilful and sufficient Pilots (z), for the safe direction and guidance of ships into ports, and up the rivers Thames and Medway. Their number consists of 50, out of which number the Master of the Court is chosen, whose authority extends over those of Deal, Ramsgate and Margate in the Isle of Thanet; in conjunction with the Wardens of the respective places in which they are stationed (a); and for the regulation of this necessary and valuable body of men, the legislature has passed a law, under which they are at present governed.

The CINQUE PORTS, as well as their two ancient Towns of Rye and Winchelsea, have each of them the privilege of returning Members, usually styled Barons, to Parliament. The first returns that are mentioned for any of them, are in the 42d year of K. Edward III.

The following is A LIST of such returns as are to be found of the Barons returned to Parliament for the Town and Port of Dover.

REMARKABLE OCCURRENCES.

OF the several remarkable occurrences which have happened in this place, many of them have been already mentioned above. Being the usual place of passage to and from the Continent, it was of course the continued resort of royal and illustrious personages. When the monarchs of this realm came hither, they and their several great officers of state lodged separately, in the Castle, the Priory, and the Maison Dieu, as appears by their instruments and writs, dated from each of them respectively.

In Rymer's Fœdera, vol. i, p. 234, is a convention, made at Dover, between K. Henry II. and Henry his son, on the one part, and Theodore, Earl of Flanders, and his son, on the other part; being the 9th year of K. Henry II, anno 1163. K. Edward II, in his first year, staid several days at Dover before he embarked here for foreign parts, when he lodged at the Priory of St. Martin; and John de Langton, Bishop of Cbichester, his Chancellor, at the Maison Dieu. And the same King and his Queen, on their return from Bologne, where they had been married, landed again at Dover, within a month afterward, and both lodged in the Castle, and the above-mentioned Chancellor at his apartments in the Maison Dieu aforesaid. And the same King, with his Queen, attended by many Nobles and others, travelling towards France, embarked in 1773; and a new writ was ordered. Journals, vol. xxxiv. When Thomas Barrett, esq; was chosen in his room.

(b) On his death a new writ issued Jan. 5, 1789, and John Trevanion, esq; was chosen in his room.

(c) A new writ issued June 10, 1791, on his succeeding the Lord Viscount Belgrave, as one of the Lords of the Admiralty, and on the 17th following he was re-elected.

(d) Another new writ issued July 19, 1797, on his succeeding the Earl of Mornington as one of the Lords of the Treasury, and he was again elected on the 27th following. He bears—Paly of six, or and gules, a bend waire; with a crescent for difference, as the second son of the late John Pybus, esq; of Cbeam in the county of Surrey, by Martha, daughter and coheir of Charles Small, esq; of Lewisbam in this county.

(e) Freedom is acquired here by birth, marriage, servitude, purchase, and by holding a freehold estate within the town, of 7l. 10s. a year; but the annual value required for this purpose has varied at different periods, and depends upon the existing Bye-laws of the Corporation. The Franchise however, if by marriage, is lost by the death of the wife; or if by tenure, ceases by alienation of the freehold. Of late years the number of Freemen and free Burgeses has considerably increased. At sir Thomas Hales's election in 1770, the votes amounted to 929. Since that time, a large body of Revenue Officers have been disqualified by the act of 22 Geo. III. c. 41; notwithstanding which, the votes received upon the poll in 1790, were still more numerous than upon any former occasion; being for Pybus 701, Trevanion 550, Henniker 505, Buntinck 307. Total number of voters 1063.

here at sun-rise, at the Eve of the Ascension, in his 6th year; and he embarked here likewise at several other times (ee). K. Edward III. embarked here several times, as may be seen in Rymer's Fœdera. In the 6th year of K. Richard II, anno 1382, Anne, sister of Winceflaus, then Emperor, and daughter of the Emperor Charles IV, arrived here, and was received with great pomp, and was afterwards married to K. Rich. II, by William Courtney, Archbishop of Canterbury. In the 4th year of K. Henry V, anno 1416, the Emperor Sigismund landed here, in order to bring forward a peace between this kingdom and the French; but before he was suffered to set foot on shore, the Duke of Gloucester and other great Lords went into the sea, with their swords drawn, and declared, that if he came as Emperor, or to claim any authority, or otherwise, than as the King's friend and relation, they would not permit him to land; and this was done to assert the King's prerogative (f).

In the 12th year of K. Edw. IV, anno 1471, the Bastard Falconbridge landed here from France, with 300 men, which having increased to 2000, he marched with them towards London.

K. Henry VIII. was frequently here, in particular in his 6th year, anno 1514, he accompanied his beautiful sister, Mary, hither, where she embarked for France, to marry Louis the French King; and on May 26th in his 12th year, he came hither to meet the Emperor Charles V, who had that evening landed here, and went immediately to the Castle, where the Emperor was lodged, and next morning being Whit Sunday, they rode together with all their trains to Canterbury, where they feasted with great magnificence, till the Tuesday, when they departed again towards Dover. The King and Emperor keeping company together till they came to the Downs, where they parted, and the Emperor went to Sandwich to his fleet. The whole of which is minutely described by Stow, in his Chronicle, p. 506. After which, the King embarked here at Dover, on the last day of that month, with a great train of Nobles and others, (every preparation having been completed for the purpose) to meet the French King, Francis I, on the plain between Guifnes and Ardres, called, from the costly magnificence exhibited there, Le Camp de Drap d'Or. This embarkation was finely painted at Cowdry, the late Lord Monta-

(b) On this occasion, both on his landing and return, he did Mr. Feſtor the honour of using his house, when he presented Mr. Feſtor with a gold box, set in mosaic, in a very curious manner, as a mark of his acknowledgment for the attention paid him.

(i) This fatal distemper was brought to Dover by a young person, who had been in service in London. The parish-register in St. Mary's being at that time under the care of Dr. Samuel Hind, the Minister, seems to have been much neglected then, as to the entries of such as were then swept off by it; so that though there were great numbers in that parish, who died of the plague, yet only 212 are registered in the list of burials, between the first of April, 1665, and the 31st of March following. However, it should be observed, that during the time of the plague thus raging in Dover, cut's feat, in Suffex, lately burnt down. An account of which is given in the Archæologia, vol. vi, p. 179; and a fine engraving of it was made at the expence of the society.

In the summer of the year 1573, Q. Elizabeth came here, and visited this Castle and Town, in her progress through this county; from hence she went to Folkestone, where she was met by the Archbishop, the Lord Cobham, and other knights and gentlemen; and having staid a fortnight at Canterbury, during which time she was sumptuously entertained by the Archbishop, she returned to her palace at Greenwich again (g).

K. Charles I. came to Dover on June 13, 1625, to meet the Princess Henrietta of France; and the same day went with her to his palace, the dissolved Monastery of St. Augustine, at Canterbury, where he consummated his marriage with her.

On Nov. 21, 1673, James, Duke of York, the King's brother, afterwards K. James II, came to Dover, where he married Mary, Princess of Modena, his second wife; and in 1677, the King was again here to meet Q. Catherine.

K. Charles II, at his restoration, landed at Dover, on Saturday, May 26, 1660, about one o'clock in the afternoon. His Majesty came on shore on the beach, at the Pier, with the Dukes of York and Gloucester, and afterwards many Noblemen and Gentlemen. The town had provided a canopy on the beach, where Thomas Brome, esq; Mayor, the Jurats, and their Minister, having a large bible with gold clasps embossed, paid their duty to the King, and presented the bible to him; after which the Minister, Mr. John Reading, made a speech on the occasion. Soon after which, the King and Royal Family set out for Canterbury; and the same year, the King made the Corporation a present of a very handsome mace, now made use of by them. On it is this inscription: Carolus hic posuit vestigia prima Secundus 1660.

Christian VII, the present King of Denmark, on his visiting England in 1768, landed here; and again embarked here on his return to his own country (h).

In the year 1665, this town felt the heavy misfortune of the plague's carrying off a number of its inhabitants, 900 at least dying of this dreadful pestilence; which, it is said, swept off in London upwards of 98,000 persons (i).

person, who had been in service in London. The parish-register in St. Mary's being at that time under the care of Dr. Samuel Hind, the Minister, seems to have been much neglected then, as to the entries of such as were then swept off by it; so that though there were great numbers in that parish, who died of the plague, yet only 212 are registered in the list of burials, between the first of April, 1665, and the 31st of March following. However, it should be observed, that during the time of the plague thus raging in

Dover,

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

After this, a piece of land, worth then about 4*l.* per annum, was purchased by the Mayor and Jurats, on July 19, 1677, out of the monies and land, which had been given by well-disposed persons of Dover and other places adjacent, towards the relief of those poor sufferers by the plague here, in the year 1666 and the succeeding years; which land was to be as a stock, to be applied by the Mayor and Jurats, for the use of the poor of St. Mary's and St. James's parishes in Dover, should it ever happen that this town should be again visited by the like calamity.

LANDS IN DOVER, mentioned in ANTIENT RECORDS.

IN the survey of Domesday, under the general title of the possessions of the Bishop of Baieux, to whom the Conqueror, his half-brother, had granted Dover, is the following entry:

Hugo de Montfort ten in Doveve un Molin. qui reddit. 48 ferlingels de frumto & n ptn ulli Manerio.

Which is: Hugo de Montfort holds in Doveve one mill, which pays 48 quarters of corn; and it does not belong to any manor.

The hill, on the south-west side of this town, called Bredenstone-hill, on which the ruin of the ancient Roman pharos, or watch-tower, remains, as has been already noticed, is within the lordship of Bredon, within the liberty of this town, and was once belonging to the Commandery of Swynfield in this neighbourhood, belonging to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem.

The Abbat of St. Augustine's in Canterbury, antiently possessed two mills, and a Prebend in the church of St. Martin in Dover; but on a dispute between the Abbat and the Archbishop, in the reign of K. Henry I., relating to a certain yearly payment due from the former to the latter. The Pope referred it to the Bishop of Winchester, to settle it, who decreed, that the Abbat should assign over to the Archbishop these Dover, a piece of ground, on the side hill, fronting the Pier Fort, ever since called the Graves, was consecrated, where numbers were buried; and as this ground lies within the parish of Hougham, there is no doubt but the Minister of St. Mary's parish did not, nor could he attend, neither could they be inserted in his register. The bodies of these unhappy sufferers were in general carried from the Pier in carts, some few in coffins, but most without.

NATURAL HISTORY.

IN August, 1780, there was shot on the cliff at Dover, that beautiful bird, called the Hoopoe, as there had been two more of the same sort in the neighbourhood of it some few years before. It is a bird but very seldom seen in England (r).

Of the SCARCE PLANTS, found in and near Dover, the following have been observed:

Fucoides purpureum eleganter plumosum (s).

(o) Augtn. off. Inrolm.

(p) Augtn. off. Inrolm. Confirmed by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury next year.

(q) Augtn. off. Inrolm.

(r) This bird frequents the European woods on the Continent, and is very common in Germany; it sleeps during the winter, and is not seen till the spring. They never appear in these parts, except in the summer, and as soon as the young ones can fly, usually transmigrate to a warmer climate. Good drawings of this bird may be seen in the last volume of Edwards's Gleanings, Willoughby's Ornithology; in Pennant's British Zoology, vol. i, p. 257; and in the Gentleman's Magazine, for May, and August, 1777; and other books of inferior note.

This samphire, being a very fine flavoured sort, great quantity of it is pickled, and afterwards barrelled and sent up to London, and other places, as a great luxury for the tables of the opulent.

(i) He was buried in the Priory of the Carmelites, at Bruges in Flanders.

Henry Fermyn, esq; second son of Thomas Fermyn, esq; elder brother of Henry Fermyn, Earl of St. Alban's, was by K. James II, by letters patent, on May 13th, in his 2d year, created Baron of Dover, but he dying without issue, on April 6, 1708, the title became extinct (i).

James Douglas, Earl of Queensbury, &c. in the kingdom of Scotland, was by Q. Anne, by letters patent, in her 7th year, viz. May 26, 1708, created Duke of Dover, with other inferior English honours. He died in 1711, having married Mary, daughter of Lord Clifford, eldest son of Richard, Earl of Burlington, by whom he had several sons and daughters (k). He was succeeded in titles by his second but eldest surviving son Charles, who had been created, in 1707, Earl of Solway, &c. in Scotland, which Charles, Duke of Queensbury, married Catherine, daughter of Henry Hyde, Earl of Clarendon, by whom he had two sons and a daughter, of whom the eldest, Henry, Earl of Drumlanrig, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Hope, Earl of Hopeton, but died in 1754, without issue, and Charles, Earl of Drumlanrig, the youngest, died unmarried in 1756. The Duke survived them both, and dying in 1778, without issue, this title of Duke of Dover, with his other English titles, became extinct (l).

But the greatest honour to this town, was the birth of that eminent and illustrious statesman, the Lord Chancellor Philip York, Earl of Hardwick, who was born at Dover, of ancestors who had been settled here for many generations (m); his father, Mr. Philip York, of Dover, being bred to the profession of the law, died suddenly there in 1721, possessed of property in Dover, and other adjacent parishes (n). The Earl was Recorder of Dover, which office he condescended to keep till his death in 1764 (o), when he was succeeded in it by his second son, the Honourable Charles York, afterwards, in 1770, made

(k) He bore for his arms—Quarterly; 1st and 4th, argent, a human heart gules, imperially crowned proper; on a chief azure, 3 mullets of the 1st; for Douglas. 2d and 3d, azure, a bend, between 6 cross crosslets fitchés, or; for Marr. All within a bordure of the last, charged with the double tressure of Scotland, which tressure was added by K. Charles II, when he honoured the family with the Marquisate of Queensbury. Supporters, two Pegasus's argent; their wings, manes, and hoofs, or.

(l) He was succeeded in all his Scotch honours by James Douglas, Earl of March, descended from William, created Earl of March, second son of William, first Duke of Queensbury, the great-grandfather of the present James, Duke of Queensbury above-mentioned.

(m) There are several of their wills in the Pretog. office, Canterbury.

(n) He lies in St. James's church in this town, of which he was Town-clerk; as does Simon Yorke his father, who died in 1682.

Lord Chancellor, and created Baron Morden, who died suddenly before his patent was completed; and his third son, the Right Honourable sir Joseph York, K. B. General in the Army, Ambassador extraordinary at the Hague, and a Privy Counsellor, was, from respect to his father, for two successive Parliaments chosen one of the Barons in Parliament for this Town and Port.

On Sept. 19, 1788, he was, by letters patent, created Lord Dover, Baron of Dover, in the co. of Kent. He died on Dec. 2, 1792, in the 69th year of his age, without issue, so that this title became extinct (p). He married, in 1783, the Baroness Dowager de Boetzelier, of Holland, who survived him, but died in 1793.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

THE Honour of Peverel, alias De Dover, was so called from Jeffery de Peverel, who was one of those Captains associated with John de Fiennes, for the defence of Dover Castle; and had certain lands given to him on that account, which together made up the above barony, which was likewise called De Dover, from its tenure to this Castle. The eminent family of De Dover flourished at Chilham, from the time of the conquest to the reign of K. Henry III; they were descended from Fulbert, who held the manor of Chilham of the Bishop of Baieux, at the time of the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, which manor he afterwards held of the Castle of Dover, on the new arrangement for the defence of it; on which account he took the name of De Dover, which was continued by his several descendants down to Richard de Dover, who died anno 16 Hen. III (q).

In the Heraldic Visitation of the co. of Kent, taken anno 1619, is the pedigree of William Hart, of Dover, living that year, the son of Ralph Hart, of Bristol.

Of the family of Warde, descended from Philip Warde, of Dover, in the reign of K. Henry VII, whose grandson John was Bailiff here in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, and left a son William, Mayor of Dover in 1613, and Lieutenant of Dover Castle. They bore for their arms—Vairy, argent and sable; which arms were granted by Lee, clark.

(p) He bore for his arms, as they are entered in the College of Arms, the coat of York, being—Argent, on a saltier azure, a bezant. For his supporters; on the dexter—A lion rampant guardant or, gorged with a collar gules; charged with a bezant, between two mullets argent. On the sinister—A stag proper, attired or, gorged with a collar gules; charged with a bezant, between two mullets argent. For his crest—A lion's head erased proper, gorged with a collar gules, charged with a bezant. Motto—Nec cupias nec metuas.

The whole being the same as were borne by his father, except the addition of the mullets.

Of Edward Kempe, of Dover, son and heir of Edward Kempe, Mayor of Dover. His arms—Gules, a fess, between 3 wheatheaves or, within a bordure engrailed, of the field; granted by Segar, clark. in 1615.

Of Hannington, of Dover, esq; who left by Battell his wife, daughter of John Monins, Lieutenant of Dover Castle, three sons; Francis, of Sturry, gent. William, of Dover, and Monins, of Dover, gent. They bore for their arms—Argent, on a chevron engrailed, 3 trefoils slipt ermine; between 3 demi lions rampant erased, vert.

SUFFRAGAN BISHOPS OF DOVER.

It had been usual, before the Norman conquest, for the Archbishops of Canterbury to appoint a Suffragan Bishop, or Chorepiscopus, as a co-adjutor and assistant to them, who should be continually resident in his diocese, and should perform in all things the offices of a Bishop in the Archbishops' absence, who for the most part attended the King's court. These Bishops usually bore the titles of foreign bishoprics, which were merely nominal. Some writers, indeed, affirm, that the church of St. Martin, near Canterbury, gave title to one of these sort of Bishops for the space of near 400 years; but what renders this almost incredible is, that there is no mention of any such, in any history whatever, till near the time of the Norman conquest, and then of only two, Eadfin and Godwin, who are both styled Bishops of St. Martin's. The former is mentioned as such, from the year 1032 to 1038; the latter seems to have been constituted Bishop of that see in 1052, by Archbishop Robert, and died in the year 1061, according to the Saxon Chronicle. Upon his death there was no other appointed to Lanfranc's time, which was about nine years, who refused to appoint another Bishop of that see, and there was no Bishop afterwards of it (r); notwithstanding which, it appears in future times the several Archbishops appointed Suffragans, with foreign titles, down to Archbishop Warham, in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, when John Thornton, Prior of St. Martin's in Dover, seems to have been made Suffragan to Archbishop Warham, by the title of Episcopus Sirmensis in 1508, as was Thomas Wellys, Prior of

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

St. Gregory's in Canterbury, in 1515, by that of Episcopus Sidoniensis. But an act of parliament passing in the 26th year of K. Henry VIII, anno 1534, chap. xiv, for abrogating these foreign titles of Bishops, and enacting that they should in future take them from particular towns in this kingdom therein mentioned, one of which was Dover; the Suffragans to the Archbishops of Canterbury were in future styled Bishops Suffragan of Dover. The first of them was,

Richard Yngworth, Prior of Langley Regis, being consecrated Bishop of Dover, in 1537 (s).

Richard Thornden, alias Stede, succeeded in 1539, and died in the last year of Q. Mary, anno 1558 (t).

When Q. Mary came to the crown, the above act of parliament of the 26th year of K. Henry VIII. was repealed, and then the Suffragan Bishops assumed foreign titles again; and on the death of Richard, Bishop of Dover, above-mentioned, Thomas Chetham was consecrated, by the title of Episcopus Sidoniensis, and was Suffragan to Archbishop Pole, in the last year of Q. Mary's reign (u).

In Q. Elizabeth's reign, the last-mentioned act was repealed, and the former one of K. Henry VIII. was revived; and then Richard Rogers, S. T. P. Archdeacon of St. Asaph, was in the 12th year of Q. Elizabeth, anno 1569, consecrated Bishop of Dover, and was Suffragan to Archbishops Parker, Grindal, and Whitgift, successively. He was afterwards Dean of Canterbury, and dying on May 19, 1597, was buried in his own cathedral, being the last Bishop Suffragan of Dover.

(s) In 1537, Dec. 1, Archbishop Cranmer nominated to the King, according to the above act, two persons, for him to appoint one of them Suffragan Bishop of Dover. These were, Richard Yngworth, Prior of Langley Regis, and John Codenham, both Doctors of Divinity; and about a week afterwards, the King by privy seal appointed the former, who was consecrated on Dec. 9, following; the Archbishop by his commission ordaining him his Suffragan, until he should revoke his commission for it, in which it was expressed that his duty, and the exercise of his office was confined within the diocese and city of Canterbury, the jurisdiction of Calais, and the marches thereof. His office was to confirm children; to bless altars, chalices, vestments, &c. to suspend from churches and places, and to restore to them again; to consecrate new churches and altars; to confer all the lesser orders; to consecrate the holy oil of chrism and sacred unction; and to perform all other things belonging to the office of a Bishop. See Strype's Life of Cranmer, appendix, No. xxii.

(t) He was a Monk of Christ Church, Canterbury, before the dissolution of the Priory, and was by K. Henry VIII. the same year, anno 31 of that reign, appointed to the first prebendal stall in the new foundation there, and had been Master or Custos of Canterbury Hall in Oxford. In the

THE PRIORY, with THE COLLEGIATE CHURCH OF ST. MARTIN.

It has been already mentioned above, in the account of the Castle, that there was an ancient church or chapel, for the believing Romans within the walls of it. In this church, Eadbald, the son and successor of Ethelbert, K. of Kent, who during his father's life time had been entrusted with the government of this Castle, having at the latter end of his reign renounced the errors of Paganism (v), founded a College of six Secular Canons, and a Provost (w), whose habitations were undoubtedly built near it; and he endowed them with as many Prebends for their maintenance; and here they continued till the year 691, when Widred, K. of Kent, having increased the fortifications here, and finding the residence of the Canons within them an incumbrance, removed them from thence into the Town of Dover, to the church of St. Martin (x), which he had built for them; the ruins of which are still to be seen near the present Market-place there; making up the number of Canons twenty-two, and endowed them with as many Prebends, and with the franchises and privileges, wholly the same as they enjoyed in the Castle; and he granted that they should be subject to no Prelate or Ordinary, but to the King only (y). This church being then, as well as afterwards, esteemed the same as that in the Castle had been before, the King's Royal Chapel, and as such, subject to his peculiar jurisdiction only (z). And it remained nearly in the same state at the time of the conquest, excepting that whereas in the reign of above year, the King, for divers good causes and considerations, granted to Richard, Suffragan Bishop of Dover, the house and site of the late dissolved monastery of Childrens-Langley in the co. of Hertford, and divers manors and lands in this county, late belonging to it, to hold to him for life, without any account or rent whatsoever: provided if he should be promoted to one or more ecclesiastical benefices or annuity, of the annual or greater value than 100l. that then that grant should be void. Augtn. off. Inrolm. He was a great enemy to Archbishop Cranmer, and appears to have been a great temporiser; for when Q. Mary came to the crown, he was the first that said mass at Dover, and being Vice-Dean, in the absence of Dean Wotton, did the same in the cathedral of Canterbury.

(y) One privilege enjoyed by this church was, that till mass was begun in it, there should not be any mass begun in any other church within the town; notice of which was given by a particular bell always rung for that purpose.

(z) It was of course accounted an exempt from the Archdeacon's jurisdiction. See Prynne, p. 1304; where there is a petition

Besides the above entry in the record of Domesday, of the several Prebends, there are several others, under the general title of the lands of the Canons of St. Martin of Dover. Those which relate to their possessions in particular parishes, the reader will find inserted in the several descriptions of those parishes; besides which there are the following of a more general tenor:

In Lest de Estrede habebant Canonici de Sco Martino T. R. E. 21. solin. In bund de Corneby & in bund de Beusberge.

In Lest de Linuarlet habebant 3. solins. unu in Estret bund. aliu in Beliffolt bund. & tertii in Blacheborn bund.

Which is: Also the possessions of St. Martin.

Of the Community of St. Martin, 3 Canons have together 1 suling and 16 acres, that is Suid, Godric, and Seuuen. In this land there are 4 villeins, and 9 borderers, with one carucate, paying 22 skillings. Of the lath of Limwarlet, one suling, in Blacbeburne Hundred; and there are 9 villeins, with 2 carucates, paying 16 skillings and 8 pence. In Stret Hundred lies one suling of Stanetdeste. There are 7 villeins, having 2 carucates and an half, and 7 borderers, and one meadow, paying 16 skillings and 8 pence. In Bilefold Hundred, one suling of Stanestede. There are 7 villeins and 7 borderers, and they have 4 carucates, and pay 20 skillings, 2 pence less. To these 3 sulings are 5 dennis, and 6 villeins, and 5 borderers, and they pay 9 skillings, 3 pence less, having 3 carucates and an half. In Brensete, being a little land, are 2 villeins and 3 borderers, and they have half a carucate; they pay 50 pence. Those 4 sulings above-mentioned, the Canons of St. Martin have in common between the wood and open country. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 10 pounds; now the like.

The Toll of Dover, in the time of K. Edward the Confessor, was worth 8 pounds, now 22 pounds.

There are 3 churches at Dover, paying 36 skillings and 8 pence.

Of the pasture of Medredive, and of the gardens of Dover, there goes out 9 skillings and 4 pence.

St. Martin has 10 mills and an half, paying 7 pounds. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, they paid as much; now they are valued at 12 pounds, but not to the profit of the Canons. In these mills there remain 8 men (a). At Scortebroc one pasture pays 2 skillings. Of this Community, the Archbishop has each year 55 skillings. There are 6 men, with one carucate and a half.

In the Community of St. Martin, there are 400 acres and an half, which make 2 sulings and an half. These lands never paid any customs or scot, because all these 24 sulings were acquitted. At Ripa, there are 100 acres, which were taxed, where they were taxed in the time of K. Edward the Confessor. At Nordeude are 50 acres, and 100 at Brand, which were taxed, where and as above. In this land there are 3 villeins and 9 borderers, having one caracate and an half. If the Canons had all these, as was their right, they would be worth 60 pounds each year; now they have not, except 47 pounds and 6 skillings and 4 pence.

Rannulf de Colubels took away from them one meadow. Robt de Romenel took away from them each year 20 pence, and one salt pit, and one fishery.

Herbert, son of Iuo, gave to the Bishop of Baieux a mark of gold, for one mill of theirs, against their will. Lambert one mill. Wadard one mill. Ralph de Curbespine one.

Alnod Cilt, through the violence of Herald, took away from St. Martin, Merelesham and Hauochesten, for which he gave to the Canons an unjust change. Now Robert de Romenel holds it, which the Canons always contest with him.

Nothing occurs further after this, worthy of mention, relating to this Priory, till the reign of K. Henry I, son of the Conqueror, who being present at the new dedication of the Cathedral church of Canterbury, in his 30th year, anno 1130, on a representation made to him of the state of this church by Archbishop Corboil, gave and granted to him and the church of Christ in Canterbury, this same collegiate church of St. Martin in Dover, with all belonging to it, for the placing in it the order of Canons Regular, of the order of St. Augustine, the Abbat of which should be appointed by a free Canonical election of the Chapter itself, with the Archbishop's examination and confirmation of the election; and that the church should be in the proper hand, under the protection of the Archbishops, the same as their own demesne; nor should any one change the above order for another (b). In consequence of this grant, the Archbp., who had found the Canons guilty of great irregularities, turned out the remaining ones in it, and to prevent the like in future, began next year the foundation of a new church, without the walls of the town, called from thence in future, the new work, which he dedicated to St. Mary and St. Martin, intending to add every building necessary for the accommodation in it, of a society of these Canons, which he brought accordingly from Merton, hither; which the Convent of Christ Church opposing, sent one of their own members to forbid the introduction of them, and if needful, to make an appeal to the Court of Rome, on their behalf; a short time after which, the Archbishop died, and the Convent of Christ Church took that opportunity of sending thither 12 monks of their own house, constituting a Prior over them. But next year, Henry, Bishop of Winchester, a man of great power, being the King's brother, and at the same time the Pope's Legate, expelled this new Convent,

So that, as the Archbishop's mandate imports, this church keeping for ever the said monastic order under the government of a Prior, as a cell to the church of Canterbury, should remain in the disposal of his successors, Archbishops of Canterbury, as to the church, to which it was at all times subject; and that it should never have a Prior, unless a monk professed of that church; and that the brethren taking on themselves the monastic habit at Dover, should always make profession, and have institution in the church of Canterbury; but he reserved the appointment of the Prior to the will of his successors. (e) Tan. Mon. p. 108. Dugd. Mon. vol. ii, p. 4. See the confirmation of it by the bulls of several Popes. Battely's Somner, pt. ii, appendix, p. 48. In these bulls, the several Popes confirmed this church to the Archbishops, and through them to the church of Canterbury, decreeing, that who were as yet but hardly settled, and compelled them to return to their old house at Canterbury (c). The next successor in the Archbishopric of Canterbury, was Theobald, who presently after finished the buildings, which his predecessor had designed, had not death prevented his intentions; but instead of Regular Canons, he established in it a society of monks of the Benedictine order, sending for that purpose in 1139, anno 6 K. Stephen, 12 monks from his own Priory, with Ascelin, Sacrist of Christ Church, to be Prior over them, making them subordinate to that Priory, and this being done by the Archbishop, with the consent of the Chapter of his metropolitanical church, (to whom it was a special act of grace,) was never more opposed, but was confirmed by papal bulls; so that it afterwards remained, notwithstanding the dissensions that happened between them, concerning their respective jurisdictions, without interruption, a cell to the Priory of Christ Church (d).

K. Henry II. confirmed this church to the Archbishop and his successors, in perpetual alms, together with the ancient tenths of herrings, and the new tenth of the fishery, of one whole year, which the Burgeses of Dover gave, and offered upon the altar, and with all its appurtenances; and he ordained, that the rule of St. Benedict should for ever be observed inviolably in it, and that this church should for ever remain in the hands, and under the power of the Archbishops, his successors, in whose disposition and ordination it should always be (e).

After which, Archbp Edmund, in K. Henry III.'s reign, favoured this Priory so much, as to grant several privileges to it (f); and K. Edward II, in his 8th year, confirmed to it the above charter of K. Henry II (g). Notwith-

the monastic order of St. Benedict should be always observed in it; and that there should be no cause of dissention between the two churches in future, they decreed, that the monks of both churches should be professed of one and the same church, and of one chapter, so that the monks of this church should never make profession elsewhere than in the church of Canterbury, and should never receive a Prior to preside over it, but from the Chapter of the church of Canterbury; and that the Prior of Dover and his monks should be for ever subject and obedient to the Archbishop and church of Canterbury, according to the above rule of St. Benedict; nor should this church of Dover ever be alienated or separated from the subjection of that of Canterbury.

standing all which, there still arose continual disputes between the two Priories, concerning their respective jurisdictions and privileges, and at the same time between the Archbishop and his own Priory, concerning the jurisdiction of this church; and on a process brought by the Archbishop against the Priory of Christ Church for the advowson of the Priory of Dover, in the 14th year of K. Edward II (b), the former recovered it against them; which right K. Edward III, in his 4th year, confirmed; and a judgment was likewise given, relating to it, against the Prior of Canterbury, in the 11th year of the same reign; but as some recompence on the other side, the King that year confirmed to the Priory of Dover, the profits of this port, and the toll of the market here (i). After which, to prevent all future variance (k), the two Priories came to an agreement for the determining of all disputes between them, which the King confirmed in his 24th year (l). But this not having any ways the wished-for effect, the Archbishop himself interfered, and at his request, the King, in his 30th year, granted licence to the Archbishop to annex and unite, according to a decree, which had been made by the latter for that purpose, the Priory of Dover, which was of his patronage, and was held of the Archbishop himself, in pure and perpetual alms, with all its lands, possessions, and rights, under pretence of its want of good government, to the Priory of Christ Church, in Canterbury, so that the Prior of it might hold it so annexed and united, according to the decree to him and his successors, and thence have power to dispose of it for ever, without any hindrance of him or his heirs, or others, with a non obstante to the statute of Mortmain; but that nevertheless divine worship, and other works of piety of old, established and ordained in the Priory of Dover, should be encouraged and duly kept up, without any subtraction or diminution (m).

However, even this did not put an end to the dissentions between the two Priories; for those of St. Martin's claimed a voice and suffrage in the election of an Archbishop, which those of Christ Church would not agree to; and the latter claimed, as having the King's grant of the former, not only the visitation of the house, but the admission of Monks and novices, at their pleasure, which those of St. Martin would never acquiesce in, till after many processes, and appeals at last, to the Court of Rome, and much money spent on both sides, the Monks of Christ Church, as most powerful, prevailed, and the Prior of Dover was in the end constrained to submission (n); though at the same time they continued as two separate houses as to their revenues and the expenditure of them, the Priory of Christ Church remaining only as patrons and visitors, having the regulation and superintendance of that of St. Martin, and supplying it as a cell to their house from time to time with a Prior and other members from their own Priory. Accordingly, in the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, the spiritualities and temporalities of the Priory of Dover were valued by themselves at 273l. 16s. 8d. (o) in which state it afterwards remained without further controversy, till its final suppression (p) on Nov. 16, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when by the management of the King's Commissioners, sent for that purpose, it was, with all its lands, revenues, and possessions, voluntarily surrendered into the King's hands (q), who, on July 2, next year, granted to the Prior a yearly annuity of 20l. sterling, during his life, or until he should be promoted to one or more benefices, of the same

LIST OF PRIORS.

William de Longeville, whom the Bishop of Winchester ejected, with his 12 brethren of this new society, as has been related above, in the year 1137.

Ascelin, constituted Prior by Archbbp Theobald, in 1139. He was promoted to the Bishopric of Rochester in 1142.

Hugh de Caen was Prior in 1142, who had been before Secretary to the Priory of Christ Church.

Richard was Prior in 1157, having been first a Monk of Christ Church, and continued here till 1171, when he was made Archbishop; having been a little before sent by this Convent to K. Henry, in Normandy.

Warin, Celerer of Christ Church, was constituted Prior in 1173 (t).

John, Celerer likewise of Christ Church, succeeded in 1180, being made Prior by a regular election, with the consent of the Chapter.

William, ordained Prior by Archbishop Baldwin, not by a regular election in the Chapterhouse, but at Wingham, according to his own pleasure; which is recorded as an irregularity (u).

Osbern, in 1189.

Robert, in 1193 (v).

Felix, before Sacrist of Christ Church, in 1196, to whom succeeded Reginald, in 1212.

William Dover succeeded about the year 1220. He was B. L. and a Monk of this Convent; to whom succeeded

Robert, elected about the year 1235; whose successor was

John; who resigned in 1251; who was succeeded by

Guy, resigned in 1260; and had for his successor,

William de Burwell; on whose death, which happened at Canterbury, anno 1268, Richard de Wenchepe, Sacrist, was nominated to this dignity by the Archbishop, on Oct. 28, 1268. Four years after which he was deposed, on the 7th of the Ides of March, 1272; whereupon the Priorship became vacant till the year 1275; when Anselm de Estria, Sub-Prior, was elected by the Convent. He was probably succeeded by John; on whose death, or resignation,

Robert de Whitacre became Prior, on the 3d of the Calends of January, 1289. After him,

John de Choldon occurs as Prior, anno 1321; as does

Robert, anno 1345, and

Richard de Hugbam, anno 1350; in which year

John is likewise entitled Prior, as is Thomas Dennifins, anno 1353, and William Chertbam, anno 1366, and James Stone, anno 1367; whose successor in this office was

John Newenbam, who occurs anno 1371 and 1372, as does

William Dover, anno 1392; whose successor,

Walter Causton (w), Monk and Precentor of Christ Church, Canterbury, and Master of Eastbridge Hospital there, was made Prior by Archbishop Arundel, in 1392.

John Wotton was elected to this dignity. The next found, is John Cumbe, elected April 14, 1444; to whom succeeded, after about two years government,

John Ashford; and to him

Thomas Dover, who was elected, anno 1453. After him,

Humphry (x) occurs as Prior, anno 1466 (y); as does

John Thornton, anno 1508, who was likewise Bishop Suffragan of Dover (z).

John Lambart, alias Folkestone, the last Prior who surrendered this Convent, as above-mentioned, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, anno 1535.

Thomas Riche, chaplain, Vicar of Bekeland, proved in 1499, by which he desired to be buried in this church, near the body of Humphry, late Prior of it, near to the altar of the blessed Thomas de Halys there.

(y) In his time, or soon afterwards, the cloyster of this Priory was rebuilt, as appears by the will of Robert Lucas, proved in 1484, who gave the sum of 13s. 4d. toward the making of the new cloyster here.

ao. 1397.

The Seal of Officer of Robert, in Dover,

Prior of S. Martin's Priory, ao. 1497.

The impression of the above seal is the history of St. Martin, who, according to the legend of that faint, met on a time, at the gate of the city of Amiens, in France, as he was riding to or out of it, a poor naked man; and St. Martin having nothing about him, but his cloak, for he had before bestowed the rest of his cloaths to the like uses, he cut off one half of that with his sword, and gave it to the poor naked man. At the bottom of the impression of the Prior's seal is the coat of arms of the Priory.

William Massum, of St. Margaret's Cliffe, by his will, proved in 1540, gave his convent seal, which he had of the late Priory of Dover, to his wife, for life, and afterwards to William Massum, his godson.

In the church of this Priory were buried many persons, inhabitants of this town, as appears by their wills in the Prerogative office, Canterbury, and, among others, Robert Lucas, in 1484; John Otway, in 1497; Harry Fravell, of St. Pe- ter's, Dover, before the altar of St. John, beside his mother, in 1514.

It appears that the buildings of this Priory were in a state of reparation in K. Richard III.'s reign; for that King granted to the Prior 100*l.* towards the building of his Priory here (a).

The arms of this Priory were—Sable, a cross argent, between 4 leopard's faces or.

After the suppression of the Priory, the King, by his indenture, dated Nov. 30, in his 29th year, granted, among other premises, the scite of it, with all the lands, possessions, and estates belonging to it, to Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury, and his successors, subject nevertheless to sundry exceptions and payments (b). Since which, the scite of this Priory, with sundry of the demesne lands adjoining to it, have remained parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury to the present time, and they have been demised by the several Archbishops, on a beneficial lease, at the yearly reserved rent of 6*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* the present lessee of it being David Papillon, of Acrise, esq; (c)

(a) Harleian Mss. No. 433, 1320.

(b) These exceptions were—the advowsons of churches, chapels, vicarages, colleges, hospitals, deaneries, and prebends, and subject to the payment, among others, of 3*s.* 6*d.* to the Archbp—6*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* to the heirs of Edward Hextal—5*s.* 10*d.* to the Abbat of St. Augustine—5*s.* to *Edw. The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

The remains of this Priory are now converted into a farm-house, barn, and other buildings of a farm-yard. Annexed is a view of the ruins, divested of the buildings, which have been added since the suppression of the Priory (e).

But the large and extensive manor of Dover Priory being part likewise of those possessions belonging to it, which were granted by K. Henry VIII. to Archbishop Cranmer, as above-mentioned, was demised by him, together with the royalty and manerial rights of Fritb, Gufson, Court Ash, Dudmanscombe, and Brandred, the small tythes of Gufson, and the three fairs (f), on a beneficial lease; in which manner they have continued to be held ever since—the present interest in the lease being vested in Henry Farbrace, of Ashford, and Isaac Mushey Teal, gents. the Trustees for the two minor children of Mr. George Farbrace, deceased (g).

A Court Leet and Court Baron is held for the manor of Dover Priory, at the Priory-house; at the Court of which, Borsholders are chosen for the Boroughs of Buckland, Gufson, Hougham, St. Margaret's, and for Netherton, which is a peculiar jurisdiction in the parish of Sibertswold.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL, alias THE MAISON DIEU.

Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent and Chief Justice of England, the most eminent subject of his time, in the beginning of K. Henry III.'s reign, founded an Hospital in this town, usually called the Maison Dieu; the church of which he dedicated to St. Mary, for the maintenance of a 1574. Thomas Peppr, of Dover, Jurate, died seised of the lease of this Priory. In 1600, Mr. Robert Bargar, of Bridge, yeoman, died seised of it. In 1639, Ralph Buskin, of Loose, gent. died seised of the lease of it, and gave his interest in it, by will, to William his eldest son, who afterwards possessed it.

Q. Elizabeth, in her 12th year, granted lands within the site of this Priory, to Hunningham.

(e) The ruins are very extensive, exclusive of the exterior walls. There are remaining, a good gateway; a noble room, probably the hall, which is upwards of 100 feet long, now made use of as the barn; great part of the church, with the pillars, and two arches; and there are many other pieces of ruins scattered about, the uses of which, or what they were designed for, cannot now even be guessed at.

(f) These fairs are certainly the three ecclesiastical fairs of St. Martin, St. Bartholomew, and St. Margaret, and by their grant they probably had a right to stallage and picage, which was money paid for breaking the ground, and erecting any standing in a privileged place. The fairs of St. Bartholomew and St. Margaret have long been neglected, and no advantage made of stallage and picage; but the Corporation of Dover claim a right to demand them, under a grant of the Market-place, from one of the family of Hugessen, of Stodmarsh.

(g) In 1709, Richard Walters, of Reach, in the parish of St. Margaret at Cliff, assigned the lease of the manor of Dover Priory, with the rest of the premises above-mentioned.

Master, and several brothers and sisters, and of such poor pilgrims as should resort thither. The patronage of which he afterwards gave to that King, who was upon that reputed the second founder; and being present at the dedication of the church of it (b), gave and confirmed, at that time, as well as afterwards, several manors, possessions, and churches, to it; and he, in his 13th year, granted that the Brethren of this Hospital should have the free liberty of choosing a Master, whenever there should be a vacancy, either from themselves or otherwise, whom being so chosen, they should present to him; or in his absence, to his Chief Justice; who should give without difficulty their assent, and afterwards he should be presented to the Archbishop, to receive his spirituals from him; and he granted, that the Brethren should have the custody of the house, with its possessions, and all their appurtenances, as well within as without, during the vacancy of a Master; so that one of the Brethren should manage the affairs of it during the said vacancy; and that no Bailiff of his should lay hands on this house, or the goods of it, moveable or immovable. All which grants were confirmed by letters of inspeximus by K. Henry VI, in his 2d year (i).

At this Hospital, during those times when the Kings of England, with their great officers of state, staid frequently in Dover, in their way to and from France, the King's Chancellor and his suite usually took up their abode in this Hospital, as the King himself did elsewhere (k).

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

K. Richard II, in his 1st year, granted to this Hospital the free liberty of choosing a Master at all times, without the King's licence (l). After which, I find nothing further worth relating of it, excepting that K. Richard III. gave to it certain lands in Thanet and in River (m), till the 26th year of K. Henry VIII, when the Master and Fellows, in number eight, signed the act of the King's supremacy (n). Not long after which, anno 36 of that reign, this Hospital was suppressed (o); at which time, its revenues were valued at 159l. 18s. 6d. clear value, or 231l. 16s. 7d. gross annual income (p). And the King, on Feb. 10 following, granted to John Thompson, Cl. the Master of it, a yearly pension of 53l. 6s. 8d. sterling, as a proper support and maintenance for his life, or until he should be promoted to a benefice or promotion of equal value (q).

William Warren, of St. Peter's, in Dover, by will proved in 1506, gave his houses, lands, &c. within this town and liberty, in the shire of Kent, and in the lordship of Marke, and within the Marches of Calais, to John his son, on condition of his paying yearly to the Master and Bre-elegant work than it is now, or indeed seems ever to have been in its best state.

(x) He promoted a scheme for the reparation of Dover Harbour, and went up to K. Henry VIII. with a petition, signed by the inhabitants of Dover, in favour of it; which the King so much approved of, that he made Thompson, Master of the Maison Dieu, and appointed him principal Surveyor of the works here, with four overseers under him.

There was once a small chapel, called the chapel of our Lady of Pity, and sometimes the chapel of our Lady of Arcliffe; from its situation on the chalk cliff, near to the present fort of Arcliffe; being built by a northern nobleman, who had escaped the danger of shipwreck here. On the suppression of it, with others of the like sort, in the reign of K. Henry VIII, it was stript of all its ornaments, and became desolated, and has been long since entirely gone to ruin (z); but the place near where it stood is still called Old Chapel, and Chapel Plain.

The HOSPITAL of St. Bartholomew, near Dover, was situated in the adjoining parish of Buckland, where an account of it has been already given (a).

Lambarde, Kilburne, and some other writers, mention a house of Knights Templars, supposed to have been in this town; and that it was here that K. John resigned his crown to Pandulph, the Pope's legate, in 1213; but there is no record, nor a trace of any such house of that order having been here (b).

CHARITIES,

Vested in the Corporation of Dover.

THERE was an alms-house of antient time in this town, as appears by a legacy, left in 1552, of 149l. 17s. All which were by Q. Elizabeth, by letters patent, in her 28th year, granted to William Skiffington and Elizabeth his wife, and John their son, for the lives of the longest liver of them, at the rent of 13l. os. 6d. per annum, but are worth, as above, by improvement 128l. 16s. 6d. K. Charles I, by letters patent, in his 1st year, inter alia, granted the above premises to Thomas Carey, esq; one of the Grooms of his Bedchamber, in reversion, for 40 years, after the decease of the three persons above-mentioned, at the same rent.

N. B. Only the said fr John Skiffington, kn. living of the three above-mentioned, aged about 70 years.

There is a clause in the said grants, that if any of the lands were found useful for the navy they might be resumed, making a reasonable abatement in the rent. Parl. Surveys, Augtn. off.—After which, on a sale of these premises, the messuage called the Maison Dieu, two water grist-mills, and the grounds called the Maison Dieu park, and the rest of the premises above-mentioned, were sold in lots to Nathaniel Rich, Azariah Hushands, Thomas Babington, John Brayman, Thomas Kidder, Edmund Lisle, and Thomas French. Seven deeds in Augtn. off. marked 22, 18.

Thomas Curling and Mary Abbot now hold part of the Maison Dieu Hospital, called Deadmans Wick, and Newborne Lees, in St. Mary's, Romney Marsh, at the yearly fee-farm of 2l. 5s. 6d. David Papillon, esq; holds part of the Maison Dieu Hospital, at the yearly fee-farm of 3l. 2s. 9½d.

(z) At the suppression of it, the vestments and utensils belonging to this chapel were valued at 200 marcs, some being to the rebuilding of it (c), which was not till the year 1611, when it was rebuilt, as at present, near the Market-place in this town. It was intended for the relief of poor soldiers landing from abroad, and destitute of lodging and support, who are there relieved, lodged, and sent forward to their respective places of abode. This house is under the management of a Master and two Wardens, chosen annually out of the Common Councilmen, on the first Monday after the 8th day of September. The Mayor, for the time being, is generally elected Master (d).

Thomas Badcock, of Dover, by will proved in 1616, gave 10l. towards the maintenance of this then new-builed alms-house, and the relief of the poor there.

Thomas Ellwood, of Dover, gent. by his will, in 1612, gave the sum of 14l. owing him by the Corporation there, to the Master and Wardens of this alms-house, towards the maintenance of it, and the poor people coming and resorting thither; and he likewise gave to the said Master and Wardens one piece of land, whereon sometime a house did stand, and then called by the name of the Hog-pound, lying in Dover, at a place called Above-Wall, and to their successors for ever, to the use of the poor of the said house, and for that, they should erect and set up some building for the approving thereof, to the benefit of that house.

(c) Robert Justice, of Dover, by will, proved in 1552, gave to the re-edifying the new alms-house of the poor there 6s. 8d. to be given to such as rebuild the same.

(d) This house, standing near the Market-place, is known by the name of the Alms-house, but when, or by whom founded, no one can tell. The antient house was situated in Bench-street, and near St. Nicholas's church, and was intended, as above-mentioned, for the relief and reception of soldiers and sailors. This house, with the consent of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, was exchanged for another in King's-street, (now called Queen's-street.) in Nicholas-ward, with Oliver Lygo, in 1522.* This house, or another built on the site of it, is still remaining, but the original design is almost lost sight of, as there is but very seldom any poor soldier or sailor ever admitted into it.

A poor family, or a widow, is generally put into the house, to take care of it, and they live rent-free; and I am informed, are allowed some firing, with the privilege of letting out the apartments to lodgers. The first room has several beds in it, and has the appearance of an hospital.

Christopher Nether-sole and William Brevis are recorded as benefactors to this alms-house.

* The above exchange was made with Oliver Lygo, by deed, dated Sept. 19, 1522. Underneath the present house is a vault, or cellar, now let at the yearly rent of 20s. which the Master and Wardens of it receive.

In the year 1726, a common work-house was built and established in this town, for the general use of the poor within it.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

DOVER is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of its own name.

There were formerly in this town six parochial churches, with six distinct parishes; four of which, St. Nicholas's, St. John's, St. Peter's, and St. Martin's-le-Grand, have been long since ruined, and their parishes united to those of St. Mary and St. James, the only two remaining churches; the two parishes of which now comprehend the whole Town of Dover. Of all these several churches, was the most antient in this town. It stood on the west side of the present Market-place, where formerly the cemetery of it was (f). It was built by Widred, K. of Kent, in the year 691, for the Canons, which he then removed out of the Castle; and it remained collegiate till K. Henry I, in his 30th year, anno 1130, gave it, with all its possessions, to Archbishop Corboil and the Church of Canterbury; but the Archbishop finding the Canons guilty of great irregularity and misbehaviour, which he found had increased from their intercourse and situation within such a populous town, turned them out, intending to build another church and college further off from the town, and this new foundation afterwards became the Priory of St. Martin, an account of which has already been given above. On the displacing of these Canons from hence, this church became parochial, and in distinction from that of the Priory, which was called St.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MARTIN-LE-GRAND

continued in the inhabitants; and in it not only strangers, but many inhabitants of the town, are buried. It is usually called the Old Church-yard. In it lie buried the remains of the celebrated Charles Churchill, the Poet, who died in 1764, with a small stone at his grave.

Martin

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

Martin the Less, alias the New Work, obtained the name of St. Martin-le-Grand. On the suppression of the college within it, this church lost all its ancient immunities and privileges, excepting that of being exempt from the jurisdiction of the Archdeacon. It remained a parish church till after the year 1528, anno 20 Henry VIII; for it is mentioned as such in a will proved that year. Most probably it was soon afterwards desecrated, and the parish was united to one or both of the present churches in the 28th year of that reign, when it was pulled down, as appears by a certificate concerning it, returned to the Archbp and other the King's Commissioners; in which it is said, that—in the Town and Port of Dover, there was a certain church, named St. Martin, which was taken down in that year by Mr. Thomas Wingefield, Mr. Raufe Buskin, of Dover, then Mayor, and Mr. Robert Nethersole the elder; and at such time the church was dissolved by the aforefaid men. Then Mr. Thomas Wingefield had the receipt of the lead and stone, with timber; Mr. Robert Nethersole, the tile, and certain lead and timber; Mr. Raufe Buskin had the bells, with ornaments, which, as he said, were given by the King's commandment to the Chamber of Dover; furthermore, that there were certain houses in Dover, called the Canons houses.—Of the ruins of this church, there is only a square tower remaining. The building, as Dr. Stukely thinks, seems to have terminated in three semicircles (g).

THE CHURCH OF ST. NICHOLAS

stood in the middle of Bench-street, on the north-east side of it. The tower, the ancient porch, and part of the walls are remaining. It was a small building, consisting of one isle, a chancel, and a tower at the west end, with a cemetery adjoining (h).

Thomas Hextal, esq; (i) who was buried in the chancel of this church, by his will, proved in 1486, gave all his lands and tenements to Edward his son, on condition that he should forthwith make, to the churchwardens of this parish church of St. Nicholas, a sure and lawful estate

(g) Leland says, of the six parish churches here, "three of them were under one roof at St. Martin's, in the heart of the town." These must be meant for those of St. John, St. Nicholas, and St. Peter; but though these churches might be subordinate to the collegiate church of St. Martin, as the mother church, and of the patronage of the college in it, yet their ruins, situated in different parts of the town, and still remaining, shew them to have been separate buildings, as may be seen below in the description of them. Indeed, it appears, by the record of Domesday, that three churches in Dover paid an annual rent to the Canons of St. Martin's church; for it is there entered under the title of their possessions, thus: Tres ecclie ap. Douera redd 36 solid & 8 denar. Which is: Three churches at Dover pay 36

of a croft of arable lands and pasture, lying at Maxton, beside Dover, bounded as is therein mentioned, to hold to them and their successors for ever, on condition that the one half or moiety, of the yearly value of the farm and profits of it, shall be by them yearly paid unto the parson of the said church and his successors for ever; and the other half or moiety to remain yearly to them and their successors, for the relief and yearly sustentation and reparation of the said church for ever.

This church seems to have been desecrated at the time of the reformation; and in the 28th year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, great part of it was demolished, as appears by the certificate mentioned above, returned in that year to the Archbp and others the King's Commissioners, concerning it; in which it is said, that—there was a church, named St. Nicholas's church, in the Town of Dover, which had certain lead on it, which lead Robert Nethersole had, and certain lands with two tenements in Dover, which lands and tenements were then in the hands of John Plaine, of London.

In the wills in the Prerogative office, Canterbury, frequent mention is made of the burials of persons, inhabitants of this parish, in this church; and among others, of Robert Colwell, in 1488; Robert Randolph, in 1489, before the altar of St. John of Brydlyngton in it; Thomas Hextal, esq; in 1486, as above-mentioned; Edward Hextal, in 1518, in our Lady's chancel; John Elfy, in 1518, in our Lady's chapel, before her image; and John Brown, Jurate, in 1522, in the body of the church, before the great rood there. And there is mention made of different persons buried in the church-yard, during the whole of the above time.

John Joiner was Parson of this church in the year 1518 (k).

THE CHURCH OF ST. JOHN

seems to have been of a much more considerable account and size, than that last mentioned. It stood at the upper end of Biggin-street, at the entrance in this town, from Canterbury.

shillings and 8 pence; viz. to the above church of St. Martin.

(b) It is now made use of as a stable. Several houses are built on part of the scite of this church and its cemetery, in which great numbers of human bones have been dug up. Mr. Ashbourne, the Baptist teacher, has the church-yard for a garden; his parlour is in the tower, with other apartments over it, and the crypt of the church is now used as cellars for the houses.

(i) He served in Parliament for Dover, anno 12 Edward IV, 1471.

(k) He is mentioned in a will, dated and proved that year.

The TOWN and PORT of DOVER.

If we may judge from the will of Mr. John Bingham, of this parish, proved in 1513, wherein after mentioning his desire of being buried in it, he gives different sums of money to the high altar, for his tythes and oblations forgotten; to the several lights burning in it, of St. John, the Cross light, our Lady's light, of St. George, St. Christopher, and St. Hilary; to six tapers burning before our Lady's undercroft there, each of them weighing three quarters of a pound of wax; to the light of the sepulture three tapers, each weighing six pounds of wax; and to the reparations of the church he gave twenty shillings. To contain so many lamps continually burning, and such large waxen tapers, the church must have been large, and the having an undercroft, shews it to have been a building of some handsomeness of architecture. It was desecrated with the others, about the time of the reformation, and pulled down about the same time, viz. the 28th year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, as appears by the certificate mentioned above, returned in that year to the Archbishop and others, the King's Commissioners, concerning it; in which it is said, that—there was a certain church in Dover, called St. John's church, which was taken down by Mr. Thomas Wingfield, Mr. Robert Nethersole, and Mr. Ralph Bufkin. To which church were certain lands, given by the will of Thomas Goore, to be prayed for in perpetuity for a Priest, for ever; which lands were then in the hands of Richard Mornings, gent. and to the aforesaid church were certain grounds, which John Boule, of Dover, had in occupation at that time; and to the said church was a censer of silver, parcel gilt; two silver cruets, parcel gilt; a cross, plated with silver and gilt; a chalice, well double gilded, which Robert Nethersole, of Dover, carried thence, to what use, or by what authority, was not known; and that the church-yards of the aforesaid three churches, last-mentioned, were then in the hands of John Boule, of Dover.—He died in the year 1556, and by his will, proved that year, appears to have resided in St. Mary's parish, in which church he was buried; and to have been then seized of a piece of ground, to keep hogs in, once the church-yard, sometime belonging to St. John's church, and likewise a stable, sometime St. John's church.

(l)

The parish of St. John seems to have been but small; for the value of the church of it, anno 8 Richard II, was reckoned but at 66s. 8d. and on account of the smallness of it was not taxed to the tenth (m).

THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER

stood on the north side of the present Market-place. It was a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown, and was valued in the King's books at 3l. 16s. 10d. (n) It is now ecclesia destructa; but when it became so, I know not, only that it seems to have been in use in the year 1611, anno 10 James I; and that the parish of it was united to that of St. Mary (o). It formerly paid tenths to the Crown-receiver, but being certified to be of the yearly value of 24l. only, it is now discharged from the payment of first fruits and tenths (oo). There was a cemetery adjoining to it.

RECTORS.

William Grene was Parson of this church in 1522 and 1523.

John Fyshe, in 1523.

John Gray, in 1611.

There is mention made in the wills, proved in the Prerogative office, in Canterbury, of many persons buried in this church and church-yard. Among others, of Thomas Toke, of Dover and Westbere, buried in the chancel of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in 1474; of Richard Palmer, in this church, in 1483, in which mention is made of the image of St. Nicholas here; of William Warren, of this parish, buried in our Lady's chancel before her image, in 1506, who gave to the reparation of that chapel, for lying there, 20l. and to the reparation of the lead of the

The election of Mayor used antiently to be in this church, and continued so till it was removed, in 1583, to the church of St. Mary, as has been more fully mentioned above.

Harry Frawel, of this parish, who was buried in Dover Priory church, by his will, proved in 1514, gave to the reparations of the isle, otherwise called a roof, in the north side of this church, over St. Stephen, and to the mending of the windows against Tronyon, five marks; and to the said St. Tronyon's light, a cow; and to St. Trofymonse light there, another cow.

stands at some distance from the entrance into this town from Canterbury, near the Market-place. It is said to have been built by the Prior

(p) Kilburne's Survey, p. 78 Harris's Hist. of Kent.

(q) Stev. Mon. vol. i, p. 41.

(r) It appears by the wills in the Prerog. office, Canterbury, that so early as the reign of K. Edward IV, the Master and Brethren of the Maison Dieu took order for the performance of divine offices in this church, and that there were then parochial churchwardens appointed yearly, who, as part of their duty, took care for the reparation of this church. There is a tradition, that two sisters, named Agnes and Beatrice, gave all their lands and tenements to the Hospital of the Maison Dieu, on condition that the Master and Brethren of it should find a Priest, to celebrate divine service in it every day, for ever.

(s) At the same time, the King gave the pews of St. Martin's church for the use of this church, and they were accordingly soon afterwards removed hither; but the several altars in it were not pulled down till 1549.

(t) Notwithstanding the church was not in the possession of the inhabitants in 1537, yet there was a forfeit exacted from them by the King's footmen, on account of the bells not being rung when the King was then here.

and Convent of St. Martin (p), in the year 1216; but from what authority, I know not. Certain it is, that it was in K. John's reign, in the gift of the King, and was afterwards given by him to John de Burgh; but in the 8th year of K. Richard II.'s reign, anno 1384, it was become appropriated to the Abbat of Pontiniac, and was valued at 106s. 8d. (q). After which, by what means, I cannot discover, this appropriation, as well as the advowson of the church, came into the possession of the Master and Brethren of the Hospital of the Maison Dieu in this town, who took care that the church should be daily served by a proper priest, who should officiate in it for the benefit of the parish (r). In which state it continued till the suppression of the Hospital, in the 36th year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, when it came into the hands of the Crown, at which time the parsonage was returned by John Thompson, Master of the Hospital, to be worth 6l. per annum.

Two years after which, the King being at Dover, at the humble entreaty of the inhabitants of this parish, gave to them, as it is said, this church, with the cemetery adjoining to it, to be used by them as a parochial church (s); and on the King's departure, in token of possession, they sealed up the church doors (t); since which, the patronage of it, which is now esteemed as a perpetual curacy, the Minister of it being licensed by the Archbishop, has been vested in the inhabitants of this parish (u); the maintenance of the Minister having been from time to time, at their voluntary option, more or less (v). It is now fixed at 80l. per annum. Besides which he has the possession of a good house, where he resides, which was purchased by the inhabitants of the parish in 1754, for the perpetual use of the Minister of it, for the time being.

It is exempt from the jurisdiction of the Archdeacon (w).

(u) Every parishioner, paying scot and lot, has a vote in the choosing of the Minister.

(v) The Ministers who have served this church, have been at times variously hired and paid, by the week, month, &c. and soon after the inhabitants having become possessed of it, it appears that this church was at times without a Minister, from the scantiness of a provision for him; to remedy which, the church habits and ornaments have been more than once pawned and sold, and the like has been done at times to repair the church.

(w) The parishioners had a notion, that this parish was exempt from every sort of ecclesiastical jurisdiction whatsoever; but there are many entries in the vestry books from time to time, which if extracted, would evidently shew them their mistake, upon which their continuance of the dispute with Archbishop Wake, as to his power of licensing their Minister, was grounded.

See an account of the difference between the Archdeacon and the Town of Dover, concerning jurisdiction, in Fox's Martyrs, vol. i, p. 450.

There

There is a piece of ground belonging, as it is said, to the glebe of this church, rented annually at 10l. which is done by vestry, without the Minister being at all concerned in it. In 1588, here were 821 communicants. This parish contains more than five parts out of six of the whole town, and a greater proportion of the inhabitants.

The Church of St. Mary is a large handsome building of three isles, having a high and south chancel, all covered with lead, and built of flints, with ashler windows and door-cases, which are arched and ornamented. At the west end is the steeple, which is a spire covered with lead, in which are eight bells, a clock, and chimes (*).

The pillars in the church are large and clumsy; the arches low and semicircular in the body, but elliptical in the chancel; but there is no separation between the body and chancel, and the pews are continued on to the east end of the church. In the high chancel, at the eastern extremity of it, beyond the altar, are the seats for the Mayor and Jurats (y); and here the Mayor is now chosen, and the Barons in Parliament for this town and port constantly elected (z).

From the largeness, as well as the populousness of this parish, the church is far from being sufficient to contain the inhabitants who resort to it for public worship, notwithstanding there are four galleries in it (a), and it is otherwise well pewed. This church was paved in 1642, but it was not ceiled till 1706. In 1742, there was an organ erected in it. The two branches in it were given—one by subscription in 1738, and the other by the Pilots in 1742.

In 1684, sir Anthony Percival gave two silver flagons, and the same year, Capt. George West gave two silver plates, for the use of the sacrament.

In several wills in the Prerogative office, Canterbury, mention is made of different persons buried in this church, and the chapels and chantries of it; of their donations, and other curious particulars, of which the following is an abstract.

(*) In 1634, a faculty passed for taking down a great leaden cross on the top of the steeple, and putting up a lighter one of wood and iron in its room;—for making a gallery at the lower end of the middle isle, next the belfry, and other improvements in this church. In 1497, there were only two bells in this church, but these were increased at different times to six; and in the year 1724, these six were new cast into the present peal of eight bells.

(y) In 1683, there was a faculty granted to the churchwardens, to remove the Magistrate's seats from the east end of the church to the north side, or any other more convenient part of it, and for the more decent and commodious placing the communion table: in consequence of which, these seats were removed, and placed on the north side of the church; but they continued there no longer than 1689,

Thomas Fuller, of this parish, by will, proved in 1482, gave to the Master of the Maison Dieu, and the Confreers of that house and their successors, certain messuages, with their appurtenances, in this town, for the celebration of masses in this church of St. Mary annually, and he ordered that the wardens of this church, for the time being, should receive of them, from the said messuages, &c. 6s. 8d. yearly, to the repair of this church for ever.

Thomas Toke, of Dover, buried in the chapel of St. Katharine, in this church, by his will, proved in 1484, gave seven acres of land at Dugate, under Windlass-Down, to the wardens of this church, towards the repairs of it for ever.

Thomas Toke, of Dover, buried in the same chapel, by his will, proved in 1509, gave to the churchwardens of this church, two acres of land lying under Stepping-Down, at the Claypitts, to them and their successors, to the maintenance of a light, hanging before the rode of this church, for ever.

John Templeman, in 1513, was buried in St. Michael's chapel, in this church; and John Claryngbold was buried that year, before the image of St. Erasmus, in this church.

William Smith, of this parish, was buried in the Trinity Chapel in it, and by will, proved in 1522, gave to the building of the new chapel, in this church, 2s. and mention is made of St. Anthony's altar in this church.

Thomas Lybeas, of this parish, was buried in St. Loy's chapel, in this church, before the image of St. Thomas of Canterbury, and by will, proved in 1527, gave towards the cover over the font 3s. 4d. and to the glazing of the window before the altar, in the chapel of our Lady, 6s. 8d.

Edward Modye, of Dover, Bailiff, and Captain of Arcliffe-fort in 1552, was buried in the chancel where the Aldermen sit.

Thomas Coorye, of this parish, in 1545, in Our Saviour's chapel here; and mention is made of St. Nicholas's chapel.

when, by several orders of vestry, they were removed back again to where they remain at present.

(z) The Mayor was antiently chosen in St. Peter's church; but by a bye-law of the Corporation, it was removed to this church in 1583, where it has ever since been held. In 1706, another bye-law was made, to remove, for the sake of decency, all elections from this church to the Court-hall, but it never took place. More of which has been mentioned above.

(a) These galleries were built;—that on the north side, in 1611, by the parish, by subscription;—the second, in 1699, by the Pilots;—the third, in 1721, by Henry Furnese, Esq; Representative in Parliament for this town and port;—and the fourth, at the charge of the parish, in 1749.

Henry Guildforth, Captain of the Queen's forces of Artcliffe, was buried in this church, in 1595.

Joice Evering, of Dover, widow, by will, proved in 1635, gave to this church 50s. towards buying a piece of silver, for the use of the communion-table, to be used for the holy sacrament.

Thomas Teddeman, of Dover, Jurate, was buried in 1663, near his wife and friends there.

The monuments and memorials in this church and church-yard, are by far too numerous to mention here. Among them are the following :

A small monument in the church for the celebrated Charles Cburchill, who was buried in the old church-yard of St. Martin in this town, as has been noticed above; and a small stone, with a memorial for Samuel Foote, esq; the celebrated Comedian, who died at the Ship inn, and had a grave dug for him in this church, but was afterwards carried to London, and buried there. On a flat stone, in the north isle, a memorial for Nicholas Eaton, son of Nicholas; and grandson of Capt. Nicholas Eaton, who died in 1729; for Captain Nicholas Eaton, who died in 1730, having married the daughter of sr Peter Eaton. A large monument for Peter Eaton, esq; who died in 1769, erected by his kinswoman, Mrs. Hannah Markland. Arms—Or, a fret az. Another for Mr. John King, mariner, who was shipwrecked on July 17, 1755, in the Dorington East-Indiaman, on Bird Island. A small tablet for John Ker, Laird of Frogden in the co. of Twit-dale in Scotland, who died suddenly at Dover, in his way to France, in 1730.

On a plain monument, on the south side of the church, is a memorial for Sampson Farbrace, Jurate, who died in 1782, having married the daughter of Lambe, of Dover.

Another monument, erected by the widow of his son, James George Farbrace, who died on Dec. 17, 1785. Arms—Azure, a bend or, between 2 roses argent, seeded or, bearded vert.

(b) He continued to serve this church as Curate, after the suppression of the Maison Dieu; and in 1547, the parishioners agreed to raise a sum of money yearly, for the payment of the Priest's wages. Towards the end of his life, he seems to have been disabled from doing his duty; and in 1547, in the accounts of the churchwardens, is a charge of a sum of money to help Old sr Robert to serve the cure, and Anthony Roger was hired for this purpose, and had 6l. 12s. paid him for his service; after which there is no further mention made of him; and the same year, either by his death or inability, the parish applied first to the Commissary, and afterwards to the Archbishop, for a Priest, to serve the cure, which was done accordingly.

(c) He was to have an allowance for that year of 8l. besides 13s. 4d. for his chamber and bed. In his time the altars were pulled down, and the church painted and beautified. The church plate, vestments, &c. such as were then disused, were sold to a considerable amount, to put the church and church-yard in thorough repair.

(d) He is styled Preacher of our Lady's church, and had by agreement with the parishioners 20 marks per annum for his wages, which seems to have been badly paid, through the great poverty of the parish, who in 1552 had an appraisement made of the remaining useless ornaments of the church yet unfold, it is probable, to raise money for the payment of his salary, for default of which he had left the cure at the end of the same year in which he took it; and Christopher James supplied his place; but, however, on the parish pawning two rich copes for 5l. towards paying his arrear, in all likelihood he returned to his cure, which he served till after Michaelmas 1553.

Before his time, there were several occasional assistant Curates, who were hired on great festivals, at graces, obits, &c. and were paid for their offices; of these, the following names occur, William ———, John Cockraine, Mr. Wood, and Robert Brown.

THE CHURCH OF ST. JAMES is situated in the north-east part of this town, near the foot of the Castle hill, close to the road to Deal. It was antiently belonging to the Castle of Dover; and in it the Courts of Chancery and Admiralty, and Lode Manage, for the Cinque Ports have been usually holden (v). The church has a square tower at the west end, having a ring of five bells in it. It is exempt from the jurisdiction of the Archdeacon.

It is a rectory, valued in the King's books at 4*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* (w) but is now a discharged living of the clear yearly certified value of 24*l.* It is in the patronage of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Archbishop Tenison, in his life-time, augmented this rectory with the sum of 200*l.* and confirmed that gift by his will, in 1715; but upon condition that the Governors of Q. Anne's bounty should augment it with a like sum of 200*l.* which they accordingly did, as a perpetual augmentation to it (x).

In the Prerogative office at Canterbury, are the wills of several persons, inhabitants of this parish, most of whom were buried either in this church or its church-yard. Among others, of John Claryngbold, buried in 1485, in the choir of St. James's church, before the image of St. James; and mention is made of the altar of St. Nicholas in it; of Thomas Fooche, of this parish, buried in 1490, in the church-yard. Elizabeth Wodde, of this parish, was buried in 1523, in this church, next her husband John a Wodde, and by will, gave half a sheet to the high altar

(q) He died Jan. 9, 1730, æt. 80. Mr. Nairn, his successor, was appointed his assistant, on account of his age and infirmities.

(r) He held it only a few months, until a new Curate was chosen.

(s) He was likewise Rector of Great Mongebam, being presented to the Archbishop, and licensed by him.

(t) He was Chaplain of Dover Castle.

(u) Mr. Lyon is a diligent searcher into the antiquities of this place, author of a treatise on Dover Castle; an account of a Roman bath, discovered near this church, and other ingenious treatises, in the Archæologia of the Antiquarian Society.

(v) Kilburne's Survey, p. 78, who calls it St. James the Apostle, alias St. James of Warden-Doune. Leland, in his Itin. vol. vii, says, it was called St. James of Radby, or more likely Rodeby a statione navium.

(w) It formerly paid tenths to the Crown-receiver, but being certified to be of the yearly value of 24*l.* is now discharged from the payment of first-fruits and tenths. Bacon's Lib. Reg. p. 32; but in p. 22, it is set down at 4*l.* 17*s.* 8½*d.* in the King's books; yearly tenths 9*s.* 9¼*d.*

John Broke the elder, of this parish, was buried in 1529, in our Lady's chapel in this church, and by his will, ordered certain of his lands to be sold, and of the money arising from the sale of them, 40l. to be bestowed on this church, upon a suit of vestments complete, to be prayed for in the same for ever.

Thomas Portweye, Jentylman and Bayly of the Town and Port of Dover, was buried in 1558, in the chancel of this church, next to Old Mr. Vaghan. William Normanton, Clerk of the Castle of Dover, was buried in 1574, in the east chancel of this church. William Warde, Jurat, was buried in 1623, in the eastern corner of the chancel of St. James in this church, called Sayer's chancel.

Upon a flat stone, in this church, there is a memorial for Simon Yorke, who died in 1682; one for Philip Yorke, Town-clerk, (his son,) and father to the Chancellor, who died in 1721—he married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Gibbon. A small monument in the chancel for Michael Hodgson, who died in 1730; and for Cutbber Hodgson, who died in 1751, who purchased the manor of Dover Priory; and in the same chancel, a monument for Henry Matson, merchant, who gave Solton farm to Dover Harbour, and died in 1722.

This church is kept very neat, and is well paved.

The HUNDRED of CORNILO

LIES the next northward from that of Bewf-borough. It is written in the survey of Domesday, both Cornelai and Cornelest; but in the 7th year of K. Edward I, it was called by its present name; the Archbishop and the Abbat of St. Augustine's being then lords of it (f).

In the 20th year of K. Edward III, on the aid then levied, this hundred answered for five knights fees.

In this hundred was a certain water, called Gestling, since called the north stream, which running from near Howe-bridge, in Norborne, flowed from thence through the marshes, and entered the sea below Sandwich. In this water, the felons, condemned to death within this hundred, suffered judgment by drowning.

The Jury of this hundred, anno 6 Edw. II, before Henry de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, at Canterbury, presented the Prior of Christ Church, for stopping up a certain highway from Dover Castle to Sandwich, by the sea-coast, by causing a new water-mill to be erected at Lydden, to the detriment of all passengers, &c. and by diverting the course of the water, called Gestling, (now the north stream,) where felons, condemned in this hundred, ought to suffer judgment by drowning, which was prevented by the diverting of it—and for raising for the space of four feet, a certain stream and gutter, through which the Gestling coming from the higher parts usually passed towards the sea, in which water the King had a fishery, worth 100 shillings per annum, the profit of which he had lost by that means; and 1500 acres had been drowned, to the damage of the King and the whole county, &c. The whole of which the Prior came and denied, excepting that he had erected the mill, which could not otherwise grind sufficiently for want of water, &c. And the Jury found, that although the way had been stopped up, yet it had been laid open again,

(f) In the Register of the Treasurer of St. Augustine's Monastery in Canterbury, taken about the 16th year of K. Henry II, it is entered, that the Court of this hundred might be held from three weeks to three weeks; and there the Borsholders of the liberty of the barony ought to present all those matters, which in a hundred are presentable.

(g) Regist. Prior Eccl. Christi, Cant. cart. 312. Dugd. Hist. Imb. p. 36, et seq. In K. Edward II.'s reign, anno 15, there was a writ for licence to the Borough of Sandwich, to turn the course of this water of Gestling, in which the so that it was then of no damage; and as to the mill, and the raising of the water of the stream—that there was then beyond it a fishery, which the King's officers of Dover Castle, by reason of its being within that liberty, sold yearly for 30 shillings, or sometimes less; and as to the water's passing by the stream, to the place where the condemned persons were drowned, and their bodies carried into the sea; they found, that after the stream was so raised, the water coming down by it from the upper parts could not pass, so that the fishery was wholly destroyed, and the bodies so drowned could not be carried off by the course of the water to the sea, as was accustomed, on account of the waters not passing from thence, and the land beyond the stream was so filled up, that it could not run from thence; therefore the Sheriff was commanded to cause the above-mentioned stream to be restored to the same state it was in before, and to remove the earth so raised beyond it, by view of the Jury, at the cost of the Prior; so that the King should again have his fishery, &c. and the Prior, in miser cordia, &c. (g)

In the 17th year of K. Edward I, John de Lovitot and Henry de Apulderfeld were appointed Commissioners for viewing the banks and ditches in East Kent, broken by the sea. They met at a place, called Ercheastro (b), and appointed the Hundreds of Corniloe and Easstry to choose one Bailiff and 12 Jurats, six out of each hundred; who being chosen, were by the Commissioners appointed, upon oath, justly to measure all the lands, as well of the lords as tenants, that lay within danger of the sea within these hundreds; and to cause the sewers, walls, &c. to be made, at the common charge of such as had lands so situated; and to oversee them for the future, and keep them in repair.

King had a fishery. Harris's History of Kent, appendix, p. xxxvi.

(b) Ercheastro is in the parish of St. Clement, in Sandwich, about a quarter of a mile south-east from the church, on the border of the marsh through which the two streams, called the Delf and Gestling run; and the rising ground is scotted to Lydden Valley. This estate, called Ercheastro, contains 24 acres, and is the property of Samuel Foart Simmons, of London, M. D.

EAST LANGDON.

These made a return to the Commissioners, that in the Hundred of Cornilo, the total of all the acres, subject to this danger and charge was 1600, the assessment of which was 35l. 8s. 4d. and in the Hundred of Eastry 1156 acres, assessments 24l. os. 8d. (i)

This hundred contains within the bounds of it the parishes of,

- 2, SUTTON.
- 3, RIPPLE.
- 4, GREAT MONGEHAM.
- 5, LITTLE MONGEHAM.
- 6, NORBORNE. And
- 7, SHOLDON.

And the churches of those parishes.

Two Constables have jurisdiction over it, who are elected annually at the Court Leet, held for the manor of Norborne (k).

This hundred likewise contained formerly the Town and Parish of Deal, and the Parish of Walmer, and the Parish of Ringwold with the Hamlet of Kingsdowne; all three long since united to the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, as will be mentioned further below.

EAST LANGDON,

SO called in regard to the adjoining parish of West Langdon, and from the two words, Lange and Dune, signifying the Long down or bill; this parish being frequently written in antient records, Langedune.

There are two boroughs in this parish, viz. East Langdon and Martin. A Borsholder is chosen for the first at the Court held for the manor of East Langdon; and one for the latter, at the Court for the manor of Norborne.

THE MANOR OF EAST LANGDON

was part of the antient possessions of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, near Canterbury, from whom it was wrested by some of the powerful men of those early times; and accordingly in the Chronicle of that Abbey it is recorded, that in the year 1079, a certain man, named

CORNILIO HUNDRED.

Herebert, being received into it as one of the brethren, gave to it the tythes of five manfions, one of which was at Langedone, or 100 shillings yearly, at the option of the Abbat and Convent; all which, William Peverel had before unjustly extorted from them (l). And in the year 1110, anno 11 Henry I, Hugo, Abbat of that monastery, recovered in the King's Court, the lands of Langedon, with all their appurtenances, among others, against Manasses Arsic, who had then unjustly the possession of them (m). After which, the same Abbat, with the consent of the Convent, assigned this manor, among others, to the cloathing of the monks there (n).

In the year 1288, the Abbat procured the King's licence, by writ ad quod damnum, to purchase lands in this parish, and others adjoining to it (o). And in the year 1313, being the 7th year of K. Edward II.'s reign, in the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, the Abbat was summoned by quo warranto, to shew why he claimed fundry liberties therein mentioned in this manor, among others, and view of frank pledge, and all belonging to it, and other liberties therein mentioned. And the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant in this county; and he pleaded, that K. Edward II, by his charter, in his 6th year, had fully confirmed all of them (p) to the Abbat and his successors. After which, the rolls of the last Iter of J. de Berewick as aforesaid being inspected, it was found that all the liberties then claimed in the said Iter were allowed in it; upon which every part of the same was allowed by the said Henry de Stanton and his sociates, as above-mentioned (q). And the liberty of the view of frank pledge was in particular further confirmed by that King in his 10th year (r); after which, K. Edw. III, by his charter of inspeximus, confirmed to the Abbat and Convent all their manors and possessions given by former Kings, and by another the several grants of liberties and confirmations made by his predecessors, among which were those above-mentioned (s); and K. Henry VI. likewise confirmed the same (t). In K. Richard II.'s reign, the temporalities of the Abbat, in the receipt of the Chamberlain at Langedon, with those in Selling, Swaleclyve, and Ripple, were valued at 17l. 6s. 8d. In which situation, this manor continued till the reign of K. Henry VIII, when the Abbat and Convent, under their Chapter seal, in the 29th year of it, demised it with all lands, &c. belonging to it, and the tenths of corn of the hamlet of Marton, and the pastures of Guston, together with the rents of assize, views of frank pledge, &c. to David Forestall, for forty years, at the yearly rent of 19l. (a) John Master, gent. above-mentioned, by Elizabeth, daughter of Tomson, (remarried to Henry Buteler, of Eastry, and died in 1603,) had three sons and one daughter. Thomas, the eldest son, was of Stodmarsh, who died without issue, and gave that estate to his siter Elizabeth, married to Courthope. (See vol. iii. of this history, p. 650.) He had livery of this manor of East Langdon and advowson, and the tenths of Marton, anno 5 & 6 Philip and Mary, which at his death came to his next brother James, in tail male, by his father's will; which James, after his brother's death, was of East Langdon, of whom more below. He died in 1631, æt. 84, and is said to have been buried at Ospringe; though by his will he directed to be buried in the chancel of East Langdon church, by the stone, where his two wives lay there, and some handsome tomb, to be erected for him, close to the wall there. By Martha, his first wife, daughter of Norton, of London, he had three sons and a daughter. Martha married to sir William Cooper, of Ratling Court, ancestor of the Earls Cooper. Of the sons, sir Edward, the eldest, will be mentioned below. William died in his father's life-time, in 1620, having married Katharine, daughter of Roger Manwood, of Stodmarsh, and left issue; and Nathaniel was a merchant in London, and was ancestor of the Masters, of Yokes in this county; of whom see an account in vol. ii. of this history, p. 270. After which, his grand-daughter Catherine, in 1736, carried this estate in marriage to Lewis, Earl of Rockingham, who died without issue in 1745, leaving her surviving, who then became possessed of it again in her own right. She afterwards in 1751 married Francis, Earl of Guildford, by whom she had no issue, and dying in 1766, bequeathed this estate, among the rest of her property, to her surviving husband, who died seized of it in 1790, leaving it by his last will to his eldest son and heir, *Frederick, Earl of Guildford, K. Upon the Bishop's disgrace, four years after taking this survey, the King seized on all his possessions, and Hugo de Port, who before held this manor and estate of the Bishop, became immediate tenant to the King for it, as his supreme lord; for the King having put the Castle of Dover under a new form of government, assigned these lands above-mentioned, among others, to Hugh de Port, for his assistance under John de Fiennes in the defence of it. These lands, which together made up the barony of Port, were held of the King in capite, by barony; the tenant of them being bound by the tenure to maintain a certain number of soldiers there, from time to time, for the defence of that fortress.

Of Hugh de Port, and his heirs, the St. Johns, these estates, above described in Domesday, were again afterwards held by Robert de Champania, or Champaine, son of sir Robert de Champania, of Norton, knt. in K. Henry III.'s reign, as two knights fees; and of him they were again held as two separate manors, each called by the name of Pising.

(c) He was afterwards made an Admiral of the Royal Navy, and in 1718, created Lord Aylmer of the kingdom of Ireland, and died in 1720. See more of him under Westcliff.

(d) See an account of the settlements and title of this manor and premises from sir Henry Furnese, down to the present Earl of Guildford, under the manor of Coldred above. In the act and schedule of the writ of partition of the estates of the three sisters of sir Henry Furnese, grandson of sir Henry above-mentioned, anno 9 Geo. II. this manor and premises are thus described:—The manor of East Langdon, manor-house, lands, &c. 217 acres, at the yearly rent of 103l. 10s. quit-rents 1l. 6s. 4d. see-farm rents 1l. 18s.—Church farm, 185 acres, yearly rent 65l. to the Rector 4l.—Street farm, 180 acres, rent 60l. Martin tythes 38l. being the tythes of corn within that ville.

ONE of these manors, (being two thirds of a knight's fee, the other third being held by Hubert de Burgh, and afterwards by the Master and Brethren of the Hospital of St. Mary, in Dover, as has been already mentioned (f), was held in manner, as above-noticed, by the family of St. Leger, in which it continued, till Greyland St. Leger sold it in 1227, anno 12 Henry III, (g) by the description of his capital estate of Pysing, and the third part of the corn at Pynham, and the donation and advowson of all the tythes of Pysing, to Bertram de Criol, then Constable of Dover Castle (h), who gave the same soon afterwards to the Abbat and Convent of St. Radigund, near Dover (i); and on the aid levied in the 20th year of K. Edward III, the Abbat of St. Radigund and the Master of the Maison Dieu, in Dover, answered for one knight's fee at Pysing, of which the aforesaid Master held one third part of John de Champania, and he again of John de St. John.

The OTHER of these manors was held as half a knight's fee by a family, who took their name of Pysing from their residence at it, and continued here till the middle of K. Henry III.'s reign, when it passed into that of Bikenore, whence it acquired the name of Pysing Bikenore; but one of them, John, son of William de Bikenore, in the year 1243, anno 28 Henry III, in consideration of 100l. enfeoffed the Abbat and Convent of St. Radigund in this estate, which then consisted of 152 acres and an half of land (k). After which, they held this manor of John de Bikenore and his heirs, as he again did of John de St. John, the superior lord of the fee of it (l). And in the 20th year of K. Edward III, the Abbat and Convent paid aid for this manor of Pysing Bikenore, as half a knight's in Pysing, of John de St. John. In which state both these manors continued till the final dissolution of the Monastery of St. Radigund, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when they both came into the King's hands, who granted them with the scite and other possessions of it to the Archbishop of

The Earl of Guildford is the present lessee of this manor, on a beneficial lease, under the Archbishop (n).

There is no Court held for it.

There was a portion of tythes in Pysing, belonging to the Chamberlain of St. Augustine's Monastery, which were valued, anno 8 Richard II, at 20 shillings; and were assigned to the cloathing of the monks there (o).

THE HAMLET OF MARTON

lies in the northern part of this parish. In this hamlet, a branch of the family of Marsh resided for many generations, till they, about the middle of the last century, removed to Dover.

Philippot certainly never saw this place to give it the name of Marshston, (though it is so written in more places than one in the parish-register, through ignorance,) from its low and marshy situation; for on the contrary, it is bigb land, and appears to have been spelt in antient deeds and records, both Merton and Martin.

The family of Marsh above-mentioned, in K. Henry V.'s time, wrote themselves Atte Mersh, and in an old conveyance, belonging to a farm in the neighbouring village of Guston, late in the possession of William Boteler, of Eastry, esq; dated anno 7 Henry V, 1420, one of the witnesses signs himself, Wilmo atte Mersh; which William is mentioned with the date corresponding in the pedigree of the family.

(m) Augtn. off. Kent, box A. 21. In the authenticated pedigree of Monins, Mabella, daughter and heir of Bartholomew Pysing, is said to marry John Monins, of Dover, T. Edw. III; and to have bore for her arms—Per pale, azure and argent, a cross moline gules.

(n) The lease is of the scite of the manor of Pysing, with the demesne lands belonging to it, containing 200 acres; and a wood, called Pysing wood, lying in Guston parish. In 1643 sir Edward Master, knt. was lessee of this manor, at the yearly reserved rent of 7l. 16s. for three lives. It was then valued at 100l. per annum, there being at that time no house on it. After the family of Master, their interest in it was sold to the Furnesses, and from them descended to the present Earl of Guildford.

Their seat and estate here was devised by Thomas Marsh to his son John, who in 1646 conveyed it to James Burwill, of Sutton, Cl. and he, with others, in 1653, passed it away to James Casier, of London, merchant, on whose death, in 1669, it came by his will, in 1700, to his cousin, Jacob Watchter, in fee, and he in 1705 conveyed it to Richard Eames, citizen and pewterer, of London, in trust, for Susannab, wife of Thomas Weedon, and they altogether joined in the sale of it to John Baker, esq; Vice-admiral of the blue Squadron; who by will, in 1715, devised it to his cousin, Hercules Baker, esq; and he gave it by will to his nephew, Thomas Baker, of Deal, esq; for life, with remainder to his son John Baker, of Deal, esq; the present possessor of it.

The house, the Marsh's lived in, is, in part only, standing; built of stone and brick, and of no very great antiquity (p).

There is a portion of tythes arising from this hamlet, which antiently belonged to the Monastery of St. Augustine, near Canterbury; and in K. Henry III.'s reign, anno 1240, there was an exchange made, with the consent of Robert, Abbat of it, by which it was agreed, inter alia, that the Chamberlain should have all the tythes, as well great as small, which the Eleemosinary of the monastery used to receive in Marston, &c. (q)

This portion of tythes coming into the possession of the family of Master, with the manor of East Langdon, after the dissolution of the monastery, passed in like manner afterwards into the family of Furnese; and on the partition of their estates, in the 9th year of K. George II, being then of the value of 38l. per annum, consisting of the whole tythes of corn within this ville, was allotted, among other premises, to Edward Dering, esq; since sir Edward Dering, bart. in right of his wife, Selina, one of the three daughters and coheirs of sir Robert Furnese, bart. and he not long since alienated it to Mr. John Jeken, of Oxney, the present owner of it.

PRESENT STATE OF EAST LANGDON.

THE village of East Langdon, containing about 15 houses, lies at the southern part of this parish, having the church on the south, and the court-lodge on the north side of it (r). About three quarters of a mile further northward, lies the hamlet of Martin, or Merton as it

(p) The farm belonging to this estate is about 70l. per annum. From this family of Marsh, of Martin, were descended those of Brandred and Nethersole, in Wimlingwold. See vol. iii. of this history, p. 347. They bore for their arms—Quarterly, gules and argent; in the first quarter, a horse's head couped at the neck, gules.

There is a fair held in this parish on Old May Day, for toys and pedlary.

CHARITIES.

James Master, of East Langdon, by will, proved in 1631, gave to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor there, 10l. as a stock for the poor of the parish, to be bestowed upon wool and hemp, to set them to work towards their maintenance, they to receive such benefit as should arise from the working of it; which 10l. should not be lessened on any occasion, but should be from time to time so ordered by two of the most substantial freeholders, with the minister of the parish, as was by them thought most convenient for the above purpose; and whereas he had repaired the house belonging to the clerk, which was very ruinous, and had made a double chimney in it, that it might be a help for some poor body, who had dwelt in the street some reasonable time, being unprovided of an house and not able to hire one, his will therefore was, and he thought it very reasonable, in respect of the charge he had bestowed on it, that it should serve to that use, paying no rent for it, and so from time to time, as it should become void, to be a dwelling for such poor body; and when the same house appointed for some poor body, should want necessary reparations, his will was, that his executor, or he that dwelt in his mansion-house of East Langdon should sufficiently repair it at all times when needful.

A workhouse was erected in Martin-street about 1790, in which are kept the poor of the several parishes of East Langdon, St. Margaret's at Cliffe, comprehending Oxney, united to it sometime since in respect to the poor rates, Guston, West Langdon, Little Mongebam, Great Mongebam, Sutton, Ripple, and Westcliffe. A manufactory of spinning and weaving linen, facking, sheeting, &c. is carried on in it. The number of poor between 40 and 50. This house is visited by proper persons deputed from each parish, and under good regulations, so that it appears comfortable and clean, and the people content; farm, Street farm, and Well farm; all belonging to the Earl of Guildford, as has been before-mentioned; there is a fourth farm of about 50l. per annum, which belongs to John Baker, esq; of Deal. In the hamlet of Martin, besides the estate late the Marsh's, now Mr. Baker's, of Deal, there are two more farms in this hamlet, belonging to Mr. William King, of Dover, and the Executors of Mr. James Flint, of Ashford, deceased.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich(s). The church, which is dedicated to St. Augustine, is small and mean, consisting of a nave, a small isle on the south side only, and a chancel; a wooden tower at the west end, with a spire much out of the perpendicular, in which are four bells, none of which are antient (t).

This church was always appurtenant to the manor of East Langdon (u), and as such, the present patron of it is the Right Honourable the Earl of Guildford.

In K. Edward II.'s reign, the partial tythes in different parishes, and annual pensions of the several churches belonging to the above monastery, were allowed and confirmed to it by the Archbishop's Commissary, viz. the partial tythes in

(t) About the year 1295, the Abbat of St. Augustine made an institution of several new deanries, and apportioned the several churches belonging to his monastery to each of them, according to their vicinity. One of these was the Deanry of Sturry, in which this church was included. This raised great contentions between the Archbishops and the succeeding Abbats, which at length ended in the total abolition of this new institution, the churches of the new deanries returning to the same jurisdiction they were in before. Dec. Script. Thorn, col. 1979. See vol. ii. of this history, p. 454.

(u) There are no marks of antiquity in this church, nor any remains of painted glass. Against the north wall of the chancel is a monument for Thomas Marsb, of Marton, gent. obiit Feb. 13, 1634, æt. 51, leaving four sons and five daughters; erected by his eldest son and executor John Marsb. There was an agreement made in the year 1696, between the Rector of this parish and the Vicar of Northbourne, concerning the annual solution of four shillings to the said vicar and his successors, and confirmed by the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, in which mention is made, that the parishioners of the church of East Langdon were bound towards the repair of the church of Northbourne(x).

It is a rectory, valued in the King's books at 7l. but is now a discharged living, estimated at about the yearly value of 46l. (y) In 1588, here were 72 communicants. In 1674, there were the like number of communicants; and it was valued at 80l.

The demesne lands of the manor of East Langdon, about 80 acres, are exempt from the payment of great tythes, as are those of the ville or hamlet of Martin, in this parish, being the larger moiety of it (z); but the Rector is en-

In this church, there is a most curious antient pulpit-cloth, of crimson velvet, richly embroidered with the words, Jesu. Maria, plentifully worked on it, and two large female figures in gold embroidery, kneeling before two altars, with a book on each, with a scroll issuing out of their mouths, and underneath this imperfect inscription, Orate pro. ana Jobs cd Most probably meant for the donor.

There are two boroughs in it; one borough being chosen for East Sutton borough, at Ripple manor court; the other, at the court of the manor of Norborne, for the remaining part of the parish.

THE MANOR OF EAST SUTTON, alias SUTTON COURT.

THE manor of East Sutton, in K. Henry III.'s reign, was held by Hugh Soldanks, as three quarters of a knight's fee, whose descendant Stephen Soldank held it in K. Edw. I.'s reign (n); soon after which, it came into the possession of John Wyborne, and thence again to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, in Canterbury, being at first appropriated to their Eleemosinary. But in the year 1311, being the 5th year of K. Edward II, Robert, Abbat of that monastery, having assigned an adequate recompence to the Eleemosinary elsewhere, appropriated this manor of East Sutton, near Ripple, freely, with all its appurtenances, for ever, to the Chamber of the monastery, for the use of the brethren in it; the cost of which amounted yearly to the sum of 40l. 10s. (o)

In the 20th year of K. Edward III, on the aid then levied for making the Black Prince a knight, the Abbat of St. Augustine was charged with three quarters of one knight's fee, which John Wyborne before held in East Sutton, and which were before Stephen Soldank's. In which situation, this manor continued till the final dissolution of the monastery, in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when it was surrendered, with all its lands and revenues, into the King's hands; after which, this manor thus coming into the hands of the Crown, was granted not long afterwards to Mr. John Master, to hold in capite (p). From which name it passed into that of Wiseman, whose widow, Elizabeth Wiseman, died seised of it in the 4th and 5th years of Philip and Mary, leaving two daughters her coheirs, viz. Jane, married to Alured Barwicke, and Bridget, to George Throgmorton (q). conveyed his interest in it by deed and fine to John Fynch, and he levied a fine of it in Easter term, anno 17 Eliz. and in this name it remained for some time, till at length it was alienated to Den, who are entered in the early part of the register of this parish as gentlemen; one of whom built a large mansion of stone, in this parish, and the foundations of which are still to be seen on a pasture, on the east side of Sutton-street (r), in which they resided; as did the Foches afterwards. These were succeeded in this manor by the family of Hussey, in which it continued, till Grace Hussey the elder and Grace Hussey the younger, sometime about the beginning of Q. Anne's reign, joined in the sale of it, by the name of the manor of Sutton Court, with all its royalties, members, and appurtenances, the mansion of it, and 140 acres of land, in this parish, to sir Robert Furnese, of Waldersbare, bart. who died possessed of this estate in 1733, as did his son, sir Henry, two years afterwards, under age, and unmarried; upon which this manor, among the rest of his estates, by the limitations of his father's settlements, became vested in his three sisters, as coheirs of their father, in equal shares in coparcenary in tail general, with such remainders over as the same was limited to; after which, by a decree of the Court of Chancery, and agreement between the sisters, a writ of partition was executed, anno 9 George II, by which this manor was wholly allotted, among others, to Anne the eldest daughter, and wife of John, Viscount St. John (s), which partition was confirmed by an act of parliament passed next year (t). Their son Frederick, Viscount St. John, succeeded to this estate on his father's death, and on the death of his uncle Henry, Viscount Bolingbroke, in 1751, to that title likewise, and dying in 1787, his eldest son, George, Viscount Bolingbroke, became possessed of it (u); and in 1791, sold it to Mr. Thomas Garfide, of Deal, the present owner of it.

This estate, which seems in early times to have been accounted a manor, was held of the Abbat of St. Augustine, as of his manor of Norborne, in *K. K. Richard II, and it appears by a measurement made at that time, of the lands belonging to that abbey, that they possessed at Wynkelond, in the vale there, 39 acres and an half, and half a rod of arable land, and of pasture 192 and 3 rods (z).

There was a portion of tythes arising from this estate, which belonged likewise to the above abbey, which portion was appropriated to the Eleemosinary of it; but in K. Henry III.'s reign, anno 1240, by the consent of Robert, Abbat of St. Augustine and the Convent of the same, it was agreed, inter alia, that the Chamberlain should have the great tythes of Wynkelond, which were known to belong to the Eleemosinary (a). And in K. Edward II.'s reign, the Archbishop's Commissary confirmed to them, among their other possessions of the like sort, this their part of the tythes of sheaves arising from the lands of this manor, within the bounds of this parish (b); and Archbbp Thomas Arundel confirmed the same again in K. Richard II.'s reign, anno 1397, wherein these tythes are said to lie within the parish of East Langdon (c).

THE UPPER FARM.

THE family of Focbe alias Foach was as early as Q. Elizabeth's reign possessed of this estate, the lands of which lie adjoining to those of Sutton Court; and in that name it continued, till it was at length alienated to Wm Verrier, of Sandwich, gent. who died in 1710, having had by Martha, his wife, daughter of John Hugessen, esq; five sons; John, William, James, Benjamin, and Thomas; to the three last of whom, he by his will devised his mansion, houses, and lands, in this parish, to be equally divided between them in tail (d). Part of these lands, by Susan, daughter of Benjamin Verrier above-mentioned, went in marriage to Mr. Thomas Alkin, of Canterbury, gent. whose daughter, Mrs. Margaret Alkin, of Canterbury, a few years since passed away her interest in them by sale to Mr. William Marsh, of Walmer, the present owner of them.

PRESENT STATE OF SUTTON.

lies on high ground; the soil is very thin, and rather stoney, being a clay upon a chalk; but with variations like the other neighbouring parishes. It is mostly open and uninclosed, and contains 900 acres of land and upwards. There is no fair, nor any thing worth further mention in it.

CHARITIES.

Mr. Thomas Foach, gent. of this parish, gave by his will a yearly annuity of 40s. charged on his farm and lands, in this parish, called Upper farm, to the church and poor of it, to be distributed yearly in bread. This estate now belongs to Mr. William Marsh, as has been mentioned above.

Mr. Cushire gave two acres and a half of marsh land in Sboldon, now of the annual produce of 3s. 4d. to be distributed yearly in coals to the poor.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

SUTTON is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury, and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is but small, part of it having fallen down by an earthquake, on April 6, 1680. The present church consists of a nave and chancel, without any steeple. There is one small bell (e).

The patronage of this church was part of the ancient possessions of the Crown, and remained so till it was given to the college or hospital, for poor travellers, at Maidstone, founded by Archbishop Boniface, in K. Henry III.'s reign; after which, Archbishop Walter Reynolds, about the year 1314, appropriated it to the use and support of that hospital (f).

Archbishop Courtney, in the 19th year of K. Richard II, anno 1395, obtained the King's licence for making the parish church of Maidstone collegiate; and the King further granted licence to him to give and assign the above-mentioned hospital, with its lands and revenues, and the advowson, patronage, and appropriation of this church of Sutton, among others likewise belonging to it, heretofore of the King's patronage, all which were held in capite, to the Master and Chaplains of the above-mentioned new collegiate church of Maidstone, to hold to them and their successors of the Archbishop and his successors, in free, pure, and perpetual alms, for ever, for the better maintenance of them (g).

There are no memorials in it, nor marks of antiquity, excepting a circular arch over the north door, handsomely ornamented with a fretty sculpture; and a plain circular arch over the south door, both of much greater antiquity than the present church, and probably belonged to an older building.

The collegiate church of Maidstone was dissolved by the act of the 1st of K. Edward VI, and was surrendered into the King's hands accordingly, with all its lands and possessions (b). After which, this appropriate church of Sutton remained part of the revenues of the Crown, till Q. Elizabeth, in her 3d year, having taken into her hands certain manors, lands, &c. parcel of the revenue of the see of Canterbury, by her letters patent, dated July 12, that year, granted to Matthew, Archbishop of Canterbury, and his successors, certain rectories, parsonages, and other premises, in lieu of them, among which was this church, or parsonage appropriate of Sutton, with the advowson of the same, being then valued to the Archbishop at 5l. 6s. 8d. yearly value; since which it has continued parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury to this time, his Grace the Archbishop being the present owner of it.

The parsonage has been from time to time leased out by the several Archbishops, on a beneficial lease, at the yearly rent of 5l. 6s. 8d. Awnsham Churchbill, of Henbury in the co. of Dorset, Esq; was late lessee of it; since whose death in 1773, his interest in it has passed in like manner as Winkleton, above-mentioned, to Mr. Joseph Marsh, of Winkleton, the present possessor of it.

There are five acres and three roods of glebe belonging to this parsonage.

In the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, this church, or parsonage appropriated, was valued at 20l. (i)

This church has been long esteemed as a perpetual curacy. It was augmented with 24l. by Archbishop Juxon, in obedience to the King's letters mandatory, by indenture, dated anno 13 Charles II, which augmentation was confirmed by other indentures, in the 26th year of that reign (k). It has likewise been since augmented by Q. Anne's bounty.

R I P P L E,

WRITTEN in antient records likewise, both Ripple, and Ripley, lies the next parish northward from Sutton, last described. The principal manor in which, called was part of the antient possessions of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, and in the year 1079, being the 14th year of the Conqueror's reign, was given by Abbat Scotland to one Amfrid, called Masleclat, for his life, on condition that he should pay yearly, on the feast of Pentecost, 30s. and should pay likewise yearly the tythes of all matters whatsoever arising from it to the above monastery; and that after his death it should return to the demesne of St. Augustine for ever (1). But it appears not to have done so; for Hugh, Abbat of this monastery, in 1110, recovered in the King's court, these lands of Ripple, with their appurtenances, from Manasses Arsic, who had possessed himself of them (u); and this judgment was confirmed to the Abbat that year by the King, as it was afterwards by K. Edward III, in his 36th year, by inspeximus, among the rest of the possessions of that abbey (v).

After Abbat Hugh, above-mentioned, had gained the possession of this manor, he, with the consent of his Convent, assigned it, among others, to the cloathing of the monks of it (w).

In the year 1288, the Abbat procured the King's licence, by writ ad quod damnum, to purchase lands in this parish, and others adjoining to it (x). And in the year 1313, being the 7th year of K. Edward II.'s reign, in the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, the Abbat was summoned by quo warranto, to shew why he claimed sundry liberties therein mentioned in this manor, among others, and view of frank pledge, and all belonging to it, and other liberties therein mentioned. And the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant in this county; and he pleaded, that K. Edward II, by his charter, in his 6th year, had fully confirmed all of them to the Abbat and his successors (y). After which, the rolls of the last Iter of J. de Berewick as aforesaid being inspected, it was found that all the liberties then claimed in the said Iter had been allowed in it; upon which every part of the same was allowed by the said Henry de Stanton and his sociates, as above-mentioned (z). And the liberty of the view of frank pledge was in particular further confirmed by that King in his 10th year (a); after which, K. Edw. III, in his 36th year, by his charter of inspeximus, confirmed to the Abbat and Convent all their manors and possessions given by former Kings, and by another the several grants of liberties and confirmations made by his predecessors, among which were those above-mentioned (b), and K. Henry VI. likewise confirmed the same (c).

In the 8th year of K. Richard II, the temporalities of this abbey, in the receipt of the Chamberlain at Ripple, with those in Langdon, Sellyng, and Swaleclyve, were valued at 17l. 6s. 4d. (d) and the measurement of their lands, in this parish only, was, of arable 183 acres and an half and one rod, and of pasture 52 acres and one rood (e).

In which situation, this manor continued till the reign of K. Henry VIII, when the Abbat and Convent, under their Chapter seal, in the 29th year of it, demised it, with the tenths within this parish and Dale, belonging to the office of Chamberlain of the monastery, and all lands, fees, perquisites, &c. belonging to the manor, to Henry Foche, for the term of 40 years, at the yearly rent of 24l. for the firm of it (f); and in the same year, they demised their lands called Grenawaye and Palmers, with others, containing 66 acres, to John Warren, for the term of 60 years, at the yearly rent of 53s. 4d. (g). After which, this manor, with the other premises above-mentioned, remained with the monastery till its final dissolution, in the 30th year of that reign, when it was, with all its revenues, surrendered into the King's hands, to the use of him and his heirs for ever. After which, they staid in the Crown, till the King, by his indenture under his great seal, dated April 24, in his 34th year, granted this manor, with Greenway's and Palmer's lands, situated in this parish and Deal, in exchange, to Thomas, Archbp of Canterbury (b), who not long afterwards reconveyed them in exchange for other premises back again to the Crown, where this manor of Ripple remained, till Q Elizabeth, in her 42d year, granted it to John Hales, of Tenterden, esq; and he afterwards alienated it to John Gokin, gent. (i) who resided at Ripple Court, as did his descendants afterwards, down to Richard Cookin, for so he spelt his name, who about the latter end of K. William III.'s reign, passed it away by sale to sir Abraham Jacob, of Dover, knt. whose son, Herbert Jacob, of St. Stephen's, esq, afterwards succeeded to it (k). He died without issue in 1725, and lies buried in St. Stephen's church, with two of his sisters, who died unmarried. By his last will, he devised this manor, among the rest of his estates, to his nephew John Denew, gent. afterwards of St. Stephen's, who died in 1750, without issue; upon which it came, by the entail of the above will, to his eldest niece Dorothy, sister of the above John Denew, married to the Rev. Julius Deedes, Prebendary of Canterbury; and their grandson William Deedes, of St. Stephen's, esq, died possessed of it on Nov. 16, 1793, on which it came to his eldest son William Deedes, of St. Stephen's, esq; the present owner of it.

He resided at St. Stephen's upon his estate, which at that time was deemed a sufficient competency. By his will, he left a considerable collection of books to the Society of the Inner Temple, of which he was a Bencher. He lies buried in St. Stephen's church, where there is a monument, with an elegant Latin inscription, to his memory, which he penned himself, and inserted in his will. The Jacobs bore for their arms—Per pale and fess dancette, sable and or; in the 1st quarter, a pelican of the 2d. The Denews bore—Azure, 5 chevrons or.

is a manor likewise in this parish, which in ancient time was held by the family de Sandwich, as one knight's fee, of the family of Badlesmere; After which it came into the possession of the Leybornes; for William, son of sir Roger de Leyborne, appears by the Escheat Rolls to have died seised of it in the 2d year of K. Edw. II, leaving Juliana, the daughter of his son Thomas, who died in his life-time, usually stiled from the greatness of her possessions, the Infanta of Kent, his next heir, she carried this manor successively in marriage to her three husbands, the last of whom was William de Clinton, created afterwards Earl of Huntingdon, and he in her right was seised of it in the 20th year of K. Edward III, to the aid levied in which year, it paid as one knight's fee, which Simon and Ralph de Sandwich had before held at Wadling, in Ripple, of Bartholomew de Badlesmere.

He died in the 28th year of that reign, as did his widow Juliana, in the 41st year of it, without issue, and there being no one found who could make claim to her estates, even by a collateral alliance, this manor, among the rest of them, escheated to the Crown (m), where it remained till Richard II. granted it to sir Simon de Burley, knight-banneret, Warden of the Cinque Ports and knight of the garter; but he being attainted in Parliament in the 10th year of that reign, and afterwards beheaded (n), this manor became vested in the Crown, and the King in his 11th

In the book of the Treasurer of St. Augustine's Abbey, taken in *K. A free court, homsocne, effus, plag and sang, assis of bread and ale; and it has in demesne, Moukene, Langedon, and Wynkelonde, and a certain marsh in Dale, and there hold of the said manor the following hamlets: Ripple, part of Langedon, and Wynkelonde, and it has there one prebend, to which belong part of the under-mentioned tenancies: Dale, Guston, Bere; and Horsepoole, in Dover; Stonsted, in Aldington; and a court may be held of these tenancies wholly in all of them, excepting Stonsted; and at Stonsted, a court may be held of the tenants there, if necessary; and the tenants ought to follow the said court from three weeks to three weeks, and to have all the liberties aforesaid.

To this manor, at this time, belongs a leet, for the boroughs of Ripple and East Sutton, and the service of selworke; that is, ad metend annuatim tempore Messis, Triticum Domini super Terr. Dominicales Manerii.

George Lynch's* will is devised to the heirs of the Rev. Obadiab Bourne (v), and John Talbot, of Stone Castle in this county, esq. (w)

A fee-farm rent of 8s. payable yearly by the heirs of Dr. George Lynch, for the manor of Wadling, alias Walling, is now remaining in the rental of the fee-farm rents of the Crown Bailiffs (x).

A. M. Vicar of Limne, and Rector of Cberiton, with the vicarage of Newington consolidated, who married Mrs. Anne Smith, widow, who died before him, without issue. (See Stanford, vol. iii. of this history, p. 322.) Jane, who died unmarried in 1763, and was buried in Canterbury cathedral. Elizabeth, born in 1735; married to the Rev. John Herring, by whom she has no issue. Anne, who died unmarried in 1769; and Frances, who died an infant.

(u) This estate now consists of a mansion, gardens, &c. and a farm, called New farm, containing 220 acres of land.

(v) He married Rebecca, one of the sisters of George Lynch, M. D. another of whose sisters married the Rev. Robert Talbot, whose eldest son is John Talbot, esq; above-mentioned.

(w) This estate, above-mentioned, called the Ripple farm, together with Coldblow farm, purchased of the Larkins, by Dr. George Lynch; and Garling farm, purchased of the Warmers, by Dr. Robert Lynch; all situated in Ripple, and the property of Dr. Robert Lynch, at his death, are made subject by the Rev. George Lynch's will, on the death of his two sisters, to a yearly rent charge of 100l. to the Rev. Cooper Williams and his heirs.

(x) The fee-farm rents belonging to the manor of Wadling, alias Walling, by some means, which I have not found, were, in K. Charles II.'s reign, become part of the revenues of the Crown, where they continued till the 9th year of K. William III, anno 1697, when the King having promoted sir John Somers, Keeper of the Great Seal, to the office of Lord High Chancellor, and created him Lord Somers, Baron of Evesham, made him a grant for the support of those honours and dignities of the fee-farm rents of this manor, among others. (See vol. ii. of this history, p. 552.)

PRESENT STATE OF RIPPLE.

THIS parish is very healthy; it is situated on very uneven ground, having frequent hill and dale throughout it. The soil of it is much inclined to chalk, though there is a great deal of fertile land in it. The country is mostly open, and the lands uninclosed; it has no wood in it. The church stands on the north-east side of the village, which has Ripple Court about a quarter of a mile southward of it, and the parsonage-house nearly as far distant, on the north of it. There are about 16 houses in it, and about 900 acres of land.

There is no fair.

At a small distance northward from the church is a work of Cæsar's, thrown up in his route from the sea towards his main camp on Barbam Down. This is a plain small raised area, whose front looks over a pretty deep lynse bank towards the succeeding works, the progress of which has been already more fully related, under the description of Barbam Downs, in the third volume of this history, p. 752 (a).

There is a place in this parish, near the boundary, betwixt it and Walmer, called Dane Pitts, where there is an intrenchment of an oblong square, comprehending about half an acre, with various little eminences in it. Underneath is the form of it.

Remains called Dane Pitts near Ripple.

The ground of it is extremely barren, and has never been ploughed. Its name certainly points out its antiquity, otherwise I should be inclined to think it to be the remains of one of those little encampments, thrown up in Q. Elizabeth's time, on the expectation of the Spanish invasion. It is evidently a work of art, and has been made for a fortification of defence.

There were several parcels of land in this parish and Ringwold, which belonged to the Convent of the Minorites, in London, and were demised by them by indenture, anno 27 Henry VIII, to William Sidley (y).

CHARITIES.

THERE is a small parcel of land, being part of the waste, containing 18 perches, which was given in the year 1621, by Thomas Gookin, esq;

After which, these fee-farm rents continued in his descendants, till they were at length several of them fold off, not long since, to George Lynch, M. D. and others, and the remaining ones being trifling are sunk into oblivion; and there does not seem at present to be any manerial rights claimed, nor any traces left of its ever having been a manor.

lord of the manor of Ripple Court, for the building of a poor house, on condition of the payment of 4d. per annum rent to him and his heirs, by the parish, upon this ground a building was erected, consisting of two dwelling-houses, at the cost of the parish. These are still kept up, and appropriated to the use and benefit of such poor as are thought fit objects of charity.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is situated within the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is small and neat. It consists of a nave and a chancel; having a small wooden tower at the west end, on which is a handsome spire. There are two bells in it (z).

The church, which is a rectory, was antiently

(y) Augtn. off. Bundle of leaves, London, N. 194.

(z) There are no marks of antiquity in this church, excepting in the circular arch over the south door, which is very antient, and probably belonged to an older building.

Among the monuments is an altar tomb, adjoining the north wall of the chancel, on which is a brass-plate for Thomas.

appurtenant to the manor, and continued so at the surrendry of the Abbey of St. Augustine, in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when it came into the hands of the Crown, and was afterwards, in the 34th year of the same reign, granted as appurtenant to the manor to Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury, and soon afterwards by him reconveyed back again to the Crown, from whence the advowson of this rectory, (for the manor continued in the Crown,) was afterwards granted to Edward, Lord Clinton and Saye, who, in the 5th of K. Edw. VI, reconveyed it back again to the Crown, in exchange for other premises (a). It appears, that in the beginning of Q. Elizabeth's reign, the advowson of this rectory was in the possession of sir Thomas Kempe, knt. owner likewise of the manor of Ripple (b); (in right of his wife Amy, daughter of sir Thomas Moyle, to whom the manor had been granted by K. Henry VIII, in his 36th year (c); but not as appurtenant to the manor, but as an advowson in gross, in which state it continued, possessed by the owners of that manor, down to Wm Crayford, of Mongebam, esq; who at his death gave both manor and advowson to his wife Ursula, (by whom he left no surviving issue,) and she having remarried Nordash Rand, esq; entitled him to the possession of them (d). He afterwards sold

On a brass-plate, fastened to another altar tomb, at the foot of the former one, a memorial for John, son of Thomas, son of John, son of William Warren, esq; sometime Chief Customer of Sandwich, &c. He died in 1612, æt. 50, and had issue, William, Thomas, John, Edward, and John who died before his father. daughters, at his death, living; Anne, Elizabeth, Alice, and Alferia dead before him, Jane, Mary, and Battell. In the east window are the arms of this family painted, among others. In the Heraldic Visitations of the co. of Kent of 1574 and 1619, are pedigrees of this family of Warren, who were settled at Dover in the latter end of K. Henry VII.'s reign, where they remained till the latter end of Q. Elizabeth's reign, when they removed to Ripple, where they remained for several generations afterwards. They bore for their arms—Azure, a cross or, between a martlet in the 1st and 4th quarter, and a chaplet in the 2d and 3d quarter, or. On a mural monument, over the above two tombs, is an inscription for Capt. Andrew Rand, son of Mr. Andrew Rand, of Deal, who married Mary, daughter of Mr. Sarles, merchant. He died in 1680, æt. 70—and for Mary their daughter, (first married to John Parker, gent. and merchant of London.) She died in 1670. In the year 1287, there was a composition entered into between the Abbat of St. Augustine and the Rector of Ripple, viz. that the Rectors of this church should take of all the lands of the fee of the chamber of the monastery, lying from the demesnes of Norborne, at Cornilo, on the west part as far as the way, which leads from Sortestrete to North-rippele on the east part, and from the land of Grenewaye and Southstrete, which are on the south part, as far as the lands of the tenants of Monyngbam and the fee of North-rippele towards the north; the whole full tythe for the partition of the third part below-mentioned. tythes fully for his said two parts, saving also always to the Rectors of the said church as before, the small tythes of all the tenants of the said fee in Ripple, excepting that of the nutriments of animals; and of the other goods of the Chamberlain, he should at no time ever claim, or exact any thing in right of tythe. Before the time of this composition, a partition or division of the tythes arising from the lands of the fee of the chamber of this monastery, used to be made in this manner, viz. that the Chamberlain should always take and have two parts, and the Rector of Ripple the third part of the tythes promiscuously (f).

In K. Edward II.'s reign, among the rest of the tythes in several different parishes belonging to the above monastery, these two parts of the tythes, within the bounds of the parish of Ripple, were allowed and confirmed to it by the Archbishop's Commissary, as they were again by Thomas Arundel, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the year 1397; and in the 8th year of K. Rich. II, the spiritualities of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, in this parish, were valued at 70s. (g)

This rectory is valued in the King's books at 5l. 19s. 4½d. and the yearly tenths at 11s. 11¼d. (b) In 1588 it was valued at 50l. communicants 42. In 1640 it was valued at 60l. the like number of communicants. It is now of the yearly certified value of 43l. 3s. 0¼d. (i) but is worth at present, in all matters clear, about 100l. per annum. There are about eight acres of glebe.

There are about 350 acres of land in this parish titheable, which was rather more than one third of the parish, (according to the above composition and confirmations.) The rest of the parish is exempt from the payment of great tythes, paying to the Rector a small composition

(f) Dec. Script. col. 1942. At the end of this composition, mention is made, that the chapel in the cemetery, called the Charners, was then built. There are now no foundations, nor any appearance of this chapel; but in the south wall of the nave of the church, near the chancel, is a small stair-case of stone, which terminates at the height of about seven or eight feet, so that a person might see through a small stone aperture, made in the wall, (though now closed up, as well as the entrance of the stair-case, (into the church-yard. Whether this had any relation to the above chapel, can only be guessed at.

CORNILIO HUNDRED.

GREAT MONGEHAM,

WRITTEN in Domesday, Mundingham, and in some antient records, both Est-Munlingham and Up-Moningham, and now Great Mongebam, which addition it has to distinguish it from the adjoining hamlet of Little Mongebam, lies the next parish north-westward from that of Ripple. The manor of Adisham, at which court a Borsholder is chosen for this parish, claims paramount over the greatest part of it, subordinate to which is with the mansion of Fogge's Court, alias Scott's Court, long since dwindled down to a mere cottage, was formerly the estate of the eminent family of Fogge, and is the only one, of the many, which they possessed in this county, that adopted their surname. Sir John Fogge, of Repton in Ashford, knt. died seised of it in 1490, anno 6 Henry VII, and by his last will devised it to his eldest son, by his second wife, (the daughter and coheir of sir Thomas Keriel, knt.) sir Thomas Fogge, knt. Sergeant-Porter of Calais, who left two daughters his coheirs; of whom, Anne married William Scot, esq; brother of sir Reinold Scot, knt. and entitled him to the possession of this manor. He died without issue, and how it passed afterwards, I have no where seen, only that at the latter end of the next reign of K. James I, this manor of Great Mongebam was by sale conveyed to Mr. Philip Pownal, of Shobbertswell (y), in whose descendants it remained, till it passed into the name of Fasbam; and Thomas Fasbam, of Deal, died seised of it in 1684, and by his will devised it to his eldest son of the same name, who deceasing three years afterwards, without issue, gave this manor, with the manor-house, barns, lands, rents, &c. lying in Great Mongebam and Sholdon, to his two bro-

(y) Philipott, p. 240. Fogge's Court, at present a mean cottage, has been long since separated from the above manor. It lately belonged to Mr. Samuel Brickenden, of Canterbury, deceased; and now to the heirs of one Adams, a poor labouring man.

(a) Philipott, p. 240, says, mentioning the above coat of arms, (though without the colours) that he does it to rectify that mistake, which through inadvertency has crept into our Heraldic Visitations of Kent, in which the paternal coat of this family is represented, as being—Upon a chevron 3 falcon's heads erased.

A Court Baron is held for this manor.

THE CRAYFORD HOUSE, alias STONEHALL, was a mansion, situated at a small distance westward of the church, the scite of which, though the house itself has been many years since pulled down, is still visible, and by the ruins yet remaining of brick and flint, appears to have been large, and though not of a modern date, yet of no very great antiquity. This mansion, for many descents, was the property and residence of the family of Crayford, whose estates in this neighbourhood were very considerable. They were written in very antient deeds, de Mongebam Magna, and in more modern ones, of Great Mongebam. In an old roll, which gives an account of those Kentish gentlemen, who were with Richard Nevill, Earl of Warwick, in the year 1460, at the battle of Northampton, fighting on behalf of the then victorious House of York, mention is made of William Crayford, esq; who was then made knight-banneret by K. Edw. IV, for his eminent services performed there, and at different times before; and bore for his arms—Or, on a chevron sable, 3 eagle's heads erased argent (a). From this sir William Crayford, knight-banneret, this seat and estate descended down to William Crayford, of Great Mongebam, esq; who died possessed of it in K. Charles II.'s reign, and seems to have been the last of this family who resided here (b).

(b) He was son of Edward, (son and heir of sir William Crayford, knt.) brother of sir William and sir Robert Crayford, knts. He married, 1st, Cordelia, daughter of sir Roger Newinson, of Eastry, knt. who died in 1673, by whom he left no surviving issue. He married, 2dly, Ursula, daughter of William Horsmonden, esq; who survived him, and afterwards remarried Nordast Rand, esq.

George Crayford, esq; the next brother of William above-mentioned, left issue several children, of whom, Edward, the eldest son, was of Canterbury, esq; where he died in 1713, having married Susan, daughter of Peter Peters, of the Blackfriars in that city, by whom he had William and several other sons and daughters; among the latter was Susan, who married James Taylor, of London, by whom she had an only daughter Susanna, married in 1746 to Richard Sandys, of Canterbury, esq.

William Crayford, the eldest son, was of Canterbury, esq; Counsellor at Law, and died in 1718, having been twice married;

GREAT MONGEHAM.

Upon his death, although some of the Crayford estate in this parish descended to his nephew Edward Crayford, of Canterbury, esq; eldest son of George his next brother, deceased; yet the mansion-house above-mentioned, known by the name of Stoneball, and the greatest part of his estates in this parish and its neighbourhood, came by his last will to Ursula, his surviving widow, who afterwards married Nordasb Rand, of Ripple, esq; and entitled him to the possession of them. He had issue by her two daughters, one of whom married Robert Chadwick, of Northfleet, esq; and the other, Judith, the only surviving one, died unmarried. At his death, the site of this mansion, which had been pulled down by him (c), with the lands above-mentioned in this parish, came again into the possession of his surviving widow Ursula, who at her decease devised them by her will to her youngest and only surviving daughter Ursula, who died unmarried, and she by her will gave them to her niece Mrs. Mary Morrice, daughter of her elder sister by Robert Chadwick, esq; above-mentioned, and wife of William Morrice, of Betsbanger, esq; since deceased, and she is at this time the possessor of this estate (d).

William Osborn, of St. Dunstan's in Canterbury, by his will, proved in 1471, ordered, that if Adam Osborn would buy the Culver-house in the Moot-place of Mungebam, he would that he married; 1st, to Jane, daughter of Thomas Rogers, of Canterbury, by whom he had William; of whom below. Susan married to Henry Wreight, of Ospringe, gent. and Elizabeth married to Budds, of Faversham. His second wife was Anne Cobbe, widow of Chalker, by whom he had Edward, married to Ansell, widow; and Anne to Peter Hayward, of Canterbury, gent. whose daughters were, Anne married to George Legrand, of Canterbury, surgeon; and Catherine to John Harvey, of Dane Court. William Crayford, the eldest son, by the first wife, was likewise a Counsellor at Law, and Recorder of the city of Canterbury, where he died in 1733, having married Susanna, daughter of the Rev. Robert Cumberland, of Canterbury, by whom he had Edward Crayford, now of Canterbury, gent. and lately an Alderman of that city, born in 1733, the only surviving heir male of this family, who has been twice married; 1st, to Bennet Toker, who died without issue; and 2dly, to Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Bannister, of Sittingborne, by whom he has no issue.

There is an estate in this parish, called Little Mouton, which was part of the ancient possessions of the Priory of Christ Church, in Canterbury, being given to it by Henry de Stonlinch, son of Elias de Broc, which lands had before belonged to Alexander de Dover, which Bertram de Criol held (f).

At the dissolution of the Priory, in the reign of K. Henry VIII, this estate was settled by that King, in his 33d year, on his new-erected Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, part of whose possessions it remains at this time (g).

PRESENT STATE OF GREAT MONGEHAM.

THE FACE of the country throughout this parish is somewhat different from that of Ripple last described, for it is more flat, even, and more inclosed with trees and hedge-rows of elm; the soil is more fertile, having less chalk and much loam, and deep earth throughout it. There are about 900 acres of land in this parish, which are worth upon an average 20s. per acre, consequently it is rich land. The village, called Mongebam-street, consists of about 30 houses, one of which is a good house, formerly both owned and inhabited by Samuel Shepherd, esq; (b) and now by Admiral Bray, whose property it is.

(d) This estate is of about the annual value of 150l. See more of the Morrices, under Betsbanger, below.

(g) This land was granted in lease by the Dean and Chapter (says Philipott, p. 240) to John Froehunt, from which name the lease was alienated to Gibs, and from thence again to Crayford. It consists of only 40 acres of land. The present lessee is Mrs. Rammell, widow of Mr. Thomas Rammell, of Deal.

(b) He inherited this house, with the lands belonging to it, consisting of 104 acres of land, the greatest part of which are in this parish, and the remainder in Ripple, in right of his wife, the only daughter and heir of John Sladden, of this parish, gent. He died in 1770, and his only son by her, John Shepherd, of Faversham, gent. in 1775 sold it to John Bray, esq; Rear-Admiral of the British Navy, the present possessor of it. Mr. Samuel Shepherd had issue by Anne Sladden, his first wife, one son John, above-mentioned, and a daughter Anne, married to Thomas Smith, of Preston, near Faversham, esq; and died in 1771, et. 42, leaving issue John and George. His second wife was Mary, daughter of Stephen Bax, of Faversham, gent. (being her third husband; her first being Mr. Hills Hobday, of Faversham, gent. by whom she had Hester, late wife of John Lade, of Boughton, esq; her second husband was Silvester Marsh, of Faversham, brewer, by whom she had an only daughter Silvester, who died unmarried,) by her he had one son Julius, now of Faversham, brewer. GREAT MONGEHAM.

In the south part of this parish is a hamlet, called Pigsole. There are no woods in it. The church is situated at the south-west end of the village.

There is a fair held here yearly on the 29th of October, (before the change of the style on St. Luke's Day, October 18,) for cattle and pedlary.

Bertram de Criol had the grant from K. Henry III, of a market here, to be held weekly, throughout the year, on a Thursday, which was allowed by the Justices Itinerant, in the 7th year of K. Edward I; and a fair yearly, for the space of three days, on the Eve, St. Luke's Day, and the day after (i).

CHARITIES.

John Sampson, of this parish, gent. by his will, proved in 1681, gave to the churchwardens and overseers of it, the yearly sum of 20s. to be paid out of his messuage and its appurtenances in Walmer, and his two parcels of land, containing 10 acres in Great Mongeham; the said money to be employed yearly in buying coals in summer, to be delivered out to the

At one angle of the tower is a small round one, in which is a newel staircase; it is built very strong and large, and is embattled at the top. There are five small bells in it. There is a large and handsome window over the west door of the tower, formerly much ornamented, though at present the stone-work is much decayed. In the spandrill of the arch over this door, on the dexter side, is a shield, on which is deeply cut these arms, viz. On a fess, a mullet pierced between 3 lions passant; the correspondent shield, on the sinister side is a blank. The church is not ceiled; the chancel is handsomely boarded at the top. There is no great shew of antiquity in any part of it. In the high chancel, within the altar rails, is a memorial for Lydia, daughter of Richard and Mary Stone, obiit 1787, an infant. One for Timothy Wilson, Rector of this parish and Kingsnoth, and one of the Clerks of Christ Church in Canterbury; who left two daughters surviving, Damaris and Elizabeth; obiit June 4, 1705, æt. 63; also Mary his wife, obiit 1703, æt. 53; and several of their children. Another grave-stone near it; the arms and inscription illegible. Without the altar rails, is a memorial for Anne, wife of the Rev. John Herring, obiit 1768, æt. 43; also for John Herring, infant, obiit 1760. In the north chancel, is a marble monument against the north wall, having the figures of a man in armour, and his wife kneeling at an altar in a praying posture, and underneath five sons and one daughter, all kneeling likewise, and an inscription for Edward Crayford, esq.; eldest son of sr William Crayford, knt. obiit 1615, æt. 39. By Anne his wife, daughter of sr Rowland Hayward, knt. thrice Lord Mayor of London, he had issue William, George, Richard, John, John, and Anne. LITTLE MONGEHAM,

OR Parva Mongeham, as it is sometimes written; in Domesday, Mundingeham, has the above addition, to distinguish it from the adjoining parish of Great Mongeham, last described.

A Borsholder is chosen at the court of Norborne Manor alternately every year, for the borough of Little Mongeham, including East Studdel, and for the borough of Ashley, in the parish of Norborne.

THE MANOR OF LITTLE MONGEHAM was given by Aldric, son of Widred, K. of Kent, with the consent of Bregwyn, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the 1st year of his reign, anno 760, by the description of six plow lands in the southern part of the antient ville of Mundingham, which land was called Parva Mungebam, to Lambert, or Jambert as he is called by some, then Abbat of St. Augustine's Monastery, near Canterbury, for the use of his Covent (e).

In the survey of Domesday, taken in the 15th

(y) He was likewise Rector of Kingsnoth, and one of the Clerks of Christ Church in Canterbury. He lies buried in this chancel.

(z) He vacated this rectory on being made Bishop of Oxford, and was afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury.

(a) He was Prebendary of Canterbury, and held this rectory with that of Iwechurch by dispensation; afterwards he was Dean of Canterbury, and vacated these preferments on being made Bishop of St. David's. and afterwards Bishop of Gloucester.

(b) Prebendary of Canterbury, and Rector of Dimchurch.

(c) And Minister of St. Mary's, in Dover.

(d) He was Prebendary of Canterbury, and resigned this rectory on being collated to that of Adisham. See vol. iii. of this history, p. 672.

(e) This gift is said, by Thorn, in his Chronicle, Decim Script. col. 1775, to have been made by Eadbert, K. of Kent, son of K. Widred, in 761, to Janbert, Abbat of St. Augustine's, the year before Archbishop Bregwin died; and in the Register-book of that monastery, cart. 357, it is likewise said to have been made by K. Eadbert, in the first year of his reign, with the consent of the above Archbishop. But K. Eadbert, son of Widred, died in 748, and Archbp Bregwin died in 762; and Lambert, or Jambert, Abbat of St. Augustine's, succeeded him immediately as Archbishop. K. Eadbert, therefore, could not make this donation, which year of the Conqueror's reign, anno 1080, the Abbat's possessions here are thus entered, under the general title of the land of the Church of St. Augustine.

Which is: The Abbat himself holds Mundingeham. It was taxed at two sulings and an half. The arable land is 5 carucates. In this manor, the land which the Monks hold, was never taxed. And Wadard held there land, which in the time of K. Edward the Confessor was always taxed, and at that time it was a manor jointly together. Now the Monks have in demesne 4 carucates and 20 borderers, with one carucate, and one mill of 16 shillings, and wood for the pannage of 4 bogs. There is a church. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 22 pounds, and afterwards 10 pounds. The part of the Abbat 26 pounds.

Wadard has in demesne there 1 carucate and 8 villeins, having 4 carucates. It is and was worth 10 pounds.

It pays no service from thence, except 30 shillings per annum to the Abbat.

It appears by Thorn's Chronicle, that Scotland, Abbat of St. Augustine's Abbey, had a little before this, given to Wadard above-mentioned, who was a knight, this land, consisting of five sulings, just by the parish of Norborne, for the time of his life, on condition of the payment of 30s. yearly, and the tythes of every sort which might arise from the same, and that after his death it should return to the demesne of St. Augustine for ever (f), which it appears to have done, from what follows: and in the year 974, the possessions of the Abbat and Convent were increased by a pious matron, named Wynsled, who gave to it 100 acres of arable, meadow, and pasture. This land did not lie at Parva Monyngbam, says the Chronicle, but northward from the court of Northborne, and extended eastward towards Great Monyngbam (g).

In the year 1313, being the 7th year of K. Edward II, in the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerants, the Abbat was summoned by quo warranto, to shew why he claimed sundry liberties therein mentioned in this manor, among others, particularly the chattels of those condemned and fugitive, and weif, year, and waste. And the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant in this county; and he pleaded, that K. Edw. II, by his charter, in his 6th year, had fully confirmed all of them to the Abbat and his successors (b). After which, the last-mentioned rolls being inspected, it was found that all the liberties then claimed in the said Iter had been allowed in it; and the whole of the same was accordingly allowed by the said Henry de Stanton and his sociates, as above-mentioned (i). After which, K. Edw. III, by his charter of inspeximus, confirmed to the Abbat and Convent all their manors and possessions given by former Kings, and by another the several grants of liberties and confirmations made by his predecessors, which were those above-mentioned (k), and K. Henry VI. confirmed them likewise (l).

Salamon de Ripple, a monk of this monastery, being about the 10th year of K. Edw. III, anno 1335, appointed by the Abbat Keeper of the manors of Nordborne, Littleborne, Stodmersch, and Chislet, made many improvements in each of them, particularly at Lityl Mungam, where he built much (m).

There is no mention made of the possessions of the above abbey in this parish, or of the manor of it, in the valuation of the several manors and lands of it, taken in the 8th year of K. Rich. II, or in the measurement of them, made about the same time; so that it is very probable they were accounted for among those belonging to it within the manor of Northborne, and its appurtenances adjoining to it.

After this, the manor of Little Mongeham continued part of the possessions of this monastery till the final dissolution of it, in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when it was, with all its revenues, surrendered into the King's hands, to the use of him and his heirs for ever, whence it was afterwards, with the advowson of the church, granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors, part of whose possessions it continues at this time.

The lease of this estate, the advowson being reserved to the Archbishop and his successors, was demised in Q. Elizabeth's reign to sir John Baker, of Sissinghurst, knt. from which name it passed into that of Peyton, of Knolton, in which state it continued, till sir Thomas Peyton, of Knolton, bart. passed his interest in it away to sir John Narborough, Admiral of the British Navy, whose sons, sir John Narborough, bart. and his brother James, being both lost at sea, with their father-in-law sir Cloudesley Shovel, knt. in 1707, Elizabeth, their sister, married to sir Thomas D'Aeth, bart. succeeded to it, among the rest of their inheritance, and his grandson, sir Narborough D'Aeth, now of Knolton, bart. is the present lessee of it.

PRESENT STATE OF LITTLE MONGEHAM.

THIS parish contains about 16 houses within it, and about 1000 acres of land. It reaches a long way southward till it joins Waldershare parish, comprehending all East Studdal (n), as far as the road leading from Betsbanger to Maidensle, which is likewise in this parish, being a farm lately purchased of Mr. Chandler, surgeon, of Canterbury, by Mr. Thomas Garfide, of Deal, the present owner of it (o).

It is rather more hilly, and the soil more inclined to chalk, than Great Mongeham, last described, and the fields are more open and unclosed. There is no fair; nor any parochial charities belonging to it.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

LITTLE MONGEHAM is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury, and deanry of Sandwich (p). The church has been ruined for many years (q). It is a rectory, which has ever been appurtenant to the manor, and as such belonged to the Abbat and Convent

(n) There are two farms at East Studdal; one of 200 acres, belonging to Mr. Barret, of Lee. The other of about 130 acres, belonging to Mr. Michael Russell, of Dover.

(o) It contains about 50 acres of land.

(p) In the institution made by the abbat of St. Augustine, in 1295, of the several new deanries, and apportioning the several churches of his monastery to each of them, this church of Little Mongeham was included in the new deanry of Sturry. This institution caused great contentions between the succeeding Archbishops and Abbats, which ended in the abolition of them. See Dec. Script. Thorn, col. 1976, 1983, and vol. ii. of this hist. p. 454.

(q) The foundations of this church are remaining in a little pasture-close, near the farm-house of Little Mongeham manor.

of St. Augustine, after the dissolution of which, the manor, with the advowson appurtenant, was granted to sir John Baker, knt. who reconveyed the advowson itself back again to the Crown, whence it was granted, among other premises, by K. Edward VI, in his 1st year, to Thomas Cranmer, Archbp of Canterbury (r), since which it has continued parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, his Grace the Archbishop being the present patron of it.

The rectory is valued in the King's books at 5l. 15s. (s) In 1640, it was valued at 50l. It is now a discharged living, and is of the clear yearly value of 90l. (t) out of which, however, the incumbent pays five guineas yearly to the Curate of Sutton, for officiating in that church, for the inhabitants of this parish.

The parsonage, or Grange of Asheley, in the parish of Norborne, has 12 acres of glebe belonging to it in this parish, and it receives the great tythes of Maidensle farm, and of about 200 acres more within the bounds of this parish.

Forty acres of land belonging to the almonry, or parsonage of Norborne, belonging to the Archbishop, sir Narborough D'Aeth, bart. lessee, lies in this parish, and claimed an exemption of tythes, but on a suit lately instituted between W. Lite, Vicar of Little Mongeham, versus D'Aeth, the Vicar recovered his right to the tythe of this land, which has been paid ever since.

NORTHBORNE,

USUALLY called Norborne, as it is written in the survey of Domesday, lies the next parish westward from Little Mongebam, being so called from the north borne, or stream, which runs from hence into the river at Sandwich.

THE MANOR OF NORTHBORNE

was given in the year 618, by Eadbald, K. of Kent, by the description of a certain part of his kingdom, containing 30 plow lands, called Northborne, to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, near the city of Canterbury, in which monastery his father lay, and where he ordered himself to be buried; and he gave this land, with all belonging to it, in pastures, marshes, meadows, woods, and boundaries on the sea-shore, as free and quiet as his father or he ever possessed it; to which gift were witnesses, Laurence, Archbp of Canterbury, his Queen Emma, his sons Egfrid and Ercumbert, with the two Bishops, Mellitus, of London, and Justus, of Rochester, and many Earls and great men, who were consenting, and subscribers to it (d). And in this state it continued at the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, in which it is entered under the general title of the land of the Church of St. Augustine, as follows:

Which is: In the Latb of Estrea. In Corneleſt Hundred.

The Abbat himself holds Norborne. It was taxed at 30 sulings. The arable land is 54 carucates. In demefne there are 3, and 79 villeins, with 42 borderers, having 37 carucates. There are 40 acres of meadow, and wood for the pannage of 10 hogs.

In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 4 times 20 pounds; when he received it, 20 pounds; now 76 pounds.

Of the lands of the villeins of this manor, Oidelard holds 1 suling, and there he has 2 carucates, with 11 borderers. It is worth 4 pounds. Of the same land of the villeins, Gislebert holds 2 sulings, all but half a yoke, and there he has 1 carucate, and 4 villeins, with 1 carucate. It is worth 6 pounds.

Wadard holds of this manor 3 sulings, all but 60 acres of the land of the villeins, and there he has 1 carucate, and 8 villeins, with 1 carucate and 2 servants. It is worth 9 pounds; but he pays no service to the Abbat, except 30 shillings, which he pays in the year (e).

Odelin holds of the same land of the villeins 1 suling, and there he has 1 carucate, with 3 borderers. It is worth 3 pounds.

Marcherius holds of the same land of the villeins what is worth 8 shillings.

Oshern the son of Letard holds half a suling, and 11 acres of meadow, of the land of the villeins, which is worth 25 shillings. He pays to the Abbat 15 shillings.

Rannulf de Colubers holds one yoke worth 50 pence.

Rannulf de Ualbadon holds one yoke, and pays from thence 50 pence.

The above-mentioned Oidelard holds also of this manor one suling, and it is called Bevesfel, and there he has 2 carucates, with 10 borderers. It is worth 6 pounds.

CORNILO HUNDRED.

In the year 1273, Nicholas de Spina being elected Abbat, there was a general aid paid to him next year, for his palsry, by the several manors belonging to this monastery, in which this of Norborne paid him the sum of 28l. 8s. 3d. (f) and in 1288, anno 17 Edward I, the Abbat had the King's licence to purchase additional lands in this and the neighbouring parishes (g).

In the next reign of K. Edward II, the 7th of it, anno 1313, the Abbat was summoned by quo warranto, in the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, to shew cause why he claimed fundry liberties therein mentioned in this manor, among others, and the chattels of felons and men fugitive, and of their tenants, with year and waste in all their manors whatsoever, and the view of frank pledge, and all belonging to it in this manor, and the liberty of weif, and likewise wrec of the sea. And the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant in this county; and he further pleaded, that K. Edward II, by his charter, in his 6th year, had fully confirmed all of them to the Abbat and his successors (b). After which, the rolls of the last Iter of J. de Berewick as aforesaid being inspected, it was found that all the liberties then claimed in the said Iter had been allowed in it; upon which every part of the same was allowed by the said H. de Stanton and his sociates, as above-mentioned (i). And the liberty of the view of frank pledge was in particular further confirmed by that King, in his 10th year (k).

K. Edward III, in his 5th year, anno 1330, exempted the men and tenants of this manor from their attendance at the turne of the Sheriff, before made by the Borsbolder, with four men of each borough within it; and directed his writ to Roger de Reynham, then Sheriff, commanding that in future they should be allowed to perform the same with one man only (l). After which, in his 36th year, he confirmed, by his charter of inspeximus, to the Abbat and Convent, all their manors and possessions given by former Kings, and by another the grants of liberties and confirmations made by his predecessors, among which were those mentioned above (m); and K. Hen. VI. likewise confirmed the same (n).

NORTHBORNE.

In the 8th year of K. Richard II, among the temporalities of this abbey, the manor of Nordborne, with its appurtenances, was valued at 92l. 11s. 2d. (o) and the measurement of their lands at Nordburne, with 208 acres of wood, was 2179 acres and an half and one rood (p).

Salomon de Ripple, a monk of this monastery, being, about the 10th year of K. Edw. III, anno 1335, appointed by the Abbat keeper of this manor, among others, made great improvements in many of them, and in particular he new built the barns here, and a very fair chapel, from the foundations (q). But afterwards, in the year 1371, their great storehouses here, full of corn, were, by the negligence of a workman, entirely burned down; the damage of which was estimated at 1000l. (r)

After which, I find nothing further in particular relating to this manor, which continued part of the possessions of the monastery, till its final dissolution, in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII, when it was, with all its revenues, surrendered into the King's hands, to the use of him and his heirs for ever, with whom this manor continued but a small time; for the King, in his 31st year, granted the manor of Norborne, with the parsonage or rectory of Norborne, and their appurtenances, to Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury, in exchange for other premises (s); and it remained parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, till Archbishop Parker, in the 3d year of Q. Elizabeth, reconveyed it to the Crown, in exchange for other premises. After which, the manor itself, with its courts, franchises, liberties, rights, and appurtenances, continued in the Crown, till K. Charles I, by letters patent, in the 5th year of his reign, granted it in fee to William White, William Stephenson, and John Perkins, to hold at the yearly rent of 75l. 6s. 7½d. and one half farthing, as of his manor of East Greenwich, by fealty only, in free and common soccage, and not in capite or by knights service (t); and they that same year, by their indenture inrolled, &c. sold it to Stephen Alcocke, of London, gent. who, by indenture, dated April 30, next year, passed it away by sale, with certain exceptions therein-mentioned (u), to Edward Boys, of Betsbanger, gent. to hold of the King in like manner, as above-mentioned, paying yearly a rent of 72l. 11s. 2½d. half farthing, which with the rent of the premises excepted, made up the full sum first above reserved to the Crown (v). His descendant, Edward Grotius Boys, dying without issue in 1706, gave it by will to his kinsman, Thomas Brett, of Spring Grove, L. L. D. and he, in 1713, alienated it to Salmon Morrice, afterwards an Admiral of the British Navy, and of Betsbanger, esq; whose grandson, William Morrice, esq; died possessed of it in 1787, unmarried; upon which it came to his only brother, James Morrice, Cl. who is the present owner of this manor (w).

(v) After which, Edward Boys, gent. by indenture, Sept. 30, 1630, conveyed to Percival Brett, 15 acres of land at Fingleham, in the manor of Norborne, with a reserve of 15s. as a quitrent yearly out of them, towards making up the said yearly reserved rent to the Crown.

The fee-farm rent of 72l. 11s. 2½d. above-mentioned (x), was granted away by the Crown some time past, and came into the hands of the present Earl of Ilchester, who in 1788 sold it to the Rev. Mr. Morrice, the present owner of this manor; so there is now no fee-farm rent paid for it.

A Court Leet and Court Baron is yearly held for it (y).

The present manor-house is a small cottage in Norborne-street, built upon the waste for that purpose.

NORTHBORNE COURT, usually called Norborne Abbey, from its having belonged to the Abbey of St. Augustine, was the antient court lodge of the manor, before they were separated by different grants from the Crown, after the suppression of the monastery. This court lodge, with the demesne lands of the manor, remained but a very short time in the hands of the Crown, after the reconveyance

(x) Besides this rent, there is a fee-farm, paid by James Denne, of 11. 8s. 8½d. for part of this manor; and another by Edward Troward, of 11. 7s. 8½d. for another part of this manor.

(y) Two Constables, one for the Upper Half Hundred, and the other for the Lower Half-Hundred of Corniloe, are chosen at the Court Leet of this manor.

In a register and rental of St. Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury, taken about the 16th year of K. Richard II, it is entered, that the manor of Nordbourne has a free court, and has in demesne Littlemongham, the wood of Hedelinghe betesbanger, with other antient demesnes, and there hold of the same the following hamlets: Napelberst, East Stodwolde, West Stodwolde, Eastsole, Effele, part of West Langedon, Merton, East Sutton, West Sutton, Greneweys, Littlemongham, Lyden, Soldone, Ho, Nordbroke, Tikenberst, Betsbanger, and a certain mill at Kerfonore in Beausborough Hhd.

of it by the Archbishop, in the 3d year of Q. Elizabeth, as has been mentioned above; for it was almost immediately afterwards granted by the Queen, for life, to Edward Sanders, gent. her foster brother (z); on whose death, about the middle of that reign, the possession of it reverted to the Crown (a), where it remained, till K. James I, soon after his accession, granted it in fee to sir Edwin Sandys, knt. on whom he conferred the honour of knighthood, and had given this estate, for his firm attachment to him at that time. He rebuilt this mansion, and kept his shrievalty for the county at it, in the 14th year of K. James I, and dying in the year 1629, was buried in the vault which he had made in this church for himself and his posterity, and in which most of his direct descendants were afterwards deposited (b).

Sir Edwin Sandys, though he had four wives, left male issue only by his last wife. From Edwyn, their second son, descended the Sandys's, of Norborne Court; and from Richard, the third son, those of Canterbury, still remaining there.

On sir Edwin Sandys's death, in 1629, his eldest son, Henry Sandys, esq; succeeded to this

He afterwards resided at Northborne Court, having married Anne, daughter and coheir of Francis, son of Milo, Pendrath of Norborne, by Elizabeth, one of the heirs of Thomas Lewin, and nurse to Q. Elizabeth, which Edward Sanders was brother of Bartholomew Sanders, of Minster in Thanet, who married Mary, daughter of Henry Oxenden, of Wingbam, esq; whose father Amias Sanders, was of Chilton in Ash, where his ancestors had resided for some generations; but were originally descended from Minster, in Thanet. Edward Sanders had issue two sons; Francis, of Monckton, who, by Frances, daughter of sr Adam Spracklyn, knt. had issue Frances, born in 1712, and Edward, and three daughters; Elizabeth married first, to Richard Mougham, of Weddington, in Ash, gent. and secondly, to Thomas Halkes; Jane married to Edward Boys, of Goodneston; and Anne to Christopher Tilghman, of Sellinge. They bore for their arms—Or, on a chevron gules, 3 mullets argent, between 3 elephant's heads erased, of the 2d. There is a pedigree of them in the Heraldic Visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619.

(a) It appears, that in the 40th year of Q. Elizabeth, anno 1596, sir Roger Manwood, Chief Baron, was possessed of part of the demesne lands of this manor, which lands, Thomas Parker, of Norborne, then held by lease of him.—See Will of Parker, proved in Prerog. office, Canterbury, that year.

(b) Sir Edwin Sandys was second son of Edwin Sandys, Archbishop of York, by Cecily, his second wife, daughter of Thomas Wilsford, of Cranbrook, esq; obiit 1610. The Archbishop's eldest son was Samuel, who was of the co. of Worcester, knt. from whom descended the Lords Sandys, now of Ombersley in that county. His younger sons were, Miles Sandys, of the co. of Worcester, and George, the noted traveller. Sir Edwin above-mentioned, the second son, of Norborne, had four wives; first, Margaret, daughter of John Eveleigh, of the co. of Devon, by whom he had Elizabeth, married to sir Thomas Wilsford, of Ilden, knt. secondly, Anne, daughter of Thomas Southcote; thirdly, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Newinson, of Eestry, gent. by

He married Mary, daughter of sir Henry Heyman, of Selling, bart. and was killed by his fowling-piece in passing a hedge in 1663. He left issue, Richard and Benedictus, who were twins. Benedictus died in 1700, without issue. Sir Richard, the eldest, was created a baronet on Dec. 15, 1684, obiit 1726; having been married, first, to Mary, the daughter and coheir of Dame Priscilla Rolle, of Devonshire, in 1698, who died in 1709; and 2dly, to Susanna-Catherine, daughter of whom he left surviving. By his first wife he left issue only four daughters and his coheirs, viz. Priscilla, the eldest, married to Henry Sandys, esq; (grandson of Henry Sandys, of Downe, esq; the son of Colonel Richard Sandys, the younger brother of Colonel Edwin Sandys, the great grand-father of Priscilla, above-mentioned.) Mary, the second daughter and coheir, married William Roberts, of Harbledowne, whom he had Anne, married to Thomas Engebam, of Goodneston; and fourthly, Catherine, daughter of sir Richard Bulkeley, of Anglesey, knt. afterwards Lord Bulkeley, by whom he had seven sons and five daughters. Of the former, Henry, born in 1606, married Margaret, daughter of sir William Hammond, of St. Albans, knt. and died without issue. Edwyn, the second son, was a noted rebel Colonel, under Oliver Cromwell, well known for his depredations and insolent cruelties to the loyalists, who received a mortal wound at the battle of Worcester, in 1642, after which, retiring to Norborne, he died, and was buried there; having married Catherine, daughter of Richard Champneys, of Bexley, esq; by whom he had sir Richard Sandys, knt. as above-mentioned, two other sons, Edwin and Henry, and two daughters, Catherine and married to Roue, of Shakelwell, Middlesex. Richard, the third son, was a Colonel likewise in the Army, who married Hester, daughter of Edwin Aucher, of Wilsborough, gent. by whom he had several children; the eldest of whom was, Henry Sandys, of Downe, esq; who, by Catherine, daughter of sir William St. Quintin, knt. (widow of sir John Kaye, bart.) had Jordan Sandys, of Downe, Captain of a man of war, whose son, Henry Sandys, esq; married in 1719, at Cudham, Priscilla, eldest of the three daughters and coheirs of sir Richard Sandys, of Norborne, bart. as will be mentioned below, by whom he inherited part of the Norborne estate, and was father of Richard Sandys, of Canterbury, esq. The fourth son of sir Edwin Sandys, was Robert, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Jones, Lord Ranelagh, whose descendants settled in Ireland. William was the fifth. Thomas was knighted; and Francis was the seventh son. Of the daughters, Catherine married to Robert Scrimshaw, of the co. of Stafford; Mary to Richard Spencer, of Orpington; Frances; Elizabeth to Francis Langston, Sergeant-at-Arms, of the co. of Worcester; and Penelope to Nicholas Leckmere, of Hanley, Baron of the Exchequer. esq; Elizabeth, the third daughter, died unmarried soon after her father's death; and Anne, the fourth and youngest daughter, married in 1731, Charles Pyott, of Canterbury, esq; and they respectively, in right of their wives, became possessed of this, among the rest of his estates, in undivided shares, by the entail made in fir Richard Sandys's will.

Henry Sandys left issue, by his wife Priscilla, Richard his eldest son, and Henry, who died unmarried. Richard was of Canterbury, esq; and succeeded to a third part of this estate; of which he died possessed in 1763, leaving by Susan, daughter of James Taylor (e), whom he married in 1746, seven sons and one daughter, Susan, married to Henry Godfrey Faussett, esq; of Heppington, who died in 1789, leaving three sons and five daughters.

Of the sons, Richard, the eldest, was of Canterbury, esq; and afterwards entered into holy orders. He died in 1782, having been twice married; first, in 1770, to Catharina, daughter of William Hougham, of Barton Court, near Canterbury, esq; by whom he had one son, Richard-Edwin, born in 1772, and a daughter Catharina; secondly, in 1781, he married Lady Frances-Alicia (f), sister of Charles, Earl of Tankerville, and widow of Richard Aflong, esq; by whom he had one daughter, Alicia-Arabella.

Henry Sandys was the second son. William, the third son, died in 1773. Edwin-Humphry, the fourth son, is now of Canterbury, gent. and has been twice married; 1st, to Sarah, youngest daughter of the late fir William Fagg, of Mytote in this county, bart. who died without issue; and 2dly, to the only daughter, and at length sole heir of Edward Lord Chick, of Westham in the co. of Essex, esq; by whom he has issue several children. Charles Sandys, esq; the fifth son, is a Captain in the Royal Navy. Herbert, the sixth son, was an Officer in the Army, and died unmarried in 1773; and James, the seventh son, died in August 1795, in the West Indies, a Captain in the 41st regiment of foot.

These sons, together with their sister Susan, shared their father's third part of this estate.

He died unmarried in 1746, and by his will devised it to his half-sister Mary, wife of Thomas Fisher, esq; the daughter of his father by his first wife, daughter of Solomon Hougham, esq. She died in 1774, without issue by her second husband, Mr. Fisher; but by her first husband, Edward Wollet, she had an only daughter Mary, who became entitled to her third part of this estate, which she carried in marriage to fir Robert Mead Wilmot, of Chaddeſden in the co. of Derby, bart. on whose death it vested in his widow, and eldest son fir Robert Wilmot, bart. (ff).

The remaining third part of this estate, which was carried in marriage by Anne, the youngest daughter of fir Richard Sandys, to Charles Pyott, esq; of Canterbury, continued in his possession till his death, in 1789 (g), when it came to their only daughter and heir Anne, the wife of Robert Thomas Pyott, late of Hull in the co. of York, but now of Canterbury, esq.

In 1795, all the parties interested in this estate joined in conveying their respective shares to the several purchasers undermentioned, viz. to James Tillard, of Street-End Place, near Canterbury, esq; Northborne Court lodge, farm, and lands—to Robert-Thomas Pyott, esq; Stonebeap-farm—to William Wylorn, the scite of the late mansion-house, gardens, and Long-Dane-farm—to Mr. John Parker, Cold-Harbour-farm—and to several other persons, the remaining small detached parts of this estate. The whole purchase-monies amounting nearly to 30,000l. (b)

The mansion of Norborne Court, the residence of the Sandys's, appears to have been a large and stately building. It was pulled down in 1750, and the materials sold; and the walls are all that now remain of it, forming a very considerable ruin. Near the house was a handsome chapel, formerly used by the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, when they visited this mansion, and afterwards by the Sandys family. It is at this time nearly entire, excepting the roof, which has been long since taken off (i).

LITTLE BETSHANGER

is an estate in the western part of this parish, which was antiently accounted a manor, and had ried in St. Martin's church, in Canterbury. The Pyotts bear for their arms—Azure, on a fess or, a lion passant sable, in chief 3 bezants.

(b) The whole estate contained near 1100 acres, all tythe-free, except about 40 acres.

(i) This chapel is mentioned in the endowment of the vicarage of Norborne, dated anno 1278, and probably was the same building; the ruins of which remain at present. It is situated adjoining to the ruins of the house, on the south side.

once owners of the same name; one of whom, Ralph de Betsbanger, was possessed of it in K. Edward II.'s reign, whose descendant, Thomas de Betsbanger, in the 20th year of the next reign of K. Edward III, paid aid for it as half a knight's fee, which Ralph de Betsbanger before held in this parish and Betsbanger of the Abbat of St. Augustine. Soon after which, Roger de Cliderow appears, says Philipott, to have been proprietor of it, by the seals of old evidences, which commenced from that reign, the shield on which is, upon a chevron, between three eagles, five annulets. Notwithstanding which, it appears by the grave-stone over his successor, Richard Clitberow, esq; in Asb church, that the arms of these Clitberows were, Three cups covered, within a bordure ingrailed or; at least that he bore different arms from those of his predecessor. Richard Clitberow kept his shrievalty for this county, at his seat at Goldstanton in Asb, in the 4th and part of the 5th years of K. Henry IV.'s reign (k), and in the 7th year of it was constituted Admiral of the seas from the Tbames mouth westward (l). His descendant Roger Clitberow died without male issue, leaving three daughters his coheirs; of whom, Joane, the second, married John Stoughton, of Dartford, second son of sir John Stoughton, knt. Lord Mayor of London (m). After which, this estate was alienated from this family to Gibbs, from which name it passed again into that of Omer (n); in which it staid, till Laurence Omer, of Asb, gent. leaving an only daughter and heir Jane, she carried it in marriage to Thomas Stoughton, of Asb, afterwards of St. Martin's, Canterbury, gent. son of Edward Stoughton, of Asb, the grandson of John Stoughton, of Dartford, the former possessor of this estate (o). He died in 1591, leaving three daughters his coheirs; of whom, Fœd.* vol. ix, p. 117. He was again Sheriff in the 6th year of K. Henry V. He was Knight of the Shire in the 8th and 9th years of K. Henry IV. William Clitberow, another of this family, served in Parliament for Romney several times in K. Henry V.'s reign, and for Hythe in the 26th year of K. Henry VI.'s reign; and another Richard Clitberow, for Romney, in K. Henry V.'s reign, and several times in the reign of K. Henry VI.

In those times the office of Admiral was divided, sometimes into three, but most commonly into two divisions; one beginning at the Tbames mouth, was Admiral of the northern seas; the second was Admiral from the Tbames mouth westward; and the third had the command of the Irish seas.—But at the above time, K. Henry IV, in his 8th year, reduced it under one person, and granted it with more ample privileges and authority to his brother, John Beaufort, Earl of Somerset.

James, alienated it to sir Henry Lodelow, knt. and he again, in the next year of K. After which, by a decree of the Court of Chancery, and agreement between the sisters, a writ of partition was executed, anno 9 George II, by which this estate was wholly allotted, among others, to Anne, the eldest sister, wife of John, Viscount St. John (q), which partition was confirmed by an act of Parliament passed next year (r).

Their son, Frederick, Viscount St. John, succeeded to this estate on his father's death, and on the decease of his uncle, Henry, Viscount Bolingbroke, in 1751, to that title likewise, and dying in 1787, his eldest son, George, Viscount Bolingbroke, became possessed of this estate (s), which he sold in 1791, to Mr. John Clark, miller, the present owner of it (t).

TITHERY.

THE tythes of this estate of Little Betsbanger, as well great as small, belonged, with those of Finglisham in this parish, to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, and were assigned in the year 1128 to the cloathing of the monks there; and after the dissolution of the monastery were granted together to the Archbishop of Canterbury, part of whose revenues they remain at this time (u).

Mr. Boteler, of Eastry, found near Little Betsbanger, the plant astragalus glyeyphyllos, wild liquorice, or liquorice vetch, which is very scarce, and has never been observed by him any where else.

THE MANOR OF TICKENHURST,

now called Tickness; in Domesday, Ticheteste, and in other ancient records, Tygenburst, is situated in the borough and hamlet of its own name. It lies most part of it in this parish, but at some distance westward from the rest of it, the parishes of Eastry, Ham, and Betsbanger intervening, and partly in that of Knolton. In the time of the Conqueror, Odo, the great Bishop of Baieux and Earl of Kent, the King's half-brother, was owner of it, and in the 9th year of that reign, anno 1074, gave certain tythes, which his homagers possessed in Tyginherst, to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine. Six years after which, at the taking of the survey of Domesday, this manor was thus entered in it, under the general title of the lands of the Bishop of Baieux.

After which, this manor came into the possession of a family, which took their surname from it, some of whom were witnesses to deeds of a very antient date (v); but they became extinct before the reign of K. Henry VI, and it was afterwards the property of the Stoddards, ancestors of those of this name, of Mottingham, near Eltham in this county, in which this manor remained for some generations, till about the latter end of Q. Elizabeth's reign, it was alienated to Peyton, of Knolton (w), who continued in the possession of it, till sir Thomas Peyton, of Knolton, bart. leaving only daughters and coheirs, they and their trustees passed it away to sir John Narborough, Admiral of the British Navy, whose two sons, sir John Narborough, bart. and his brother James, being both lost at sea with their father-in-law, sir Cloudefley Shovel, knt, in 1707, Elizabeth, their sister, married to sir Thomas D'Aeth, bart. succeeded to this manor among the rest of their inheritance, and died seised of it in 1744 (x); and his grandson, sir Narborough D'Aeth, now of Knolton, bart. is the present owner of it.

In the year 1074, Odo, Bishop of Baieux and Earl of Kent, gave to St. Augustine's Monastery, in Canterbury, those tythes which his tenants had; i. e. Adelold the Chamberlain, in the vills of Knolton, Tickenburst, and Ringelton, and the tythes of all the lands of Turstan, and the tythes likewise of Bedleshangre, and the tythes of Osbern Paisforer, in the small ville of Bocland, and all these he gave with the King's consent, who by his charter confirmed the same. But the tythes of Knolton and Ringelton, William de Albiney, in process of time, being lord of the fee of those lands, took away from the monastery, through his power; and the tythe of Boclonde, Roger de Malmains took away from it (y).

Within this borough and hamlet of Tickenburst are two farms, called Great and Little Tickenburst, both which pay tythes to the almonry or parsonage of Northborne, formerly belonging to St. Augustine's Monastery.

PRESENT STATE OF NORTHBORNE.

THIS parish is very long and narrow, extends only a mile and an half from east to west, and full five miles from north to south, till it joins Waldersbare and Whitfield. The part of this parish containing the borough, hamlet, and manor of Tickenhurst, is separated from the rest of it by the parishes of Eastry, Ham, and Betsbanger, intervening; and there is a small part of the parish of Goodneston within this of Norborne, and entirely surrounded by it. The soil of this parish being so very extensive, must necessarily vary very much. It is, however, much inclined to chalk, and is throughout it very hilly, though much of it is very light earth, yet there is a great deal of rich fertile land in the lower part of it northward. There is much uninclosed land and open downs interspersed throughout it. The street of Norborne, having the church and vicarage house within it, and containing 26 houses, is situated at the north-east extremity of the parish. Near it is Northborne Court, the almonry or parsonage, and a house and estate, called the Vine farm, which belonged to the Rev. Edward Beckingham Benson, Rector of Upper Deal, lately deceased (z).

Besides this, there are several other streets, hamlets, and eminent farms, within the bounds of this parish. At the north-west extremity of it is West-street, containing five houses, in which is an estate, called

WEST-STREET, alias PARKGATE.

Roger Litchfield, in his will, anno 1513, mentions his farm of West-street. This, with another farm called Parkgate, (the buildings of which are now pulled down,) stood in Ham parish; the whole of both which, considered as one farm, lets at 140*l.* per annum, and contains 230 acres of land in Norborne, Betsbanger, Ham, and Skoldon.

Sir Cloudestey Shovel, knt. was in later times possessed of this estate, and after his unfortunate decease, his two daughters and coheirs. On the division of their estate, Anne the youngest daughter, entituled her husband John Blackwood to the possession of it. He died in 1777, and was succeeded in it by his two sons and coheirs in gavelkind, Shovel Blackwood, esq; and Colonel John Blackwood, of Chebhunt in the co. of Hertford, who made a division of their inheritance; in which partition this estate of West-street, alias Parkgate, was, among others, allotted to the latter, who next year procured an act of Parliament for the sale of it, being a settled estate, by the description of West-street, alias Parkgate-farm, in Northborne, Betsbanger, Ham, and Skoldon, containing 254 acres of land, meadow, arable, and marsh land, part inclosed and part common. After his decease this estate came to his widow, who sold it in 1790 to Mr. William Nethersole, the present owner of it.

Dr. Ralph Blomer*, Prebendary of Canterbury. He died at Sienna, in Italy, and was buried at Leghorn, leaving issue by his second wife

About half a mile south-eastward from West-street, is containing 30 houses. It is written in the survey of Domesday, Flenguessam, in which it is thus entered, under the title of Lands of the Archbishop's knights, i. e. Lands held of the Archbishop by knight's service.

Which is: In Estrei Hundred. William Folet holds of the Archbishop, Flenguessam. It was taxed at half a suling. There he has 6 villeins, with 1 carucate and an half.

After which, it is entered that the same William held Statenborough, in the adjoining parish of Eastry, and afterwards thus:

He tre valeb T. R. E. 40 sol. Qdo arch recep. 10 sol. modo 30 sol.

Which is: These lands were worth, in the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 40 shillings; when the Archbishop received them, 10 shillings; now 30 shillings.

After this, I find no further mention of this place for some time; but in the reign of K. Edward I, in the year 1288, the King granted licence to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, to appropriate to their use, a messuage, and certain rents and lands, in different parishes, and among others, in the tenancy of Norborne, at Hoo, Herlesword, Skoldon, Betsbanger, Brakespottesgore at Fenlesham (a).

In later times, I find, that William Reynold, of Finculham, by will, proved in 1470, gave his house wherein he dwelt there, and the lands belonging to it, to John his son. William Poynter, of Norborne, by his will, proved in 1524, gave his place at Fynglisham, to John his son. Thomas Parker, late one of the Jurats of the Town and Port of Sandwich, by his will, proved in 1596, gave to Nicholas Parker, his brother's son, and an only son and heir, Edward Beckingham Benson, above-mentioned, who married, in 1783, the Honourable Lady Frances-Alicia Sandys, sister of Charles, Earl of Tankerville, and widow of Richard Sandys, of Canterbury, Cl. by whom he had issue. See above.

His descendant, Valentine Parker, gent. resided here in 1669, and by his will gave this estate to his godson, Mr. Valentine Hild, or Hoile, from whom it descended to his grandson, Mr. Edward Hoile, of Norborne Court, who by will devised it to his son, Mr. Thomas Hoile, now a minor, to whom the inheritance of it belongs at this time.

Robert, Abbat of St. Augustine's monastery, in K. Henry III.'s reign, anno 1240, confirmed an exchange, made by the Chapter of his Convent, of all the tythes of Finglesham and Little Betsbanger, as well great as small, to the Eleemosiary of his monastery, which tythes had before belonged to the Chamberlain of it (b). These tythes of Finglesham now belong to the Archbp of Canterbury, and are, with those of Little Betsbanger in this parish, demised on a beneficial lease, at the yearly rent of 10l.

Through Finglesham, and over Howe-bridge (c), the high road leads to Deal. From hence, the water, called the Gesling, or north stream, takes its course towards the river Stour, below Sandwich.

At a small distance southward from Finglesham, is the little hamlet of Marley, which consists of only four houses, one of which is that of the former of which is its proper name, though it is now usually called by the latter. It contains 140 acres of land, and formerly belonged to the family of Brett. Percival Brett, of Wye, yeoman, possessed it in 1630, whose descendant, Richard Brett, of Wye, gent. owned it in 1672, and left an only daughter Catherine, who married John Cook, formerly of Mersham, but afterwards of Canterbury, Cl. They left two daughters, Catherine, wife of Thomas Sbindler, watchmaker, and Alderman of Canterbury, and Mary, and they joined in the conveyance of this estate, in 1727, to John Paramor, of Statenborough in Eastry, gent.; after which, it descended in like manner as Statenborough, to his niece, Mrs. Jane Hawker, afterwards the wife of John Dilnot, esq. She died in 1790, and the property of it became vested in her husband; who in 1792

There are three other small farms in this hamlet, belonging to Earl Cowper, Mr. Wise, of Chatbam, surgeon, and to John and Stacy Wilson, formerly Verriers.

About a mile south-westward, at the western boundary of this parish, is styled in the antient Book of the Fædary of Kent, the manor of Westcourt, alias East Betsbanger, and said in it to have been held of the late Monastery of St. Augustine by knights service. Forty acres of land, late parcel of this manor, was held of the above late Abbat, as was found after the death of Thomas Parker, anno 39 Elizabeth. But Westcourt itself was the property of Roger Litchfield, who died possessed of it in 1513, and in his will calls it a manor, since which it has always had the same owners as Great Betsbanger, and is now possessed accordingly by the Rev. James Morrice.

About a quarter of a mile eastward from Westcourt, is Little Betsbanger, above-described. Upon the north-north east point of the open downs adjoining are the remains of a camp, formed for the forces which lay here, under the command of Captain Peke, to oppose the landing of the Spaniards, at the time of the Armada, in 1588. About a mile further southward from hence, over an open uninclosed country, is Stonebeap, a good farm, which has long had the same owners as Norborne Court (d).

At a like distance, still further southward, is formerly written Stodwald, an estate which some time since belonged to a branch of the numerous family of Harvey, originally of Tilmanstone in this county, under which a further account of them may be seen.

Thomas Harvey died possessed of this estate in 1660 (e), which devolved to his eldest son Richard, who was of Selson, in Woodnesborough. He died in 1675, seized of this messuage or farm, with the buildings, and 200 acres of land belonging to it, in Northborne, Little Mongeham, and Tilmanstone, and by will gave it to the Mongeham, belonging to Mr. John Boys, and 22 acres in Norborne, late belonging to Mr. Edward Dering, bart. separate from it, but by what means I know not.

From hence over Maimage, but more properly Malmains Down, is containing 15 houses. In it is Ashley farm, the buildings of which, and 70 acres of land, are freehold, and belong to Mrs. Mary Denne and Mrs. Elizabeth Herring. The rectory or parsonage of Ashley, called in antient records, Essela, was part of the possessions of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, with whom it continued till the dissolution of that abbey, anno 31 Henry VIII, at which time it was held by lease, dated 28 Henry VIII, for 12 years, by George Webbe, farmer, there, at the yearly rent of 10*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* with the further increase of 3*s.* 4*d.* yearly, for le dyvydent. After which, it was granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, of whom it is now held at the above like yearly rent, on a beneficial lease; the interest in which belongs one quarter part to Isaac Bargrave, of Easstry, esq; in right of his late wife Sarah, deceased, sister and coheir of Robert Lynch, M. D. of Canterbury, deceased, (the former lessee of it;) and the other three quarters to Mary, married to the Rev. John Denne, of Maidstone, and Elizabeth, married to the Rev. John Herring, the other two sisters and coheirs of Dr. Lynch, who are jointly, by his will, entitled to the interest of this lease, in the respective shares above-mentioned. This lease consists of 70 acres of land, with the tythes of all the hamlet of Ashley, West Studdal, Minacre, Napchester, (excepting 40 acres,) and 200 acres in Little Mungeham. There is another freehold farm in this hamlet of 130 acres.

Bishop of Baieux's estates, under the name of Essewelle, and then in the tenure of Ralph de Curbespine, was intended for the estates in this hamlet of Ashley, called in the antient registers of St. Augustine's monastery, Essela. In the above volume it is inserted as relating to the parish of Eastwell, where the reader, on the perusal of it, will judge for himself.

About a quarter of a mile southward from the above, is sometimes spelt Minaker, consisting of three farms. One moiety, or half of this hamlet, was formerly the property of Silkwood, and was purchased by fir Robert Furnese, of Waldersbare, bart. of John, Thomas, and Edward Silkwood, at which time it consisted of 100 acres of land, of the annual rent of 49*l.* (g) Since which, it has passed in like manner as the rest of the Furnese estates in this county, which came to the late Earl of Guildford, by his marriage with the Countess of Rockingham, fir Robert Furnese's daughter, and on the Earl's death to his eldest son, Frederick, Earl of Guildford, whose son, the present Right Honourable George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, is now owner of it.

The other moiety, or half of this hamlet, was owned formerly by one Terry, who by will gave it to his two sons, one of whom still possesses his moiety; but the other, possessed by Richard Terry, the other son, was sold after his death to Leonard Woodward, of Ashley, who now owns it.

Still further southward, at the utmost limits of this parish, is another hamlet of five houses, called Napchester, which adjoins to the parishes of Waldersbare and Whitfield, the principal farm of which belongs to the Earl of Guildford (b). And at a small distance westward, at the south-west confines of the parish, is Headling, alias Heasteden wood, formerly part of the Furnese estate, now likewise belonging to the Earl of Guildford (i).

There are no fairs kept in this parish.

CHARITIES.

Sir Richard Sandys, of this parish, bart. by will, proved in 1726, gave to the churchwardens and overseers of Norborne, the sum of 5*l.* to be laid out in buying coals, at the cheapest time of the year, and to be by them sold out to the poor of the parish at the same price that they cost, and the monies arising from such sale to be a fund, to be yearly employed for the same purpose.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

NORTHBORNE is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is exempted from the Archdeacon, is dedicated to St. Augustine. It is a large goodly building, consisting of a nave, chancel, and transept, having a large square tower in the middle, which has probably been much higher. There are five bells in it (k).

The church of Northborne, with its chapels of Cotmanton and Sholdon, was antiently appendant to the manor, and was in early times appropriated to the Abbey of St. Augustine; and in 1128, anno 29 Henry I, was assigned by Hugh, the Abbat of it, to the use of the elemosinary or almonry belonging to it (l), which assignation

(k) This church is built of flint, with quoins, door, and window cases of ashler squared stone; some arches of the windows are pointed, some circular, and some with zigzag ornaments. The western arch of the tower is pointed with triple dancette ornaments; the others circular.

In the chancel is a grave-stone for Anne, daughter of Edward and Margaret Nicols, which Edward was Vicar here. She died an infant in 1634. This chancel is repaired by the Archbishop's lessee of the almonry. In the south transept, which is repaired by the Sandys's family, is a large vault, in which are deposited their remains, who were formerly resident at and late owners of Norborne Court. Over this vault, against the south wall, is a most costly and sumptuous monument, with a pediment, pillars, curtains, &c. at the back, a plain blank marble tablet, supported by two kneeling angels, and on the tomb the recumbent effigies of a knight in armour and his lady in a loose mantle; their heads resting on double pillows; his body raised higher than the woman's. Above the pediment, a large shield, being baron and femme, Sandys, 1st and 4th, 2d and 3d, a castle impaling Bulkley with 11 quarterings. At the dexter corner of the monument, a shield with the arms of Bulkley, at the sinister, of Sandys. In the dexter compartment of the base of the tomb, three shields, two and one: 1st, Sandys, with a mullet, impaling Hammond; 2d, Sandys, with a \cup , impaling blank; 3d, Sandys, with a mullet, impaling blank. In the sinister compartment are three similar shields, two and one: 1st, a lion rampant within a bordure vaire, (which seems to be a mistake of the sculptor for the arms of Scrimshaw, being, vaire, an escutcheon charged with a lion rampant;) 2d, blank impaling Sandys; 3d, Sandys, with a fleur-de-lis, impaling blank. In the great shield, over the knight's arms, on a knight's helmet, a griffin segreant, and over the woman's, on a knight's helmet, a bull's head issuing from a ducal crown. A label of 3 points over the capitals of the pillars, to denote the house of the knight.

This tomb is for sir Edwin Sandys, knt. second son of Edwin Sandys, successively Bishop of Worcester and London, and Archbishop of York. He had a grant of Norbourne Court, from K. James I. He was born in 1561, and died in 1639. (His marriages and issue have been already mentioned above.) This monument was erected by sir Edwin Sandys in his life time; but he who erected this sumptuous monument, and added the provisional blank tablet and escutwas confirmed by Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury (m); by Abbat Silvester, in the year 1154; and by several Popes afterwards (n); and by K. Henry II. (o)

In 1182, a composition was entered into between Richard, Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Abbat and Convent, in which, inter alia, the Archbishop allowed the exemption of this church, as well from all dues, as procurations of the Archdeacon and his officials; and the same year the Archbishop confirmed this church to the monastery (p).

There was a pension of antient time of 6s. paid to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, from this church of Northborne, with the chapels of Soldene, Mungebam, and Langedon, which with the others from their several churches, was given up by agreement in 1242, for a compensation out of the profits of the church of Preston (q).

The font is hexagonal, and plain. In the nave, is a grave-stone and memorial for Richard Harvie, of Eastry, obi. 1675, æt. 75. In the church-yard are three altartombs; the first for Elizabeth, wife of the Rev. George Shocklidge, Vicar, who died in 1768, æt. 80. George Shocklidge, A. M. Vicar 49 years, obiit 1772, æt. 77. NORTHBORNE.

After this, there were continual disputes between the Abbats of this monastery and the several Archbbs, concerning their respective privileges and jurisdictions relating to the churches belonging to it, among others, to this of Northborne, which at last ended in the allowance of the Abbat's exemption from all such jurisdiction; Archbp Arundel in 1397 pronouncing a definitive sentence in the Abbat's favour—all which may be found inserted at large in Thorne's Chronicle (r).

In the year 1295, the Abbat made an institution of several new deanries, for the purpose of apportioning the churches belonging to his monastery to each of them, as exempt from the jurisdiction of the Archbishop; in which institution this church was included in the new deanry of Sturry. This caused great contentions between the Abbats and the several Archbishops, which at last ended in the total abolition of this new institution (s).

In the year 1289, there was a process commenced by the Rector of Waldersbare against the Eleemosinary, for taking certain tythes arising from the several hamlets of Menditre, Estsole, Westodwold, and Essele; the latter asserting that those tythes, and all parochial rights from the inhabitants of those places, and especially all oblations and obventions whatsoever, accruing to the church of Northborne, ought to belong to him, and the Vicar of the same, in like manner with the chantry, and that of antient time; which process, after much altercation and appeals, was determined at last wholly in favour of the Eleemosinary (t). Soon after which, by an inquisition then taken for the purpose, it was found that this church was, and ought to be taxed at the yearly value of 60 marts (u); and afterwards, in the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1483, it was taxed at the yearly specific sum of 40l. (v)

In which state this appropriation, with the advowson of the vicarage, remained, till the final dissolution of the Abbey of St. Augustine, in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when it came into the King's hands, whence the parsonage appro- priate, otherwise called the Almonry-farm, was granted the next year in exchange to the Archbp of Canterbury (w); and it remains parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury at this time (x).

But the advowson of the vicarage of this church, being excepted out of the above grant, remained in the Crown, till K. Edward VI, by indenture, June 12, in his 1st year, granted it, being an advowson in gross, to the same Archbishop (y), in whose successors it has continued to this time, his Grace the Archbishop being the present patron of it.

Though the church of Northborne was so early appropriated to the use of the almonry, as has been mentioned above, and a vicarage instituted in it, yet there was no endowment of it till the 1st year of the reign of K. Edward I, when at the instance of Archbishop John Peckham, the Abbat and Convent, under their seal, granted a suitable portion out of the profits and revenues of this church, to John, then Vicar of it, for his support and maintenance, which being approved of by the Archbishop's Commissary, he, by the consent of all parties, decreed and ordained, that the Vicar of the church of Northborne, and his successors, should have the usual mansion of the vicarage, with the garden, and two acres of land contiguous to it, together with 11 acres of land lying at Donneslonde, and the way competent and usual to the same; all which the Vicars of this church had heretofore enjoyed. And that they should have yearly two cows feeding, and the right of feeding them, from the feast of St. Gregory until that of St. Martin in winter, with the cows of the religious wheresoever within the bounds and limits of the parish of the church of Northborne, in which it should happen, that the cows of the religious should be fed. Also that they should have and receive, in the name of their vicarage, all the tythes whatsoever of sheaves, corn, and other vegetables, in orchards or in gardens, in present or in future, within the bounds and limits, or titheries of the church of Northborne, or of Northborne, on a beneficial lease, for 21 years, under the Archbishop, in 1643. It afterwards came into the possession of the D'Aeth family; and the interest of it is now vested in fir Narborough D'Aeth, of Kmolton, bart.

The farm-house is antient, and built of flints, as are the walls of the farm-yard. It is of the annual rent of about 100l. The land belonging to it is 80 acres; 27 acres of marsh in Sholdon, and 40 acres of land in Little Mongebarn. The land in Norborne is tythe-free, as was that in Little Mongebarn, till by a late suit the Rector of that parish recovered his right to the tythes of it.

NORTH-Eastward from Northborne lies the parish of Sboldon, next adjoining; being written in antient records likewise, Soldone and Sboldon.

A borsholder is chosen for the borough of Sboldon, comprehending the whole parish, at the Court Leet of the manor of Northborne, which manor claims paramount over it; subordinate to which, is which appears to have been part of the possessions of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, given to it most probably in 618, by Eaobald, K. of Kent, as part of those 30 plow lands, which made up the manor of Northborne, with sundry lands and appurtenances, as mentioned in his charter of it (m); and it continued with the monastery, till the suppression of it, in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII (n), when it came, with the rest of the revenues of the Abbat and Convent, into the King's hands, whence this manor was granted, by the name of the manor of Hull and Sbolden, by that King, by his indenture, in his 34th year, in exchange for other premises, to Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury, and his successors (o). Since which, it has continued parcel of the possessions of that see to the present time, and is now held on a beneficial lease by Mr. James Wiborne, who resides here (p).

There is not any Court held for this manor.

(n) This manor was held by lease, dated anno 24 Henry VIII, for 24 years, granted to Thomas Sayear, farmer, here, with all the lands, meadows, &c. belonging to it, at the yearly rent of 11l. 3s. 4d. and also one windmill, held likewise by like lease from the Abbat, &c. at the yearly rent of 20s. and an increase of rent of 3s. 4d. more.

(p) In 1643, sr Robert Crayford, knt. was lessee of this estate, at the yearly rent of 22l. 3s. 4d. at which rent it is held at this time.

The interest in this lease passed from Crayford into the name of Aldworib, and from thence, in the 11th year of Q. Anne, to Daniel Wyborn, who afterwards resided here. He left issue by Susan Overton, of the co. of Norfolk, one son and a daughter, married to Denne, of Feuderland. William Wyborn, the son, rebuilt the mansion-house of this manor, and resided in it; he married Eleanor, eldest daughter of Samuel

SHOLDON.

HULL COURT, alias LONG FARM, is an estate in this parish, which was antiently the property of the family of Retling, of Retling Court in Nonington. Sir Richard, son of Thomas de Retling, appears to have died seized of it in the 23d year of K. Edward III, whose widow, the Lady Sarah Retling, afterwards remarried John de St. Laurence.

By her first husband, she left a sole daughter and heir Joane, who marrying John Spicer, entitled him to the possession of it, and he died seized of it in the 10th year of K. Richard II; after which, by Cicely, a daughter and coheir of this name, it passed in marriage to John Isaac, of Bridge, and he alienated it before the 21st of K. Henry VI, to John Bressland, who not long afterwards sold it to Fineux, of Swingfield, in which name it remained, till it was again passed away to Monins (q), whose ancestors had been possessed of lands here for many generations before (r).

John Monins, of Dover, who lived at the latter end of K. Richard II.'s reign, appears by the pedigree of this family to have married the daughter and heir of Sholdon, descended of a family, who from their residence and possessions in this parish, assumed their surname from it (s), one of whom, Lambert de Showeldon, for so he is written in Thorne's Chronicle, was possessed of lands here in the year 1128, anno 29 Henry I. (t)

But to return to the possessors of this estate, which after it had continued sometime in the name of Monins, was alienated by one of them to sir William Crayford, of Mongebam, kn. from whose descendant it passed by sale to Aldworth; and I find that one of this name, Richard Ald-

They bear for their arms—Sable, a fess or, between 3 swans proper.

(r) Simon Monyn, of St. Margaret at Cliffe, appears by his will, proved in 1471, to have died seized of lands in this parish, late his father's, Symon Monyn; and his descendant, John Monins, gent. Lieutenant of Dover Castle, by his will, proved in 1554, devised his lands in this parish to Thomas his son, and his lease of the parsonage of Sholdon to his son William.

It is probable that this Lambert de Showeldon, or Sholdon, held the manor of Hull of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, by knights service, the tythes of whose lands in this parish are mentioned in Thorne's Chronicle, as having been in the possession of the Abbat and Convent, and to have been assigned in 1128, by formerly accounted a manor (v), and now usually called Cottington, is situated in the western part of this parish, though great part of the demesnes of it are within the adjoining parishes of Northborne and Walmer (w). It was in early times, part of those possessions in this county, which enriched the eminent family of Criol. Simon de Criol held it of the Abbat of St. Augustine as one knight's fee, in the reign of K. Henry III, (x) leaving Maud his widow surviving, who died in the 52d year of it (y), leaving William her son to succeed to it. After this family was become extinct, I find it in the possession of Salamon Champneis (z); but in the 20th year of K. Edward III, on the aid then levied, it is entered in the book of it, that Isabel Champneis and the heirs of John Malmains, of Hoo, paid aid for it as one knight's fee, which Maud de Criell and Isabel, daughter of John de Deane, before held in Sholdon of the Abbat of St. Augustine. Soon after which, this Abbat Hugh, to the cloathing of the monks there; and in the Register of that abbey, cart. 300, Roger, elected Abbat, anno 1224, granted to Simon, son of Lambert, their knight, of Soueldune, in full right, service in his chapel, &c.

(u) The freehold lands of this estate, as well as those lands belonging to the manor of Hull, with the appendant rectory of Sholdon, being arable, and lying chiefly in the common fields, were become, by unity of possession, so blended together and intermixed from time immemorial, as not to be ascertained by the antient description of them; but they have been lately, with the consent of the Archbishop's lessee, surveyed and found out, and maps have been made of them, and boundary stones placed, to prevent future confusion.

(v) It is styled a manor in the endowment of Northborne vicarage. See above, under Northborne.

(w) The house of Cotmanton divides the two parishes of Sholdon and Norborne. The demesnes are about 400 acres; about 250 of which lie in Sholdon, the greater part of the residue in Norborne, and a small part in Walmer.

estate passed into the possession of Roger Digge, of Barbam, whose son John Digge, of that place, gent. in the 7th year of the next reign of K. Richard II, did homage to the Abbat of St. Augustine for it, as two quarters of one knight's fee, in Sboldone, viz. of Cotmanton, which fell to him on the death of his father (a), and in his descendants it remained till K. Henry VII.'s reign, when John Digge, of Barbam, esq; in the 4th year of it, conveyed it to trustees (b), who, pursuant to the intent of their trust, sold it to Thomas Barton, descended from the ancient family of this name in the co. of Lancaster, and he died seised of it in the 24th year of that reign, holding it of the above-mentioned Abbat; but his descendant, at the latter end of K. Hen. VIII.'s reign, alienated it to Brown, of London, from which name it passed to sir Roger Manwood, knt. Chief Baron of the Exchequer (c). After which it became the property of Richardson (d), from which name, about the middle of K. James I.'s reign, it passed by sale to sir Thomas Smith, of London, knt. whose son, sir John Smith, knt. succeeded him in the possession of it; after whose death his heirs conveyed it to the Governors of the Hospital for the cure of lunatics, commonly called Bethlem Hospital, in Moorfields, in London, in trust, for the use of that noble charity, and they are at this time possessed of the fee of it.

Mr. George Hooper is the present lessee of it.

A fee-farm rent of 2s. 4d. is yearly paid for this estate.

Almost adjoining to the mansion of Cotmanton eastward, was a chapel, erected for the use of the owners of it and their families, which, like many others of the same sort, by the increase of expence and other alterations of the times, becoming a burthen to the owners, was suffered to run to ruin, and they chose rather to relinquish the privilege of having it, than continue at the expence of repairs and other contingences arising from it.

The ruins of this chapel remained till within these few years. By the stone walls, which were entire, it appeared to have been a building of some beauty and symmetry of architecture, consisting of a nave and south isle, separated by a row of elegant slight pillars, supporting pointed arches; beyond them was a chancel, circular at the east end, and vaulted over with stone. The whole of it is now pulled down, and the foundations erased, so that the very scite of it is no longer visible.

CORNILO HUNDRED.

In the endowment of the vicarage of Northborne, the tythes with which the Vicar was endowed within the bounds and limits of this chapel, are recited, and that the lords of the manor of Cotmanton were bound to repair this chapel and the chancel of it, and to find the books, vestments, and other ornaments necessary to it; but the Vicar was bound at all times either to serve himself, or to find a fit priest to serve in divine offices in this chapel (e).

Saphir Paramor, of Eastry, by his will, proved in 1591, gave to Robert his son, all his manors and lands, called the Rangre, in Sholdon and Norborne, in tail mail, remainder to his son Bartholomew. There is a marsh in this parish called Nether marsh, once belonging to the Maison Dieu in Dover, valued with another pasture, called Le Downe, at 4l. yearly rent. The Nether marshes, alias Maison Dieu marshes, containing 60 acres in this parish, were purchased by sir Henry Furnese, of Waldershare, bart. and have descended since in like manner, with his other estates, to the Right Hon. George Earl of Guildford, the present owner of them.

The Hospital called Jesus alias Boys's Hospital, without Northgate, in Canterbury, is possessed of fresh marshes, containing 45 acres, and sand-bills, containing 70 acres in this parish, of the yearly reserved rent of 25l. and an annuity of 6l. 13s. 4d. issuing out of Ham Hopes in this parish, settled on it by the will of sir John Boys, knt. the founder of it, by his will, proved in 1612.

PRESENT STATE OF SHOLDON.

This parish is situated adjoining to the parish of Deal. The high road from Canterbury to Deal passes through it, over the open arable down, from Howe-bridge north-eastward, having both Cotmanton and Hull at almost a stone's-throw on the left hand northward, thence it goes on through a narrow inclosed lane to the village, called Sholdon-street, and the church at the east end of it; the latter being both on the south and east sides encircled by the highway, at not more than a quarter of a mile's distance from Upper Deal. The street of Sholdon contains about 20 houses, one of which is a farm-house, formerly belonging to the Crayfords, but now to the Rev. James Morrice, Cl. and the hamlet of Sholdon Bank contains about as many. At the west end of the parish is the hamlet of Foulmead (f). The parish contains about 1500 acres, of which about 400 being of Canterbury, in 1629, was possessed of an annuity of 10l. received yearly out of Cotmanton, in Northborne, which by will, proved in the next year, he gave to his sister Man.

arable, are worth about 20s. per acre; the residue is marsh-land in Lydden Valley, great part of which is very wet, and of little value. There is no woodland in it.

CHARITIES.

Sir Thomas Smith, knt. by will in 1625, gave to six poor honest men, a four-penny loaf each, on a Sunday; 2s. to the minister; 2s. to the churchwardens; 2s. to the clerk of the parish; to be paid yearly out of money intrusted to the Skinners Company, in London. But this gift has not been paid since the great fire of London, in 1666.

A person, name unknown, but supposed to be Rickman, gave the sum of 20s. per ann. payable yearly out of the rents of a house, and five or six acres of land in this parish, now in the occupation of Adams, to the industrious poor of it. This money was accordingly thus distributed till within these 12 or 14 years past, since which it has been brought into the parish accounts, and for these four years past has not been paid.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

SHOLDON is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Nicholas, consists of a nave and a chancel; it is of a good size and well built, having a square tower steeple at the west end, in which are three bells (g).

The church of Sholdon was always accounted as a chapel belonging to the church of Northborne, the tythes of it, both great and small, being in K. Henry III.'s reign, assigned by Robert, Abbat of St. Augustine's, with the common consent of his Chapter, to the Eleemosnary or Almonry of the convent, which tythes the Chamberlain of it had before been accustomed to receive (h).

In the new institution of deanries, made in 1295, by the Abbat of St. Augustine's, this of Sholdon was included in the new deanry of Sturry; but as this was to exempt these churches from the jurisdiction of the Archbishop, it caused great contentions between the Abbats and the several Archbishops, which at last ended in the total abolition of this new institution (i).

The several tythes within the bounds and limits of this chapel, belonging to the church of Northborne, have been recited above in the endowment of the vicarage of that church, but the parsonage of Sholdon still remained with the religious, and was demised by the Abbat and Convent, anno 24 Henry VIII, by the description of the Rectory, or Grange of Sholdon, with the glebe, tenths of corn, &c. at the yearly rent of 12l. for the term of 12 years (k).

After the dissolution of the Abbey of St. Augustine, anno 31 Henry VIII, this chapel, as an appendage to the church of Northborne, passed into the hands of the Crown, whence the rectory of it was granted in exchange the next year to the Archbishop of Canterbury, as was the advowson of this chapel, anno 1 Edward VI, together with that of the church of Northborne, in which state it continues at this time, the Archbishop being now possessed of the rectory appropriate of Sholdon, which is entirely distinct from that of Northborne, and the present patron of the church of Northborne, with the chapel of Sholdon annexed to it.

By the instrument of endowment of the vicarage of Northborne, with the chapel appendant to it, the Vicar was to undergo the burthen of serving in divine offices by himself or other fit priest in this chapel; and of providing bread and wine, lights, and other things, which were necessary in it, for the celebration of divine services, at their own expence; and the burthen likewise of repairing and rebuilding the chancel of this chapel depending on the said church, within and without; and of finding and repairing the books, vestments, and ornaments of it, which, by the Rectors of churches, ought or were wont to be found and repaired of custom or of right, and other burthens ordinary and extraordinary, incumbent on this chapel, the aforesaid religious should undergo for ever and acknowledge (l).

This chapel is not valued separately in the King's books, but is included in the valuation of the church of Northborne, the Vicar of which is instituted and inducted to that vicarage, with the chapel of Sholdon annexed to it.

In 1588, here were communicants 62. In 1640, 88.

principal one is 80l. per annum, belonging to Capt. Feade, of Ramsgate; another of 30l. per annum, belonging to Mr. Richard May, of Deal; and the remaining one to Mr. Bethel Wyborne.

(g) The church is ceiled, and kept very neat. In the chancel are several modern memorials for the Wyborne family. There are no monuments of antiquity in it, nor any thing worth further notice.

Anno 4 Edward VI, James Crosby, Priest, was buried in the chancel of this church. William Hild, of Deal, pilot, by will, proved in 1671, gave to the parish of Sholdon, a bell, fitting for a middle bell, between the two bells then hanging in the steeple of the church of it.

The

The TOWN and PARISH of DEAL

LIES adjoining to Sboldon north-eastward, being written in antient writers, both Dola (m), and Dale; in the survey of Domesday, Addelam, taking its name from its situation—a low open plain upon the sea shore.

This parish, with the town and borough of Deal, was formerly part of the hundreds of Cornilo and Bewsborough, as appears by the survey of Domesday; but before the middle of K. Henry III.'s reign, it was esteemed within the liberty and jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, and on some disputes in K. Henry VI.'s time, relating to its being rated to the subsidy with the rest of those hundreds, the King, by his letters patent, in the 16th year of his reign, again united it to that jurisdiction, as a member to the port of Sandwich; accordingly it still continues a separate jurisdiction from those hundreds within the limits and liberties of the Ports, having its own Constables and officers, under the jurisdiction of its own Justices.

THE MANOR OF DEAL, alias CHAMBERLAIN'S FEE, was part of the antient possessions of the Canons of the Priory of St. Martin, in Dover, of whom it was held as a prebend, by the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, in Canterbury; and it is accordingly thus entered under the general title of the Canons lands, in the survey of Domesday:

In Beusberg Hd. & in Cornelai Hbd—In addela ten abb S. Augustini 1 solin. & ibi bt 3 villos. & 7 bord cu 1. car & dimid. Val. 30. sol. T. R. E. 40 sol. Antecessor ejus tenuit in prebenda similiter.

Abbat to the use of the Chamber of the monastery, whence it acquired the name of Chamberlain's fee.

In the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, in the year 1313, being the 7th of K. Edward II.'s reign, the Abbat was summoned by quo warranto, to shew why he claimed sundry liberties therein mentioned in this manor, among others, and view of frank pledge, and all belonging to it, and wreck of the sea, weif, and other liberties therein-mentioned. And the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant in this county; and he pleaded, that K. Edw. II, by his charter, in his 6th year, had fully confirmed all of them to the Abbat and his successors (n). After which, the rolls of the last Iter of J. de Berewick as aforesaid being inspected, it was found that all the liberties then claimed in the said Iter had been allowed in it; upon which every part of the same was allowed by the said H. de Stanton and his sociates, as above-mentioned (o). And the liberty of the view of frank pledge was in particular further confirmed by that King, in his 10th year (p). After which, K. Edward III, in his 36th year, by his charter of inspeximus, confirmed to the Abbat and Convent all their manors and possessions given to them by former Kings, and by another the several liberties and confirmations made by his predecessors, among which were those above-mentioned (q), and K. Henry VI. likewise confirmed the same (r).

In the 8th year of K. Richard II, the spiritualities of this abbey, in the receipt of the Chamberlain of it at Dale, were valued at 30s. (s)

By a register of this abbey, made in the time of Abbat Fyndon, about the 16th year of the above reign, it appears, that the lands here, belonging to the Chamberlain's fee, consisted of 121 acres of land and upwards, besides a certain portion of tythes within this parish (t).

The TOWN and PARISH of DEAL.

In which situation this manor continued till the reign of K. Henry VIII, when the Abbat and Convent, under their chapter-seal, in the 29th year of it, demised their tenths within this parish and Ripple, (together with the manor of Ripple, parcel of which they seem to have been accounted,) belonging to the office of Chamberlain, to Henry Foche, for a term of years, as has been already mentioned above under that parish. After which, this manor remained with the monastery till its final dissolution, in the 30th year of that reign, when it was, with the other revenues of it, surrendered into the King's hands, to the use of him and his heirs for ever.

After which, I find nothing more of it, till the 42d year of Q. Elizabeth, when it was granted by her as parcel of the manor of Ripple, to John Hales, of Tenterden, esq; and he dying without issue, devised Chamberlain's fee (u) to his nephew, Edward Hales, esq; afterwards in 1611 created a baronet, and he alienated it in K. James I.'s reign to John Gookin and others, in trust for Thomas Gookin, gent. whose wife Jane possessed it after his death, and was succeeded in it by their son John Gookin, gent. whose son Richard, in 1699, passed it away by sale to William Verrier, of Sandwich, and his son John, in 1712, conveyed it, one moiety to John Paramor the elder, and the other moiety to John Hawker, of Sandwich.

John Paramor conveyed his moiety, in 1733, to his son John, who gave it by will to his niece Jane, then the wife of John, son of John Hawker above-mentioned, which by fine was limited to the longest liver.

Mrs. Hawker survived her husband, and Mr. Hawker the father devised the other moiety to her, so that she became possessed of the entire fee of this manor. She afterwards married John Dilnot, of Sandwich, esq; and upon her marriage settled the fee of it upon him; she is since dead, and he became possessed of this estate, which he afterwards alienated to Mr. John May, of Deal, gent. who is the present proprietor of it (v).

A Court Leet and Court Baron is held for this manor, the whole fee of which is within this parish.

A Borsholder is chosen at the court of it, whose jurisdiction extends over this manor.

In another Register, it is entered, that the manor of the Chamberlain of St. Augustine had in demesne, (inter alia.)

THE MANORS OF COURT-ASH, and DEAL

are two manors situated within this parish of Deal; both which were in early times part of the possessions likewise of the Canons of St. Martin's Priory, in Dover, under the general title of whose lands they are thus entered in the survey of Domesday, taken in the year 1080:

These 100 acres were of the prebends, as is testified. In the whole it is worth 8 pounds. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 7 pounds.

And a little further : In Sibertesuualt, William of PoiEiers holds half a suling and 12 acres, and in Addelam half a suling, 12 acres less, and there be has 2 villeins, and 3 borderers, with 1 carucate and an half. The whole is worth 55 shillings. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 4 pounds.

In Addela, William, son of Tedald, holds half a suling and half a yoke, and there be bas in demesne 1 carucate, and 2 villeins, and 2 borderers. It is worth 60 shillings. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, 40 shillings. Derine, the son of Sired, held it.

The manor of Court-Ash was certainly included in the above description, and seems afterwards to have come into the possession of the Prior and Canons of St. Martin's, and to have remained with them till the final dissolution of their priory, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, anno 1535, when it was surrendered, among the rest of their revenues, into the King's hands, who afterwards granted the priory, with all its lands and possessions, including this manor, subject nevertheless to certain exceptions and reservations therein-mentioned, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors, for ever, part of whose possessions it continues at this time, his Grace the Archbishop being the present owner of it.

This manor has a Court Leet and Court Baron held for it, being demised with the manors of Dudmanscomb and Brandred, on a beneficial lease, from his Grace the Archbishop. The family of Hodgson, of Dover, were lessees of it for many years, from whom their interest passed by sale to Sampson Farbrace, of Dover, gent. who at his death gave it to his son, Mr. George Farbrace, the trustees of whose two infant children, Isaac Mushey Teal, and Henry Farbrace, gents. are at present entitled to the interest of this lease (w).

This manor extends into the parishes of Upper Deal, Lower Deal, Mongebam, Ringwold, and Walmer. It comprehends within its bounds only a small part of the town of Deal, at the north end.

But the manor of Deal, alias Deal prebend, included likewise in the above description in Domesday, appears not long afterwards to have become part of the revenues of the see of Canterbury, though by what means I have not discovered, and to have been appropriated to the Archbishop's table, from which use it was however taken away, and granted from time to time by several Archbishops to different persons, and continued so till K. Edward I.'s reign, when

(a) In 1643, Josias Coppin, gent. was lessee of this manor, at the yearly rent of 17l. 2s. Joshua Coppin, of Deal, gent. died in 1721, and devised his interest in it, by will, to his niece Sarah, wife of Francis Brackenbury, and Anne

John Peckham, Archbishop of Canterbury, procuring the Pope's bull for this purpose, recalled and fully restored it to the former use to which it was appropriated; and this was confirmed by the above King, by writ, under his privy seal, dated in his 18th year (x), and again by K. Edw. II, in his 7th year (y).

In an ancient rental of the temporalities and spiritualities of the see of Canterbury, taken in K. Richard II.'s reign, the manor of Deal was valued, among them, at the yearly sum of 17l. 18s. 4d. (z); since which it has continued part of the possessions of that see to this time, his Grace the Archbishop being entitled to the present inheritance of it.

This manor, with the demesnes of it, exempted from all great tythes whatsoever, is likewise demised by his Grace the Archbishop, on a beneficial lease, (the waste in Lower Deal, between the sea and the sea valley there, all advowsons of churches, and the site of the King's buildings being excepted,) to James Wyborn, of Hull, in Sholdon, gent. the present possessor of it (a).

The waste of this manor comprises most of the site of Deal Town.

A Court for this manor is held at the Court-lodge, opposite the Rector's house, in Upper Deal.

ANTIENT AND PRESENT STATE OF DEAL.

Most authors have agreed in opinion, that Julius Cæsar, in his first expedition, landed somewhere near this place, after having been repulsed by the Britons, in his attempt to land at Dover.

Dr. Halley has proved in a discourse, which he published on this subject, that the cliffs, mentioned by Cæsar in his Commentaries, were those of Dover; and that the plain and open shore, which he next arrived at, was that along the downs here, where he made his landing good; but the particular place of his landing can only be guessed at; some have contended that he landed to the northward of the present town of Deal, on some part of the sand-downs (b); but there is a greater probability that the actual spot was, between where the windmill of Upper Deal now stands and Walmer Castle, where there are remains of intrenchments still visible (c).

Tymewell, daughter of Benjamin Tymewell, who had married Anne his niece, to be equally divided between them. The Randolphs were afterwards lessees of it; from one of whom, Herbert Randolph, Cl. the interest in it was passed away to Wyborn.

(b) See Philoiph. Transf. No. 193.—Vol. i. of this hist. p. ix.

(c) There is one small double intrenchment, with an agger or mount, and double fosse or trench close to the shore,

On the fourth night, after Cæsar's arrival, a great storm having damaged and destroyed many of his ships of burthen, and filled the galleys, which were drawn on shore, with the tide; he caused the remains of his fleet, with great toil and labour, to be hauled further up the shore on dry land, and inclosed it with his camp, within the same fortification.

Where this naval camp was, can only be conjectured. Some have supposed it to have been on the same spot where the southern part of the town of Deal now stands (d); whilst others think, that the cut, now called the Old Haven, mid way on the sand-downs between Deal and Sandwich, is the place where Cæsar secured his shattered fleet.

Next year, when Cæsar made a second expedition hither, he most probably landed at or not far from the same place he had done the year before; so that in whatever particular spot this naval camp, or where he landed, was, it was all the same as to his route from hence afterwards; for as he could not cross the great marshes to Great Mongeham, Northborne, or Ham, he must necessarily march to Upper Deal mill and Ripple, in pursuit of the enemy, and accordingly from thence by Little Mongeham, Sutton, Maimage, Barville, Eytborne, Barston, and Snowdowne, to his main camp on Barbam Downs, along all which route there is a continued course of Roman works and intrenchments, and tumuli, mounts, or barrows, most of which are taken notice of in the description of those parishes, and of Barbam Downs in particular.

But after Cæsar's taking his final departure from Britain, nothing further occurs relating to this place, the Romans afterwards constantly shore, between Deal and Walmer Castle; and another deep single fosse near a mile off, within the country round Walmer church.

Here, perhaps, says Dr. Packe, Cæsar fought his first battle in the sea, and set his men on shore; though the former has been judged by some to be a much more modern work, even so late as K. Henry VIII.'s time.

About a mile further than the town of Deal, upon a rise between it and Upper Deal, there are some faint remains of lines of intrenchment near the mill; and at Ripple, a little north of the church, there is a very manifest raised area, whose front looks over a pretty deep lyse bank towards Cæsar's succeeding works. Either of these spots, especially the former, as they were near the coast, and the most elevated ground of these parts, were very proper to keep a good look-out, both upon his fleet, which he had left behind him at anchor, and upon the motions of the enemy, who, after his first battle at the shore, had retired this way.

(d) Upon the shore about Deal, Sandown, and Walmer, is a long range of heaps of earth, where Camden, Lambard, Dr. Plot, and some others, suppose this ship camp to have been, and which the former says, in his time was called by the people Rome's work, that is, the work of the Romans; whilst others will have it, that they are only sand hills, using the port of Richborough upon all occasions, when they failed to this part of the coast, till the time of their wholly abandoning this island; and the haven of Sandwich, after that, on the decay of the port of Richborough, in great measure succeeding to it.

During all this time, the spot where great part of the town of Lower Deal now stands, was an open plain, and the only village here, was that now called Upper Deal, which was composed of the habitations of a few poor fishermen only, though at a less distance from the sea than at present, owing to the great increase of beach thrown on this shore afterwards (e).

But when Sandwich Haven likewise decayed, and the royal navy of England increased, as well in number as largeness of ships, and the trade of Britain likewise, the channel called the Downs, opposite to Deal, as the only safe and commodious road in these parts, became the general resort and rendezvous, not only of the men of war but of the trading ships, as well of our own as other nations, sailing from and towards the River Thames, and the metropolis of England.

This of course brought hither a continual supply of the stores necessary for the shipping, and quantities of provisions. It occasioned a great resort of sea-faring people, passengers, and others, on their account, so that a new town arose along the shore, which, in opposition to the more antient village, since called Upper Deal, acquired the name of the town of New, alias Lower Deal.

The PARISH of Deal, so early as the year 1229, anno 14 Henry III, appears to have been esteemed within the liberty of the Cinque Ports, brought together by the force of the weather. Camden's Brit. p. 248. See vol. i. of this hist. p. xii. Lambard's Peramb. p. 147.

(e) Leland, who wrote in K. Henry VIII.'s time, seems to confirm this, for in his Itinerary, vol. vii, p. 125, he says: "Deale half a myle fro the shore of the Sea, a Fishher village iii Myles or more above Sandwic, is upon a flat shore, and very open to the Se, wher is a Fosse or a great Bank artificial betwixt the Town and Se, and be ginnith about Deale and renneth a great way up toward S. Margarets Clyse, yn as much that sum suppose that this is the place where Cæsar landed in aperto Litore. Surely the Fosse was made to kepe owt Ennemyes ther or to defend the rage of the Se, or I think rather the Casting up Beche or pible."

Even so late as the year 1624, a house, now belonging to John Carter, esq; on the west side of the Lower street, (the furthest at this time from the sea shore,) is described in a deed of that date to abut ad le sea bank versus orientem. And further, in a chancery suit, in 1663, a witness, of the age of 72, deposed, that he well knew the walley of Deal, and that for 60 years past, and before any house was built in that walley, which was certainly where the Lower street of Deal now is.

and annexed as a member of the port of Sandwich, and it was expressed to have been so in the general charters of the Cinque Ports time out of mind; nevertheless, in K. Henry VI.'s time, there arose disputes concerning the assessing it to the general subsidy of the county at large; upon which that King, as a mark of his favour to so thriving a town, determined the dispute by again annexing and confirming it by his letters patent, in his 16th year, to the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports (f).

The borough of Deal was at that time governed by a Deputy and Assistants, nominated by the inhabitants of it, and appointed by the Mayor and Jurats of Sandwich (g), and it continued so till K. William III.'s reign, when violent disputes arose between the Inhabitants of Deal and the Corporation of Sandwich, which in great measure originated from the former having grown wealthy by the resort of shipping to the Downs, in the wars of the preceding 50 years. They began to feel the inconvenience of resorting to Sandwich upon every trifling occasion for justice, which was heightened still more by their own importance. This produced a restlessness and impatience to cavil on every occasion, and they seized the opportunity of the Mayor of Sandwich's having too violently pressed for a market, pursuant to the Lords Justices reviving an old statute for the payment of toll, &c. as the ground of petitioning for an exclusive charter of corporation, to render them independent of Sandwich; which, after much solicitation, a strenuous opposition being made to it by the latter, they at last obtained, in the year 1699, anno 11 William III, on the 13th of October, in which year the charter is dated (h).

By this charter, it was made a free town and borough of itself, and a body corporate and politic; and now by it consists of a Mayor, 12 Jurats, and a Commonalty of 24 Common Council, or Freemen, together with a Recorder and Town-clerk, two Sergeants-at-mace, bearing silver maces, a Clerk of the market, and other inferior officers. The Mayor, who is Coroner by virtue of his office, is elected annually on the first Tuesday in August. Those of the Jurats, who are Justices within this liberty, are so, exclusive of the Justices of the county of Kent, and hold a court of general sessions of the peace and gaol delivery, together with a court of record. The Corporation has liberty to purchase and possess lands in mortmain, of the clear yearly value of 100l. and it has other privileges, mostly the same as other corporations within the liberties of the Cinque Ports.

(h) Mr. Boys says, there is nothing however in the charter of Deal, which abrogates the prescriptive rights of the Magistrates of Sandwich respecting the former; and it is, he continues further, the opinion of Mr. Sergeant Thurbarne and others, (who might perhaps notwithstanding be too partial to their own town,) that the Magistrates of Sand-

The common seal of this Corporation has on it the Ports arms, with this inscription—Sigill: Maior: jurat: & Cotat: vill: et burg: de Deal in Com Kanc. The Mayor's seal has—A man of war under sail, with colours displayed in chief, and two castles in base; the inscription—Sigill: Maioris de Deal 1699.

The town of Deal stands close to the sea-shore, which is a bold open beach. It is built, like most other sea-faring towns, very unequal and irregular; and consists of three principal streets, parallel with the sea, which no doubt once flowed much farther into the country than at present, the town standing mostly on beach-pebble, with which the surface is covered for some space round it; and when the wind blows a storm towards the shore, the street next the sea, called Beach-street, seems frequently threatened with immediate destruction from its violence (i). The town is very populous, consist- of near 3000 souls; the inhabitants being, for the most part, either sea-faring, concerned in the business of the shipping, or the respective offices under Government; and in the time of war, when the fleets of the Royal Navy and the East and West India fleets lie in the Downs, this place is remarkably full of bustle and trade. The wealth of it was much greater a few years ago than at present; the great contraband commerce, formerly carried on here, having been in a great measure annihilated by the restraining acts lately passed, though there is still some traffic carried on in this way.

Besides the private yards here for the building of vessels and boats, there is a King's Naval Officer, with storehouses and quantity of stores, for the supply of the Navy; and here are Agents for the East India Company and Dutch wich have a concurrent jurisdiction with those of Deal, in all juridical matters whatsoever.

The inhabitants of Deal serve on juries at Sandwich now, the same as before the charter was granted. See this charter of Deal, printed at large in Boys's Coll. for Sandwich, p. 615.

(i) The Beach street and Middle street of Deal, are built wholly on the sea beach. The Lower street abuts to the rising grounds, over which the sea seems never to have flowed, as the earth on which it stands consists of a fine deep rich loam over a strong brick earth; beyond this, towards Upper Deal, the stratum of loam is thinner, and lies upon chalk.

Admiralty,

The TOWN and PARISH of DEAL.

Admiralty constantly resident. Here is an office of the Customs, under a Collector, Comptroller, Surveyor, and other inferior officers; an hospital established for the use of the navy and army; and here are in waiting constantly a number of skilful Pilots, usually called Deal Pilots, belonging to that corporation of them mentioned above, under Dover (k), who are appointed for the safe direction and guidance of ships into port, and up the rivers Thames and Medway.

There is a Market held in Deal on a Tuesday and Saturday, weekly, by the above-mentioned charter; but vegetables are very scarce here, being mostly brought from Sandwich; and a fair likewise twice in each year, now by the alteration of the style on the 5th and 6th of April, and on the 11th and 12th of October, for cattle, goods, and merchandizes, with a court of Piepowder during these markets and fairs.

The air of Deal is exceeding healthy, on which account numbers resort to it in summer, as well for pleasure as for the benefit of bathing, for which purpose there have been of late made proper accommodations; and an act having passed, anno 31 Geo. III, for paving, lighting, and otherwise improving this town, it will probably soon equal at least those towns in this neighbourhood, which have had the benefit of the like acts.

In the year 1494, Perkin Warbeck and his followers landed here, to lay claim to the Crown against K. Henry VII; but they were beaten back by the trained bands of Sandwich (l).

K. Henry VIII, in the year 1539, built for the defence of this coast, three several castles, not far from each other, viz. at Walmer, Deal, and Sandown; each having four round lunettes of very thick stone-arched work, with many large port-holes. In the middle is a great round tower, with a cistern on the top of it, and underneath an arched cavern, bomb-proof; the whole is encompassed by a fosse, over which is a drawbridge (m).

These, together with others built in this county and in Suffex, with the Captains of them, were put under the government of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, by the act of 32 Henry VIII, cap. 48.

There are handsome apartments fitted up for the residence of a family in Deal Castle, which stands almost close to the south end of the town (n).

(k) See an account of this corporation of Pilots, above, p. 93. These Pilots, like those of Dover, are divided into two classes, called the Upper and Lower Book; the former consisting of 24, and the latter of 25 Pilots.

(l) Boys's Coll. for Sandwich, p. 680.

(m) Before these three castles were built, there were between Deal and Walmer Castle, two eminences of earth, called the Great and Little Bulwark; and another, between the north end of Deal and Sandown Castle, (all which are now remaining;) and there was probably one about the middle of the town, and others on the spots where the castles were erected. They had embrasures for guns, and together formed a defensive line of batteries along that part of the coast, where there was deep water, and where ships of war could approach the shore to cover the disembarking of an enemy's army. Soon after the building of the above castles, the Lady Anne Cleve landed here, on her intended marriage with K. Henry VIII.

(n) To the new building of these castles, Leland alludes in his often-quoted verses, in his Cynsa Cantio:

In the 2d year of K. Charles I, anno 1626, sir Thomas Love, knt. had a grant under the privy seal of the office of Custos or Keeper of Sandowne Castle, for life (p); and next year

John Pennington had a like grant of it for his life (q).

Brute Buck, in the 11th year of that reign, had a like grant of it (r).

Colonel John Hutchinson, Member for Nottingham in the long Parliament, and continuing in it till the restoration of K. Charles II, and Governor of Nottingham Castle, died in Sandowne Castle, after 11 months imprisonment, without any accusation brought forward against him, on Sept. 11, 1663 (s).

The town of Deal became so populous in Q. Anne's reign, that the inhabitants petitioned to have a chapel of ease for divine service, for which an act of Parliament was obtained in the 9th year of that reign; and being built, it was dedicated to St. George the Martyr, and consecrated, together with the cemetery adjoining, by Archbishop Wake, in June 1716, who gave 100l. towards it, and several contributions were added by the inhabitants and neighbouring gentry towards it.

By the act, the chapel-wardens were enabled to raise 100l. per annum, by a duty, on Waterborne coals, brought into this town, for the maintenance of a Chaplain, to be nominated by the Archbishop, who was patron of the mother church (t).

The duty on all coals, brought into the town and port of Deal, was 2s. per chaldron, which duty ceased in 1727; the annual average of coals brought in is about 3000 chaldrons. By this act the Minister is to reside at least 10 months in the year.

The land for the chapel and chapel-yard, containing two acres, was purchased by the Mayer, &c. in 1707, of Mr. Peter Bridger, of London, gent. and is situated close by the Lower street of Deal.

(u) He resigned this chapelry for the vicarage of Reculver.

(v) He was Rector of Ham, and Vicar of Tilmanstone, which latter he resigned in 1755, for the rectory of Woodchurch. He was father of the learned and justly celebrated Mrs. Elizabeth Carter, now of Deal.

(w) He resigned this chapel on being presented to the Rectory of South Okington in Essex.

The TOWN and PARISH of DEAL.

There is in this town a handsome meeting-house, between which and the street, is a piece of ground on each side of the walk up to the house, which is used as a burial-place, having many grave and head-stones erected in it (x).

There was a licence granted, anno 4 James II, to Edward Burdett, for the building of a conduit-head in New Deal (y).

In the 12th and 13th years of K. William III, an act passed for furnishing the town of Deal with water, for which purpose there is a building for raising fresh water, to be supplied from the north stream, erected at a small distance from the north end of the town.

In the year 1786, anno 26 George III, an act passed to establish a court of request here, for the recovery of small debts in this town, and the several adjacent parishes mentioned therein.

About a mile westward from the town of Deal, is the village of the antient village of this parish, and the only one within it, as appears by Leland, in K. Hen. VIII.'s time. In it is situated the church, and close to it the parsonage-house, and on the other side of it a good house, now belonging to William Hougham, of Canterbury, esq. The country round the village is fine, open, and uninclosed, and being high ground, has a beautiful view of the adjacent country, and the Downs.

There was an earthquake in England, in the year 1692, which was much more violent towards the sea than further from it; there were, indeed, no houses thrown down by it, nor persons killed; it reached more particularly Sandwich, Deal, Dover, Sbeerness, and Portsmouth, and the maritime parts of Holland, Flanders, and Nor-

(a) An account of this water-spout was sent up to the Royal Society, in a letter from the Rev. Patrick Gordon, F. R. S. as follows:

Last Saturday in the forenoon, between the hours of 10 and 11, I observed a remarkable water-spout in the Downs. It bore north by east off our ships about two leagues distant by estimation; the wind at east-north east, a top-sail gale, and very cold. The horizon was entirely open and serene, except the northern parts of it, from north-north-west to north-east by east, or thereabouts. The highest part of the mandy; the walls of Deal Castle, which are of an extraordinary thickness, shook so much, that the persons living in it expected that it would have fallen on their heads (z).

A water-spout was observed in the Downs here in March, in the year 1701, which in our northern climate at that time of year, and during weather both cold and windy, was thought very unusual (a).

T H E D O W N S.

THE channel of the sea, adjoining to this shore, is called the Downs. It is noted for being a safe and commodious road for the greatest fleets of ships, and of the largest size. It is about eight miles in length and about six wide, and is not unfrequently so filled with men of war, and with merchant-ships of our own as well as of other nations, which rendezvous here, both on their arrival and going out again, that it appears at times almost entirely covered with them.

Though the Downs are esteemed a safe road for shipping, yet at a high wind from the westward of the south, it is far otherwise, that wind blowing direct on the Goodwin Sands; a particular instance of which, the most fatal that ever happened to the Royal Navy of Britain, occurred in the year 1702, in which, on Nov. 26, a most dreadful and tremendous storm began about 11 o'clock in the evening, and continued with the wind at west-south-west till seven next morning, during which thirteen men of war were lost, of which, the Restoration and Stirling Castle, third rates; the Mary, a fourth rate, and the Mortar-Bomb were lost on the Goodwin Sands, with the greatest part of their crews; 70 men only being saved from the Stirling Castle, and one from the cloud appeared to make an angle of 45 degrees of elevation. About one half of the cloud (viz. the upper,) was very white, and the other extremely black. The spout itself, (which hung from the lower part of the whitish cloud,) hovered up and down for about 20 minutes of the time; that part of the sea exactly under the spout did sparkle up water to a considerable height; the sparkling run along to the leeward, (the cone of the spout moving that way, and making, as it seemed, a discharge, though not visible to us in its fall,) and continued running along for six ship's lengths. Afterwards the body of the spout quickly contracted itself, and then disappeared. About two hours afterwards, the heavens were entirely overcast, and during that afternoon there fell abundance of hail, and both wind and cold increased. I have seen several water-spouts in the Mediterranean sea some years ago, and those usually during the time of a stark calm and hot summer weather; but to see one in our northern clime at this time of the year, and during weather both cold and windy, is, I presume, a little unusual, &c.—Dated from the Downs, March 24, 1701. Philosoph. Transf. No. 268.

Mary,

The TOWN and PARISH of DEAL.

Mary, in which latter Rear-Admiral Basil Beaumont himself perished.

In 1699, Sept. 9, the Carlisle, a fourth rate, one of sir George Rooke's Squadron, blew up in the Downs, and 130 men perished.

Prince Charles, afterwards K. Charles II, came into the Downs, in August 1648, with a considerable fleet, and whilst he lay there, he attacked, on the 15th of that month, the town of Deal, and the forces under Colonel Rich, entrenched there for its defence; but his force was soon put into disorder and entirely routed, with considerable loss.

On the opposite side of this channel, in a parallel line with Deal, are concerning the origin of which, there are various opinions among the learned, some affirming them to have been an island, called Lomea, once the estate of Earl Goodwin, whence they took their name, and to have been destroyed by the sea in 1097; whilst others, with a greater probability of truth, suppose it to have been occasioned by that inundation of the sea, about the time of K. William Rufus or Henry I, which was so great and violent, as to drown a great part of Flanders and the Low Countries, before which, this shelf or sand was only a kind of shallow, lying between the English and Flemish coasts, and was so far covered with water, as never to lie dry, but had so high a sea running over it, as never to endanger the sailing over it, the same as in the channel elsewhere; but so much of the water between the two shores having flowed beyond its ordinary bounds, and gained so much more room over those parts, the sea usually losing in one place what it gains in another, this shelf or sand, for want of that sufficiency of water which before entirely covered it, became so near the surface of it, as when it was low, to appear part of it dry, and to admit of people's landing on it. As to the name of this sand, no one seems to know whence it arose, though some, who contend for its existence in Earl Goodwin's time, suppose it origi-

(b) This is the general opinion, even of seamen, relating to these sands; but Mr. Boys, of Sandwich, is firmly of a contrary opinion, viz. that they are of the same nature, hardness, and appearance, with the sandy shore in Sandwich Bay; and that by motion you can work your feet into it up to the ankles only, and with iron borers it can be penetrated about $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet only. The idea of its swallowing up vessels, he says, is false. Every thing that strikes upon it breaks to pieces at once, or the bottoms of the vessels, by agitation, sink into the sand, and the upper parts are presently broken away by the waves, generally to a level with the surface of the sand.

(c) See Somner's Roman Ports, p. 20, et seq. Lewis's Thanet, p. 168. Notwithstanding this, several ships, which nated from some part of his ships having been wrecked on them, or at least first discovered by some of them. However that be, it serves to distinguish it from the many other sands hereabouts. As to the Goodwin Sand, it is much the largest of them all, and is divided into two parts, though the channel or swatch between them is not navigable, except by small boats. The length of both of them, from the south sand-head over against Walmer Castle, to the north sand-head over against the North Foreland, is near 10 miles, and the breadth nearly two. This sand consists of a more soft, fluid, porous, spongy, and yet withall tenacious matter, than the neighbouring sands, and consequently is of a more voracious and ingurgitating property; so that should a ship of the largest size strike on it, in a few days it would be so wholly swallowed up by these quicksands, that no part of it would be left to be seen (b); and this is what makes the striking on it so much more dreadfully dangerous than on any of the neighbouring ones, which are of a much more hard and solid nature (c).

Misfortunes of this kind happen so frequently, that the wrecks become a valuable prey to the Deal boatmen, who keep a constant lookout for them; but though they look upon the wreck as their constant property, yet it must be owned, to their praise, that they hazard the most imminent danger of their own to preserve the lives of the unfortunate shipwrecked crews, who otherwise must inevitably perish. Notwithstanding this terrifying prospect of destruction, foreign vessels, especially the Dutch, through parsimony, to save the dues payable to the Trinity House, from all ships passing through the Downs, frequently make their passage along the channel, on the other side or back of the Goodwins, and frequently are lost on them in the attempt.

To prevent as far as possible such continued catastrophes on these sands, the Corporation of the Trinity House, a few years ago, formed a design to erect a light-house on them, and sent down several experienced engineers to try the have had the misfortune to run on these sands, have been got off, though this has been but seldom. A singular instance of this was in 1690, when the Vanguard, a man of war of 90 guns, having been driven ashore on them, was, by the assiduity and dexterity of the Deal men, safely got off without any material damage.

When the water is off, these sands become exceeding hard and firm, inasmuch that many land, and stay hours on them for pleasure in summer; but when the tide begins to cover them, they become soft, and soon float to and fro with the waves, and when they retire settle the same as before. The redness they occasion on the water is plainly discovered from the town of Deal and its neighbouring shore.

The TOWN and PARISH of DEAL.

Possibility of it, but after penetrating with their Boring-augurs to a very great depth, the suction was so great as to prevent any discovery of what it underneath consisted of; but from the easy penetration they were convinced that the same glutinous and spongy materials continued as far as they could reach with their instruments, which was to a very great depth; and as they judged it impracticable, the design was wholly given over.

Notwithstanding the dangers that arise from these Goodwin Sands, it is they which constitute the Downs to be a road for ships. At low water those sands may be considered as a pier or break-water in all the easterly winds; and even at high-water it is too shallow over them to admit the great seas to pass without being much broken and dispersed, especially in stormy weather. From the situation, therefore, of the Downs, with those sands on one side, and the coast of Kent on the other, it is only the southerly winds that can annoy them, which are much moderated by the proximity of the coast of France, and still more so by the first part of the flood-tide running southward and meeting the seas; it is therefore not till the tide turns to the north, (which is at or about quarter flood,) that the combined force of wind and tide make the great effort to break the ships from their moorings.

A very extraordinary piece of old ordnance was dragged out of the sea in 1775, near the Goodwin Sands, by some fishermen, who were sweeping for anchors in the Gull-stream, being a part of the road leading into the Downs. From some of the ornaments, it may fairly be judged to have been cast probably about the year 1370, which is not long after the very first introduction of these formidable instruments of war into Europe. It manifestly belonged to the Crown of Portugal, and was most probably lost and sunk about the time that John, Duke of Lancaster, asserted a claim to the Castilian dominions, yet it might possibly have been preserved till the time of the Spanish Armada, and have been sunk when that fleet was destroyed. It is 7 feet 10 inches long, and though of so large a size, was manifestly used as a swivel-gun, and was so contrived, as to be loaded not at the mouth, but (like a screw-barrel pistol,) at the breach, by putting the powder and ball into the chamber, and then closing it up. From the situation, however, of its trunnions and fulcrum, it must have been extremely difficult to traverse, and the charging it must have been a very tedious operation, full as troublesome as the piece itself is unweildy (d).

CHARITIES,

To the Town and Borough of Deal.

Richard Russell, by will in 1568, (which was confirmed by deed in 1675,) gave the third part of a house and land at Foulmet in Sboldon, to the use of the poor of the parish of Deal, formerly Elias Saffery's, now vested in Thomas Bayley, of Deal, mariner, and is of the annual produce of 10 shillings.

Nicholas Jones, of Deal, gent. by will, proved in 1623, gave one small tenement, which he purchased of Thomas and Samuel Nicholas, alias Manckham, to the use of the poor of this parish for ever.

Samuel Fasham, esq; by will, in 1729, gave 50l. in money, to be placed out at interest, to be laid out in bread on New Year's Day for ever, for the benefit of the poor of this parish; which money is vested in the Mayor and Jurats of the Corporation of Deal.—N. B. The annual produce is not now paid, nor can it be discovered when it ceased to be paid.

Mrs. Johanna Fasham, by will, in 1730, gave the sum of 20l. to be placed out at interest, to be laid out in bread, to be distributed among the poor of this parish, upon Candlemas Day for ever; which money was vested in trustees (y).—N. B. This produce has not been paid or laid out in bread, since the death of Betbell Dawes, esq; in whom the original trust was vested.

Mr. John Hockley, surgeon, by will, in 1735, gave to certain trustees the annual sum of 2l. 10s. of which sum, 30s. to be distributed on Good Friday for ever, either in bread or money, among 20 poor widows, who do not receive alms of this parish, and 20s. to be paid to the Chaplain or Curate of Deal Chapel, for preaching a sermon, and administering the sacrament

(w) Jacob's Plantæ Fav. p. 47. (x) Ibid. p. 15.

(y) This trust is supposed to have devolved on Thomas Dawes, of Hearnbill, esq; being the sole executor of Betbell Dawes, esq; deceased.

(z) This benefaction was indeed given by Mrs. Powel; but her will was so written and spelt, and by an omission of several words, so dark and unintelligible, that it was a perplexed business to come at its meaning. But her executor, Mr. Hockley, very honestly fulfilled the intent of it in his life-time, and confirmed it at his death by his will, and has run away with the whole praise of it.

(a) He died a great many years since, at Surat, in the East Indies.

(b) In this church there is a monumental brass-plate against the wall for Thomas Boys, of Fredville in Nonington, esq; who attended K. Henry VIII. at the siege of Bologne, and died in 1560.

on that day, and in default thereof, the whole to be distributed among such 20 poor widows; the said sum to be paid out of a piece of marsh-land, now vested in Mr. Richard Baker, called Flower Marsh, in this parish (z).

The Rev. John James, Rector of Deal, by deed, March 1775, gave the sum of 92l. 4s. 6d. stock in Old South-Sea Annuities, the interest whereof, after deducting the necessary charges, to be distributed annually on Nov. 17, at the rate of 2s. 6d. each, among such poor inhabitants of this parish, not receiving alms, as the Rector for the time being shall think proper; which stock is vested in the Rector of Deal for the time being, and is of the annual produce of 2l. 12s. 8d.

Betbel Dawes, esq; by will, in 1775, gave the sum of 80l. stock in the 3 per cent. Old South-Sea Annuities, the clear yearly dividends of which to be applied to buy bread, to be given by the Mayor and Jurats of Deal, to the poor of the town of Deal every Easter Monday yearly, in such proportions as they should think proper; which stock is now of the annual produce of 2l. 8s.

Stephen Colt, of Surat, in the East Indies (a), by will, gave the sum of 50l. towards purchasing a house for the use of the Corporation and of the poor of this parish. Part of the house purchased by his benefaction, is now made use of as the Court-ball, and the Mayor for the time being always paid a rent for it, which used to be applied to the use of the poor; but this has been dropped for many years.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is exempt from the Archdeacon, is dedicated to St. Leonard. It is a handsome large building, having a tower steeple at the west end, with a small wooden cupola or turret at the top (b).

In the middle space of this church is a tomb, called the Coppin tomb, erected by that family, who lie buried underneath it. They were originally of Canterbury, of which city William Coppin was Alderman, and died there in 1633, leaving two sons, William and Joshua, to the latter of whom he devised his manor of Deal Prebend. He afterwards resided at Deal, where his descendant of the same name died in 1721, and was buried under this tomb, devising his mansion here among his nieces, Anne Tymewell, Mary Gregory, Elizabeth Belke, and Sarah Brakenbury.

Thomas Baker, alias Barbor, of Deal, by will, proved in 1508, desired to be buried in the parish church of Deal, by the image of St. John, and devised to the reparation of the steeple of Deal 20 marks in lede works thereupon; to the church-yard walls 33s. and 4d.; to Agnes his daughter 20l. and if she died before marriage, the money to be bestowed upon the said steeple; and as to the disposition of all his lands,

The TOWN and PARISH of DEAL.

The advowson of this church was antiently appurtenant to the prebend in this parish, which was part of the possessions of the Priory of St. Martin in Dover (c), on the dissolution of which, in the 27th year of that reign, it came into the hands of the Crown, and was, as I suppose, granted with the scite and other possessions of the Priory, afterwards to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his successors, in whom this advowson has ever since continued, his Grace the Archbishop being the present patron of it.

This church is a rectory, and is valued in the King's books at 19l. 10s. and the yearly tenths at 11. 19s. (d) In 1578, here were 348 communicants, and it was valued at 120l. In 1640, here were 500 communicants, and it was valued at only 100l.

The Rector is entitled to about a third part only of the great tythes of this parish. The other two thirds belonging to the two portions of tythes, belong to the Archbp and Earl Cowper, as above-mentioned (e).

That part of the great tythes, belonging to the Archbishop, was for many years demised on a beneficial lease, from time to time, to the Rector of this parish; but in the time of Henry Gerard, Rector, in Q. Anne's reign, the lease was suffered to run out, and was never renewed.

It was once part of the hundred of Cornilo, but was very early made a branch of the Cinque Ports, and was so esteemed in the year 1229, anno 14 Henry III, as a member to the port of Sandwich, and was expressed to have been so in the general charter of the Cinque Ports time out of mind; nevertheless, in K. Henry VI.'s time, some disputes arising concerning the assessing it to the subsidy of the county at large, that King, to determine these disputes, and as a mark of his favour, again annexed and confirmed it to the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, by his letters patent, in his 16th year; in the liberties of which, and as a member of the port of Sandwich, it has ever since continued.

Henry VI, under John, Duke of Bedford, then regent—not far from whence he defeated the Earl of Britaine, and slew 600 men, and took 200 prisoners. In the 14th year of that reign, the Duke of Burgundy having besieged Croty, the Lord Talbot raised the siege, and sir Thomas Keriel having assaulted the rear of the Duke's army with great courage, forced him to retreat in great disorder, insomuch that he left his cannon and carriages behind him. In the 27th year of the same reign, he was sent over into France with 1500 men, as a fresh supply, in hopes of retrieving the sinking fortune of the English in that country, where he recovered many places of strength, but being overpowered with numbers in an encounter at Formigney, by the Earl of Clermont ment family of Auberville, who held it as one knight's fee of Hamo de Crevequer, as of the manor of Folkestone (y). Sir William de Auberville, of Westenbanger, held this manor in K. Rich. I.'s reign, being the founder of the adjoining abbey of West Langdon, and a great benefactor to the Priory of Christ Church, in Canterbury (z). His grandson of the same name, (son of Hugh), left an only daughter and heir Joane, who marrying Nicholas de Criol, brought him this estate as part of her inheritance, and his descendant sir John de Cryel, knt. in the 20th year of K. Edw. III, paid aid for it as one knight's fee, which Nicholas de Criol before held in Walmer of the honour of Folkestone. His son sir Nicholas de Cryell, or Keriel, died seized of it in the 2d year of K. Richard II (a), and from him this manor devolved at length by succession to sir Thomas Keriel, knt. for so their name was at that time in general spelt, who was slain at the second battle of St. Alban's, in the 38th year of K. Henry VI, in asserting the cause of the House of York (b). On his death, without male issue, his two daughters became his coheirs (c), viz. Elizabeth, married to John Bourcier, esq; and Alice, to John Fogge, of Repton, esq; afterwards knighted, whose second wife she was, and on the division of their inheritance, this manor was allotted to the latter, and he by will devised it to his son sir Thomas Fogge, knt. Sergeant-Porter of Calais, both under K. Henry VII. and VIII, who dying without issue male, Anne, one of his daughters and coheirs, married first to William Scott, esq; younger brother of sir Reinold Scott, of Scotts Hall, knt. and secondly to Henry Isham, esq; entitled her second husband to the possession of it (d); but his son Edmund Isham leav-and the Constable of France, after he had given unexampled testimonies of his personal courage in endeavouring to preserve the fortune of the day he was defeated, the enemy purchasing their victory at so dear a rate as almost to undo them; at last he engaged in the contest between the houses of York and Lancaster, in which he warmly defended the cause of the former, in the course of which he was slain at the second battle of St. Alban's, as above-mentioned; but he was declared in Parliament, anno 1 Edward IV, to have been against law beheaded and murdered. See Philipott, p. 351. Cotton's Records, p. 670.

The Criols, or Keriels, bore for their arms—Argent, two chevrons and a canton, gules—in imitation of their superior lords, the Clares, Earls of Gloucester, who bore—Or, three chevrons gules. See an account of these sort of bearings of coats of arms, vol. ii. of this history, p. 375.

The other daughter of sir Thomas Fogge, viz. Alice, married Edward Scott, of the Moat in the co. of Suffex; and secondly, sir Edward Oxenbridge, of the co. of Hants. Mr. Petit Fardary of Kent, in his book of the manors of this county, says, this manor came to the heirs of Fogge, viz. R. Charles I. in his 18th year, Baron Minshull, of Minshull in that county (e), and they together joined in the sale of it in the 2d year of that reign to Mr. James Hugessen, of Dover, who died possessed of it in 1637, and in his descendants it continued down to William Western Hugessen, of Provenders, esq; who died seized of it in 1764, without male issue, leaving three daughters his coheirs (f); the youngest of whom, Sorab, died unmarried, and under age, in 1777; upon which the two remaining daughters and coheirs became entitled to it, of whom Dorothy married Jos. Banks, of the co. of Lincoln, esq; since created a baronet and K. B. (g); and Mary married Edw. Knatchbull, esq; who since his father's death has succeeded to the title of baronet (b), and they, about the year 1789, joined in the sale of it to George Leith, of Deal, esq; the present owner of it (i).

A Court Baron is held for this manor.

PRESENT STATE OF WALMER.

THE village of Walmer is situated on rising ground, about a mile from Deal southward, and about half a mile from the sea-shore, at the north-west extremity, or ending of the chalk cliffs, close to which is Walmer Castle, built with the neighbouring ones of Deal and Sandown, all of the like sort, by K. Henry VIII. in the year 1539, for the defence of the coast.

CAPTAINS OF WALMER CASTLE.

(e) He was descended from that noted soldier Michael de Minshull, who, for his great service performed with K. Richard I. at the siege of Acon in Palestine, had the assignment to him for ever of the crescent and star, for the coat-armour of the family. Philipott, p. 351. Richard Lord Minshull died in 1650, without male issue, and the title became extinct.

(i) This estate is about 230l. per annum. Mr. Leith purchased it for about 8000l.

The mansion of the Criols is situated not far from the west side of the church-yard. The ruins shew it to have been a large venerable mansion, with towers all built of bolder flints and asbler stone, and as supposed by Nicholas de Criol, in K. Edward I. or II.'s reign. In the church-yard, several stone coffins were discovered a few years ago, supposed to have belonged to some of the family of Criol.

Towards the village of Walmer is a flat, many feet lower than the high-water mark, which the beach thrown up along the shore has fenced from the sea, and which probably when Cæsar landed on this coast, might be all covered with water. Round Walmer church, which stands at the south end of the village, on a rise, is a deep single fosse (n).

This parish is noted for the salubrity of its air, and the beautiful prospects over the Downs and the neighbouring channel, as well as the adjoining country, which is for the most part uninclosed corn-fields. The soil in the low part of it, between Deal Castle and Walmer-street, is underneath a deep rich loam; to the southward, on the hill, it is open down land. The vallies in it are fertile. There is not any woodland.

The high road from Deal to Dover passes through the village, which is called Walmer-street, and is very neat and prettily built, having several genteel handsome houses in it, which are much resorted to in the summer season, for the benefit of sea-bathing, the healthiness of the air, and the conveniency of its situation in the neighbourhood of Deal and Dover.

There are other visible marks of intrenchments at Hawkebill Close, near the Castle to the southward, and on the place called Dane Pitts, on the old down, not far off from it. There are at present about 70 houses in this parish, and 800 acres of land. There is no fair.

CHARITIES.

A PERSON unknown gave to the use of the poor of this parish, part of a house, vested in the churchwardens and overseers, the produce to be laid out in the purchase of coals, for such poor as do not receive alms of the parish, now of the annual value of 11. 3s.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

WALMER is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, consists of one isle and a chancel; there is no steeple, only one side of the antient tower remains, but there are two small bells in it (o).

The church of Walmer was antiently part of the possessions of the family of Auberville, or de Albrincis, as they were written in Latin deeds, of Westenbanger in this county; one of whom, sir William de Auberville, senior, in K. Rich. I.'s reign, having founded West Langdon abbey in this neighbourhood, as has been more fully

(o) The church is about 64 feet long, and 22 wide, on the outside. There are doors on the north and south sides, with circular arches, with zig-zag and nail-headed mouldings; and the western face of the arch, between the body and the chancel is likewise circular, and full of similar ornaments.

On a grave-stone, at the entrance of the chancel, is an inscription to the memory of Anne, wife of Christopher Boys, Captain of Walmer Castle, and daughter of Thomas Fog, esq; by whom she had 10 children. She died, aged 49 years, 1680. Arms in two separate shields—Boys and Fog.

Against the north wall of the chancel is a monument for William Lisle, one of the equerries of the body of K. James and K. Charles. Also of Edmund Lisle his brother, sewer of the chamber of Q. Elizabeth, K. James, and K. Charles, having been 21 years Captain of Walmer Castle, lineally descended from the Lords de Lisle and Rougemont, and from sir John Lisle, one of the first founders of the honourable order of the garter, and Robert his son, who gave unto K. Edw. III, 86 knights fees, and from Warin Fitz-gerold, chamberlain to K. John, and Isabel de Fortibus, Countess of Devon. William died in Sept. 1637. Edmund on October 1, following, leaving Nicholas Lisle their brother, possessor of mentioned above (p), gave this church to it in pure and perpetual alms, as part of the endowment of it, which gift was afterwards confirmed by Simon de Albrincis his descendant, and in the 30th year of K. Edw. I, by Nicholas de Criol (q). After which, this church continued with the Abbey of Langdon, to which it was appropriated, till the dissolution of it in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when it was, among the rest of the possessions of the abbey, granted in the 29th year of that reign to the Archbp of Canterbury, who, though he not long after exchanged the scite of the abbey and other possessions of it with the Crown, yet he retained the advowson and parsonage of this church, among others, by a particular exception in the deed; since which it has continued part of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, his Grace the Archbishop being both patron and proprietor of the appropriation of this church (r).

In the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, the church of Walmer was valued among the spiritualities of Langdon Abbey at 10l. (s)

The church of Walmer has been long since esteemed as a perpetual curacy, and continues so at this time.

It is not valued in the King's books.

In 1578, here were communicants 81. There are at present about 350 inhabitants in this parish. In 1640, the stipend to the Curate was 8l. Archbp Juxon, in conformity to the King's letters mandatory, augmented the stipend 20l. per ann. by indenture, anno 12 and 13 Charles II, which was again confirmed by others in the 28th year of that reign (t); since which it has been augmented by the Governors of Q. Anne's Bounty. It is now of the yearly certified value of 32l.

In the register of Walmer parish, is entered:—1637. Mr. Wm Lisle, gent. doctus senex an 73 vixit Celebs studiis incumbens.—1637. Mr. Edmd Lisle, Captain of the Castle.

(r) The parsonage of this church has been from time to time let on a beneficial lease by the several Archbishops. In 1643, sir Matthew Mennes, knt. was lessee of it, at the yearly reserved rent of 9l. Mrs. Chambers, of Middle Deal, is the present lessee of this parsonage.

OR as it is now usually called, Ringjole, lies the next parish to Walmer, southward; being written in antient records, Kidlingweald (b). It has been, as well as the ville or hamlet of Kingsdown, within the bounds of it, long since esteemed part of the Cinque Ports, and a member of the port of Dover; but in the reign of K. Henry VI, some disputes arising on account of their being assessed to the subsidy with the county at large, the King, to take away all dispute, again united and confirmed them to the liberty and jurisdiction of the Ports, as members of that of Dover, and as such they both continue at this time.

THE MANOR OF RINGWOLD,

in the time of the Conqueror, was in the possession of Fulbert de Dover, as part of his barony of Chilbam, being held of the manor of Kingston, which was parcel of it, by knights service, and he died seised of it in the reign of K. Henry

I, as did his descendant Robert de Dover, before the 6th year of K. John, leaving Roesa his daughter and heir, who married first Richard de Cbilbam, afterwards called Richard de Dover, who died before the 16th year of K. Henry III, and she shortly afterwards married Richard le Fitzroy, natural son of K. John, who, though very young, had that year livery of her lands, and lastly she again married William de Wilton. She left issue a son, Richard de Dover, and two daughters, of whom Lora married William Marmion, of the co. of Warwick, and Isabel married David de Strabolgie, Earl of Athol, and secondly Alexander Baliol (c).

By inquisition, taken anno 56 Henry III, she was found to die seised of the manors of Cbilbam, Kingston, Rudelingeweald, and others, all belonging to the barony of Cbilbam, to which barony, among other churches, appertained that of Rudelingeweald, Richard de Dover being her son and next heir, then 21 years of age. He died afterwards without issue, and John de Asceles; or Athol in Scotland, son of Isabel his sister, was found to be his heir, though her second husband, Alexander Baliol, in her right, took possession of her estates, and this manor, among them, which by the courtesy of England he held during his life (d). He died anno 34 Edw. I, in which year John, Earl of Athol, above mentioned, having been found guilty of treason, this manor, among the rest of his possessions, was confiscated to the Crown, where it staid till K. Edward II, in his 5th year, granted it to Bartholomew de Badlesmere (e); who in the 9th year of it obtained the grant for a market weekly, on a Tuesday, at his manor of Kidlingwold, and a fair there, on the eve, day, and morrow after the festival of St. Nicholas, and free-warren likewise within all his demesne lands within it (f); but in the 15th year of that reign, having joined the discontented barons, and by his behaviour to the Queen at Leeds Castle, otherwise angered the King, his lands were all seised, and he himself executed.

Upon which the King granted this manor for life, to David de Strabolgie, son of John, Earl of Athol, above-mentioned, for his eminent services; on whose death, anno 1 Edward III, it reverted again to the Crown, whence it was granted next year to Giles de Badlesmere, son of Bartholomew above-mentioned, who had then all his father's manors and lands restored to him, the process and judgment having, through the King's favour, been reversed. He died without issue, in the 12th year of that reign, seised of this manor, leaving his four sisters his coheirs (g), and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of William Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, surviving, who became entitled to it for her life; she afterwards married Hugh de Despencer, who in her right became possessed of it (h); she survived him likewise, and died anno 33 Edward III, as appears by the inquisition taken after her death, seised of this manor of Rydelyngwilde, held of the King in capite, by the service of finding a man armed to the guard of the sea-coast, whenever the same should be necessary, for all service.

Upon her death, this manor, on the further partition of the inheritance of the sisters of Giles de Badlesmere, was allotted to Maud the eldest sister, wife of John de Vere, Earl of Oxford, who in her right became possessed of it, and died the next year, holding this manor in capite as of the Castle of Dover, as did Thomas, Earl of Oxford, his eldest son, in the 43d year of that reign (i). He left one son Robert, who succeeded him as Earl of Oxford, and to all his possessions, and afterwards became so great a favourite with K. Richard II, that no accumulation of wealth and honours was thought sufficient to shew the King's great affection for him, insomuch, that besides the grants of lands and great offices of trust, he was, in the 9th year of that reign, in parliament created Marquis, and next year Duke of Ireland; but this sudden increase of wealth and honours so offended the great and antient nobility, that they caused him in parliament to be banished the realm, and all his possessions, excepting his intailed lands, to be confiscated, which latter only were to remain to his right heirs; leaving no issue, Alberic, or Aubrey de Vere, his uncle, (younger brother of Earl Thomas,) became his heir, and succeeded anno 16 Rich. Duke his nephew, and likewise to the title of Earl of Oxford, and in the 21st year of that reign, the judgment given in the 9th of it against his nephew the Duke of Ireland in parliament, was in that year then held revoked and annulled (k). During the above period, and most probably on the confiscation of the Duke of Ireland's estates, this manor came by grant to sir Robert Belknap, knt. Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, who was attainted and banished into Ireland, in the 11th year of the above reign (l).

In the 2d year of K. Henry V, this manor escheated to the Crown, by the death of Juliana his wife, who had been left in possession of it by authority of parliament, notwithstanding her husband's attainder and banishment (m); in which year, on the petition of sir Hamon Belknap, knt. their son, the parliament enabled him in blood and land to his father, notwithstanding the judgment made against him as above (n). He left issue three sons, John, William, and Henry, each of whom successively inherited this manor (o). Sir Henry Belknap, knt. the youngest, resided at Beccles, in Suffolk, where he died in the 3d year of K. Henry VII, leaving one son Edward, and four daughters; the former of whom became a gallant soldier, and a man of much public action, and was of the Privy Council both to K. Henry VII. and VIII. He resided at Weston in the co. of Warwick, and in the beginning of the latter reign was knighted; he died in the 12th year of that reign, anno 1520, without issue, on which his four sisters became his coheirs (p), and on the partition of their inheritance, Anne, the youngest, entitled her husband, sir Robert Wotton, knt. to the possession of this manor (q), whose descendant, sir Edward Wotton, of Boughton Malberb, knt. created in the 1st year of K. James I, Lord Wotton, Baron of Marley, in this county, conveyed the entire fee of it not long after that to sir Thomas Edolph, of St. Radigund's, knt. (r) who, in the 13th year of that reign, had a confirmation of the grant of free-warren within his demesne lands of this manor. He died in 1645, leaving issue Simon Edolph, esq; who died in 1691, (l) Sir Robert Belknap was permitted by parliament, in the 20th year of K. Richard II, to return from banishment, yet his attainder still remained as before. He died anno 2 Henry IV.

She was one of the three daughters and coheirs of William Kingsford, of Bosenden, esq; (son of John Kingsford, of Bosenden, esq; living in 1690,) by his wife Elizabeth, sole daughter and heir of Mr. John Atwood, being married in 1690, he had William, who died without issue, and three daughters, as above-mentioned. The other two daughters and coheirs were, Elizabeth, married to John Venner, by whom he had two sons, John Venner, of Canterbury, gent. father of John Venner, now of London, barrister-at-law, (see vol. iii. of this history, p. 596,) and Kingsford Venner, esq; of Bosenden, and afterwards of Canurbury, who died at Chelsea, leaving issue several children. The third daughter and coheir was Catherine, who married Anthony Hammond, of St. Alban's, esq; ancestor of William Hammond, now of that place, esq.

PRESENT STATE OF RINGWOLD.

THIS parish is situated on high ground, in a country of uninclosed common fields of corn; the soil is mostly chalky, but much of it is fertile land. The high road from Deal to Dover goes through the village, in which the church and parsonage-house is situated. The parish is both healthy and pleasant, with beautiful prospects over the Downs and neighbouring country. About half a mile eastward from the village of Ringwold, within the bounds of this parish, is the ville and hamlet of Kingsdown, which adjoins to the sea-shore, and appears to have been, in early times, a place of some account, by its being mentioned by name with Ringwold, in the charters of the Cinque Ports (x). It is now a small fishing village, where on the side next to Walmer, the poor fishermen by a capstan wind up on shore their boats, commonly called Kingsdown boats. In the valley between the two downs or hill sides near this, there are the remains of an antient camp (x). There is no fair.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

RINGWOLD is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a handsome building, having a tower steeple at the west end, in which hang five bells (y).

(y) In the chancel is a mural monument for Richard Dauling, Cl. Patron and Rector of this church, who had two wives, Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. John Toke, of the family of Godington, and Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Richard Tylden, of Milsted; by the first he left four, and by the last five sons. He died in 1679, æt. 63. Arms—On a fess, 3 acorns. Another for Richard Monins Eaton, Cl. The HUNDRED of EASTRY

LIES the next westward to that of Bewfborough last described. It is written in the record of Domesday, by the different names of Estrei, Estrea, Estre, and Estrye, and is almost throughout it said to lie within the left or latb of the same name. In the reign of K. Edward II. the King and the Archbishop were lords of this hundred.

In the 20th year of K. Edward III, on the aid then levied for making the Black Prince a knight, it answered for 13 fees and an half, the tenth, and the 80th part of a knight's fee.

This hundred contains within its bounds the parishes of

And the churches of those parishes, and likewise part of the parishes of Nonington, Wootton, and Staple, the churches of which are in other hundreds.

Two Constables have jurisdiction over this hundred, which is divided into the Upper and Lower Half Hundred of it.

The Upper Half Hundred consists of the parishes of Eastry, Worth, Tilmanstone, Upper Eytborne, (that is so much of the parish as lies in this hundred;) as much of Wootton as lies in this hundred, that is, the borough of Gedding, not including Wootton church, and as much of the borough of Barnsole as lies in Staple.

The Lower Half Hundred consists of the parishes of Woodnesborough, Chillenden, Knolton, Ham, Betsinger, Waldersbare, Barson, Denton, and part of Nonington, not including the church.

This arrangement is according to the nomination and jurisdiction of the Constables. That for the Upper Half Hundred being chosen at Eastry Court. That for the Lower Half Hundred at the Court of Quarter Sessions.

At Eastry Court are likewise chosen Borsholders for Eastry-street borough; the borough of Felderland in Worth, which comprehends Statenborough, and some adjoining lands in Eastry; the borough of Worth-street comprehending the remainder of the parish, excepting the borough of Hackling; the borough of Barnsole in Staple; the borough of Crayborne in Tilmanstone, comprehending the lower street there; Barville, &c. and the borough of Gedding in Wootton; the borough of Southcourt, comprehending the remaining part of Tilmanstone, the Borsholder for which is chosen at the manor of Southcourt; all which are in the Upper Half Hundred of Eastry.

Notwithstanding these boroughs are in other hundreds, yet the Constable of the Upper Half Hundred of Eastry uses jurisdiction over them, and persons residing in them have been indiscriminately appointed to serve that office (o).

In the survey of Domesday, under the general title of the possessions of the Bishop of Baieux, is the following entry:

THE MANOR OF HAM,

At the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, was part of the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Baieux, his half-brother, under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in it:

at one suling. The arable land is In demesne there is 1 carucate, with one villein, and 2 borderers, and 2 servants. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 50 shillings, and afterwards 20 shillings, now 60 shillings. Three thanes held it of K. Edward.

Four years after which, the Bishop of Baieux was disgraced, and this, among the rest of his estates, was confiscated to the Crown; and the King having put the Castle of Dover under a new order of government, assigned this manor, among other lands, to Hugh de Port, for his assistance under John de Pienes, in the defence of that castle. These lands together made up the barony of Port, and were held by barony of Dover Castle, by the service of performing ward there for the defence of it.

In which grant this manor was esteemed as one knight's fee, under which notion it was held of his descendant, John de St. John (q), in K. Henry III.'s reign, by John Fitzbernard; soon after which, it appears to have been separated into moities, one of which was held by Henry de Sandwich, heir of Ralph Fitzbernard, in K. Edw. I.'s reign, in manner as above-mentioned (r), as it was by Ralph de Sandwich afterwards; soon after which it passed into the family of Leyborne, for William, son of sir Roger de Leyborne, appears by the Escheat Rolls to have died seised of it in the 2d year of K. Edward II, leaving Juliana, the daughter of his son Thomas, who died in his life-time, usually styled from the greatness of her possessions, the Infanta of Kent, his next heir. She carried this estate successively in marriage to her three husbands, the last of whom was William de Clinton, created afterwards Earl of Huntingdon, and he in her right was seised of it in the 20th year of K. Edward III, when he, together with Richard Fitzbernard, paid aid at the making the Black Prince a knight, for the whole of this manor, as one knight's fee, which Ralph de Sandwich and Richard, son of John Fitzbernard, before held in Ham of John de St. John.

William de Clinton, Earl of Huntingdon, in the 28th year of that reign died possessed of his moiety of this manor (s), as did his widow Juliana, in the 41st year of it, without issue, and there being no one found who could lay claim to her estate, even by a collateral alliance, this is a seat in this parish, situated in the hamlet of Updownne, in the north-west extremity of it, adjoining to Eastry. This seat, for beauty of situation, for healthiness of country, and extent of prospect, stands almost unrivalled, even in these parts, where pleafantness and beauties of situation are entitled to constant admiration. The prospect from it commands a delightful view over the adjacent country, the North Foreland, Ramsgate, the Town of Deal, the Downs, and the adjoining channel.

II, granted it to sir Simon de Burley, knight-banneret, Warden of the Cinque Ports, and knight of the garter, but he being attainted in parliament in the 10th year of that reign, and afterwards beheaded, it became again vested in the Crown, and the King, in his 11th and 22d years, settled it on the Priory of Canons, alias Chiltern Langley, in the co. of Hertford (u), where it remained till the suppression of that house, anno 30 Henry VIII, when it came into the King's hands, and was next year granted, with the site of the priory and other estates and lands belonging to it, to Richard, Bishop Suffragan of Dover, to hold for his life, or until he should be promoted unto some ecclesiastical benefice of 100l. yearly value (v), which happened before the 36th year of that reign, in which this moiety of the manor was granted by the King to sir Thomas Moyle, knt. (w) who alienated it in the 2d year of K. Edward VI, to sir Robert Oxenbridge, knt. (x) who becoming possessed of the other moiety in right of his wife Alice, daughter and coheir of sir Thomas Fogge, knt. enjoyed the whole fee of this manor, which his descendant passed away at the latter end of Q. Elizabeth's reign to Edward Boys, of Betsbanger, esq.

The OTHER MOIETY of this manor, which in the 20th year of K. Edward III. was held by Richard, son of John Fitzbernard, passed from him into the family of Criol, and sir Nicholas de Cryell, or Keriell, died seised of it in the 2d year of K. Richard II, and from him it devolved at length by succession to sir Thomas Keriell, knt. who was slain at the second battle of St. Alban's, in the 38th year of K. Henry VI, in asserting the cause of the House of York; on whose death, without male issue, his two daughters became his coheirs, and on the division of their inheritance, this moiety of the manor was allotted to Alice, married to John Fogge, of Repton, esq; afterwards knighted, and he in her right became possessed of it, and by his will devised it to his son sir Thomas Fogge, knt. After which, by a decree of the Court of Chancery and agreement between the sisters, a writ of partition was executed, anno 9 George II., by which this manor was wholly allotted, among others, to Anne, the eldest sister, wife of John, Viscount St. John (a), which partition was confirmed by an act of parliament passed next year (b).

UPDOWNNE PLACE

The estate formerly belonged to Mr. Richard Thompson, of Waldersbare, who alienated it to Captain Thomas Fagg, of Dover, who first fitted it up as a gentleman's residence. He died in 1748, and was buried in this church. After whose death it was sold, according to the direction of his will, to sir George Oxenden, of Dean, bart. and he, in 1752, conveyed it to his son Henry Oxenden, esq; who, as his father had before, resided here occasionally, and made some improvements to it; and afterwards passed it away, in 1761, to Matthew Collett, esq; who laid out much money in the further beautifying of it, making several plantations round it, and purchasing an adjoining farm, which he added to the grounds of it (e). He died possessed of it in 1777, and was buried in the nave of this church, after which his widow became entitled to it, and resided here, during which time she purchased of sir Edward Dering, bart. another small farm, part of the Furnese estate, adjoining to the former in this hamlet (f); but she alienated the whole of her estate here in 1778 (g) to John Minet Felton, esq; of Dover, banker and merchant, who in 1786 enlarged his property here by the purchase of an estate, called Updownne farm, in this hamlet (b); since which he has added considerably to the size and improvements of this seat, and has imparked the lands

(e) This farm consisted of 60 acres; the house of which was in Eastry parish, opposite to Updownne Place. It formerly belonged to one Baker, from whom it came to Forrest, of Sandwich, who sold it to Mr. Collett.

It was for several generations the property and habitation of the family of Denne, from whom it was purchased by Mr. Henry Wise, of Sandwich, whose daughter Judith carried it in marriage to *Capt. PRESENT STATE OF HAM.

THE village of Ham, having the church adjoining to it, contains only four houses. It is pleasantly situated on high ground, the hill sloping towards the north-east. There are about 500 acres of land in this parish; the soil of it is in general fertile, consisting partly of chalk and partly of a rich loamy earth. The grounds, which are mostly arable, are open and uninclosed, at the extremity of which, towards the east, is the high road to Deal. Northward of the village, the ground falls towards Hambridge, over the south stream (k), where the lands are marshes and pasture. About three quarters of a mile southward from the village is the hamlet of Updowne. This parish is about a mile and an half from north to south, and not much more than half a mile in breadth from east to west. There is no fair, nor is there any parochial charities.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

HAM is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. George, is but a small mean building (m).

The church of Ham was granted and confirmed by Archbishop Baldwin, about the latter end of K. Henry II.'s reign, on the resignation of Stephen de Leyborne, sometime Parson of it, and at the petition and presentation of sir William de Norfolk, knt. lord of the soil, to the Prior and Convent of Ledes, to hold to them in pure and perpetual alms; and he constituted them canonically Parsons in the said church (n). After which, Archbishop Edmund, in the year 1235, granted to them, in the name of a perpetual benefice, forty shillings yearly from the said church of Hammes (o).

In which state this church continued till the dissolution of the Priory of Leeds, in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII, when it was surrendered into the King's hands, and the advowson of this rectory has ever since continued in the Crown, the King being at this time patron of it (p).

This rectory is valued in the King's books at 5l. 6s. 5½d. and the yearly tenths at 10s. 7¼d (q). In 1588, here were communicants 29, and it was valued at 50l. Elizabeth's reign of Tilmanstone, and married Mary, daughter of sir Lewis Clifford, knt. by Bennet, daughter of John Guldeford.

(b) See an account of the branch of this family settled at Fredville, vol. iii. of this history, p. 710, and of sir John Boys, of St. Gregory's, knt. under Bleane, in the same vol. p. 565. His brother Vincent, of Bekeborne above-mentioned, was fourth son of William Boys, of Fredville, by Mary Ringeley his wife, and left issue by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and coheir of Richard Barry, of Sewington, esq; and Lieutenant of Dover Castle, several children, of whom, Edward, the eldest, became possessed of Betshanger, by the will of his uncle sir John Boys, in 1612, though he had afterwards appears to have become possessed of it, and he sold it before the 20th year of K. Edward III, to John de Soles, who that year paid aid for it as one knight's fee, which the before-mentioned John de Tancre before held in Betteshanger of John de St. John. He died seized of this manor in the 49th year of that reign (z). How long it continued in his descendants I have not found, but in the reign of K. Henry IV, it was become the property of Rutter, from which name it passed about the beginning of K. Edw. IV.'s reign, into that of Lichfield, in which it continued some time (a). Roger Lychfeld died in the 4th year of K. Henry VIII, and by will gave it to Edward, son and heir of his son William, deceased, in tail, with remainder to his son Gregory Lychfeld, and then in like tail to his three daughters, Alyce Cocks, Joane Rutter, and Betryne Wolett, who at length by the deaths of the said Edward and Gregory, without issue, became entitled to it, and on the division of their inheritance this manor was allotted to Alyce, who entitled her husband, Thomas Cocks, esq; customer of Sandwich, to the possession of it, and he at the latter end of that reign alienated it to John Boys, afterwards knighted, and of St. Gregory's, in Canterbury, who dying without issue in 1612, he devised this manor to Edwara Boys, esq; his nephew, one of the sons of his brother Vincent Boys, of Bekeborne, in whose descendants it continued down to Edward Grotius Boys, of Canterbury, esq; (b) who dying on July 22, resided there for several years before by his uncle's leave. He resided in this mansion for near 50 years, and was buried in 1649 in this church. He was thrice married, first to Judith, daughter of Robert Ridley, of East Grinstead, esq; secondly to Elizabeth, widow of Edward Kelt, of Sandwich, gent. and daughter of Christopher Tilghman, of S. I. ling, gent. and thirdly to Judith Wheler, of Tottenham High Cross, who survived him. He left issue by his first wife only, a son John Boys, and other children; which John Boys, esq; possessed this manor, and was a member of that long Parliament, which began in 1640, in which he zealously sided with those who were enemies to the King and the established church. He died in 1678, and was buried here, having been thrice married, first to Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Thompson, of Chichester in Suffex, gent. by whom he had Edward, John, and other children; secondly to Letitia Jefferay, daughter and coheir of Thomas Jefferay, of Chittingley in the co. of Suffex, by whom he had several children, viz. Letitia, married to Thomas Brett, of Wy, gent. Jefferay, of whom below; Thomas, Rector of Betshanger, and Master of Catherine Hall, Cambridge; Anne, married to Herbert Woodward, of Ashford, gent. and Mary to Christopher Milles, of Hearne, gent. and thirdly to Margaret, daughter of sir John Routh, of Brenley, knt. widow of Richard Bate, esq; by whom he had no issue. On his death, Edward Boys, esq; his eldest son, succeeded to this manor, but he resided only a small time at the mansion of it, and dying in 1691, without issue, he was succeeded in it by his next brother John, who did not reside here neither, but dying in London unmarried in 1698, he left this estate to his 1706, without issue, bequeathed this manor to his kinsman, the Rev. Thomas Brett, Rector of this parish, the son of Thomas Brett, of Wye, gent. by Letitia, his father's eldest surviving sister (c), and he about the year 1713 alienated it to Salmon Morrice, esq; a Captain of the Royal Navy, and afterwards promoted in 1733 to the rank of Admiral. He almost rebuilt this seat (d), in which he afterwards resided till his death in 1740, since which it has continued in his descendants down to his grandson, the Rev. James Morrice, who is the present possessor of it (e).

BETSHANGER.

PRESENT STATE OF BETSHANGER.

THIS parish is very small, containing about 260 acres of land, the soil of which is much the same as that of the neighbouring parishes, but much inclining to chalk. There are only three houses in the parish. The court-lodge, situated in the bottom of a valley, having the church near the south east side of it. The farm-house of the Betshanger estate, and a farm-house in the northern part of the parish, formerly belonging to the Napletons, but now to Mr. John Curling, of Ham. The road from Canterbury to Deal his eldest half-brother, Jeffrey Boys, of Canterbury, esq; a Bencher of Grays Inn, who married Anne Adye, daughter of Edward Adye, of Barham, esq; and died in 1703, leaving this estate to his only son Edward Grotius Boys, of Canterbury, esq; who died possessed of it in 1706, and was buried with his ancestors in this church. Dying without issue, he left this manor with the rest of his estate by his last will to the Rev. Thomas Brett, L. L. D. the son of Letitia, his father's eldest surviving sister, as above-mentioned.

This branch of the family of Boys bore for their arms—Or, a griffin segreant sable, within a bordure gules. Crest, a demi-lion rampant, crowned or.

(c) See an account of the family of Brett, vol. iii. of this history, under Wye.

(d) This seat was built by one of the family of Boys, whose arms with the quarterings are over the mantle in the hall, carved in stone.

(e) There is no Court held for this manor, and indeed at this time, it has only the reputation of being one.—The estate here, belonging to Mr. Morrice, consists, including West Court, alias Burnt Barns, so called from the buildings having been destroyed by fire, of 400 acres of land, 164 of which only are in this parish, and the remainder in Norborne, Tilmanstone, and Sholdon.

Salmon Morrice, esq; was the son of Captain Morrice, of the Royal Navy, and a younger son of the family of that name, of Werrington in the co. of Devon. At the time of his death, on March 21, 1741, he was Vice-admiral of the White. He lies buried under an elegant marble monument, in a small building adjoining to the church, with his wife Elizabeth, daughter of William Wryght, esq; a Commissioner of the Navy, who died in 1733, by whom he had issue two sons and four daughters; of the latter, Sarah married to Mr. Dawes, a Lieutenant of the Marines; Elizabeth to Thomas Boteler, of Brook-street in Eastry, esq; Jane to William Hewett, esq; an officer in the army; and Maria-Susanna to Mr. James Baddeley, of London. The sons were, Wryght Morrice, esq; who married Sarah, daughter of Thomas Peke, esq; who died a young man in 1732,

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

BETSHANGER is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a small mean building, consist- of a nave and chancel, both which are kept uncommonly neat. Over the south door is a circular arch with a zig-zag moulding. Under it the figure of Our Saviour. This seems much older than the church, which shews no signs of antiquity. There is a small wooden turret at the west end, in which are three bells (f).

In the east window of the chancel are these shields of arms—Sable, on a chevron between 3 flags attired argent, a mullet of the first, for Cocks.—Chequy or and azure, a fess gules, all within a bordure of the last, for Clifford; and there were formerly these arms, though now defaced—Azure, a cross argent, impaling, or a griffin segreant sable, within a bordure gules, for Dean Boys—Azure, in his father's life-time, without issue; and William, who became his father's heir. He was at first bred a merchant in Holland, in the house of Godard, of Rotterdam, but on his brother's death was settled by his father at Betshanger, and was afterwards of Canterbury, esq. He died in 1758, having married Mary, eldest daughter of Robert Chadwick, of Northfleet, esq; a Captain in the Royal Navy, who is still living, by whom he had four sons. William, a Lieutenant-colonel of Dragoons, who possessed the manor of Betshanger, &c. on his father's death, and died unmarried at Putney in 1787, et. 49, and was buried at Betshanger; Robert, who died an infant. The Rev. James Morrice, Cl. Vicar of Flower in the co. of Northampton, who became his brother's heir, and is now possessed of Betshanger, Norborne, &c. and is Rector of this parish. He married Maria, second daughter of Adrian Ducarel, of London, merchant, (brother of the late Andrew Coltee Ducarel, of Doctors Commons, L. L. D.) by whom he has issue two sons, Frederick-Edward and Andrew-Ducarel, and three daughters, Charlotte-Elizabeth, Mary-Margaret, and Theodosia-Frances. The fourth son, Thomas, was bred to the navy, of which he was a Lieutenant, and having retired from that service, now resides in Monmouthshire.

The arms of Morrice are—Gules, a lion rampant regardant or.

(f) On the treble bell is this legend, in old English letters, Maria plena gracia mater misericordie. An escutcheon on each side of which, Sca Maria. The arms—Quarterly, 1st, Cocks; 2d, Per chevron in chief, 3 escallops; 3d, Two bends; 4th, A bend ermine between two swans, impaling Clifford and Guldeford, quartered with Colepeper. On the second bell, Iste tres nolæ sunt fratrum dona duorum. An escutcheon, on each side Sca Thomas. Arms—Cocks, and the other three coats first above-mentioned. On the third bell, Hic olim Pastor atq; Patronus erant. Arms the same as the second bell, and under, Sca Edmundus Rex. The arms are all reversed, from what is mentioned above, through the ignorance or mistake of the bell-founder. At the end of each of the above sentences is the reverse of a silver coin of the

This church, which is a rectory, has always been appendant to the manor, and continues so at this time, the Rev. James Morrice, owner of Betshanger manor, being the present patron and Rector of it.

This rectory is valued in the King's books at 7l. 14s. It is now a discharged living, and is of about the clear yearly value of 60l.

In 1588, here were 30 communicants, and it was valued at 40l. In 1640, here were 20 communicants, and it was valued at 60l.

It has no parsonage-house or barn, nor any other glebe but the church-yard, which is very small, though it appears by the King's books, taken anno 26 Henry VIII, that there were then seven acres of arable glebe belonging to it.

the date of the bells, probably Henry VI. Thomas Cocks, who died in 1558, was the Patron, and his brother William, Clericus, was the Pastor; they were the sons of Alice Cocks, the daughter of --- Litchfield. Thomas married Margaret, daughter of sr Lewis Clifford, by Bennet, daughter of John Guldeford, which sr Lewis was the son of Alexander Clifford, by Mary, daughter of Walter Colepeper.

(g) In this church are buried many of the family of Boys, formerly possessors of the manor and residents in this parish, whose monuments and grave-stones are still remaining in it.

In the chancel is a mural monument for Mrs. Elizabeth, wife of John Boys, of Betshanger, esq; daughter of Nicholas Thompson, of Chichester in Suffex, gent. She died in 1640, æt. 31, having had issue, Edward, John, Elizabeth, Mary, Judith, Margaret, and Katharine. Arms—Boys impaling Thompson. Another for Letitia, second wife of John Boys, of Betshanger, esq; daughter of Thomas Jefferay, of Chittingley in Suffex, esq. She had issue, Jefferay, Thomas, Lettice, Anne, and Margaret. Arms—Boys impaling Jefferay. Obiit 1660. Another for Edward Boys, of Betshanger, esq; eldest son of John Boys, esq; born 1636; married Anne, daughter of George Duke, of Cosington, esq; 1662, and died without issue. Arms—Boys impaling Duke. Another for John Boys, esq; son and heir of Edward Boys, esq; who married three wives; Elizabeth Thompson, Letitia Jefferay, and Margaret Routh. He died in 1678, æt. 72. WALDERSHARE

IS the next parish southward from Betslinger, last described, being written in the Book of Domesday, Walwarefere, and in some other ancient records, both Walworthsbire, and Walwarefare, taking its name most probably from the wolds, or open downs, among which it is situated.

A Borsholder is appointed for this parish, including the district of Apulton, at the Court Leet of Waldershare manor.

THE MANOR OF WALDERSHARE, alias MALMAINES.

WALDERSHARE, at the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, was part of the possessions of Odo, the great Bishop of Baieux, the King's half-brother, of whom it was held by Ralph de Curbepine; accordingly it is thus entered in that record, under the general title of the Bishop's lands:

- (a) He was likewise Curate of Sutton.
- (o) He was Master of Catherine Hall in Cambridge, and Curate of Sutton by Dover. He lies buried in this church.
- (p) He was likewise Rector of Rucking, of which as well as this rectory he was deprived.
- (q) He was likewise Rector of Ripple, and Curate of Walmer.
- (r) He was likewise Rector of Deal, and lies buried in this church.
- (s) And Rector of Ripple by dispensation.
- (t) Patron of this rectory; collated by the Archbishop on his own petition.
- (u) Henry de Malmains is in the register of those Kentish gentlemen who were with K. Richard I, at the siege of Acon in Palestine. John de Malmains is recorded in the Pipe Rolls of K. John's reign, as being one of the Recognitores Magnæ Assisæ, a place of such trust and profit, that

Which is: In Estrei Hundred. Ralph de Curbepine holds of the Bishop 2 sulings in Walwarefere. The arable land is In demesne there is 1 carucate and an half, and 14 villeins, with 2 carucates and an half. Of this land, Robert has half a suling, and one carucate there. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 7 pounds and 10 shillings, and afterwards 50 shillings, now 7 pounds. Wluuard held it of K. Edward.

Four years after the taking of the above survey, the Bishop of Baieux was disgraced, and all his possessions were confiscated to the Crown; soon after which, upon the King's new arrangement of Dover Castle, this manor, among other lands, was assigned to Gilbert Magminot, for his assistance in the defence of it, and together made up the barony of Magminot, being held by barony of Dover Castle, by the service of performing ward there from time to time.

Of the Magminots, and their descendants the Sayes, the chief lords of the seignory, this manor was again held by the family of Malmains, of eminent account in these parts, who were possessed of manors called after them, in Alkham, Pluckley, and Stoke, in this county; their residence in this parish likewise being called by their name.

John de Malmains is recorded in the Battle Abbey roll, as having accompanied the Conqueror to England, and to have been present at the fatal battle of Hastings, being standard-bearer to the Norman footmen. From him descended the several branches of this family seated in different parts of this county, who were many of them men eminent for the offices of trust and honour, which they at different times bore (u).

those who bore it were most usually selected from the chiefest knights and gentlemen of the county. William Malmains was buried in St. Radigund's abbey, anno 8 Henry III, as was Henry Malmains in the 1st year of K. Edward I, being at that time Sheriff of this county; and appears by his will, recited in the Register of St. Radigund's abbey, to have been a man of eminent account, and possessed of much land in different parishes of it. Sir John Malmayns, knt. was Knight of the Shire, anno 8 Edward II, as was his son of the same name, in the 12th year of the same reign, and in the 2d and 12th years of K. Edward III; and in the next reign of K. Richard II, sir Richard Malmaynes was Lieutenant of Dover Castle; all of whom were of this parish of Waldershare, of the branch of this family seated at Malmains in Stoke. Sir Nicholas Malmains attended K. Edw. I. to the siege of Carlaveroc in Scotland, and was there with many other Kentish gentlemen, knighted for their services; and WALDERSHARE.

From the permanency of them here, not only their mansion in this parish acquired the name of Malmaines (v), but the manor itself became styled in records, Waldershare alias Malmaines.

From John de Malmaines above-mentioned, who first held this manor in the reign of the Conqueror, it descended down to Henry Malmaines, of Waldershare, esq; who died seised of it in the 46th year of K. Edward III (w), leaving an only daughter and heir Alice, but it seems she inherited only a part of this manor and estate, which she carried in marriage to Henry Holland, of Solton, near Dover, and he died possessed of her interest in it, in the 19th year of K. Richard II, without male issue likewise, so that Jane his daughter and heir, married to Thomas Goldwell, of Goddington, in Great Chart, entitled her husband to it, and from him it descended down to his grandson of the same name, who, about the beginning of K. Henry VI.'s reign, alienated his part of it to John Monins, and his grandson of the same name, of Stoke likewise, was Knight of the Shire in the first year of K. Edward III.

They bore for their arms—Ermine, on a chief gules, three right hands coupéd argent; which shield is carved in stone in several places on the roof of the cloysters of Canterbury Cathedral. Several of this family lie buried in the Grey Friars church in London.

(v) This antient seat of Malmaines, (usually called Maimage), is now only a mean farm-house, belonging to the Earl of Guildford, of which see more below.

(w) See escheat roll of that year. Alianor, wife of John Malmaines, died anno 14 Edward III, seised of the manor of Waldershare, with the tenement of Southwode. There is a deed in the Surrenden library, in French, made anno 1364, 39 Edward III, by which Humphrey de Bobun, Earl of Hereford, Essex, and of Northampton, and Constable of England, assigned to John de Leston, Parson of the church of Plokele, Roger Malemeyns, and Robert de Hadham, jointly and severally, his attorneys, to take and receive, from year to year, to his use, 20 marcs of annual rent, issuing out of the manor of Waldewarshare, the which 20 marcs annually he had given and granted to his dear friend John Malemeyns, for the term of the life of the said John. Dated at London, &c. The seal appendant—A bend cotised, between 6 lions rampant.

(x) Sir Simon de Monyn left two sons, Theobald, who died without issue, and Stephen, who were both of Exburst in Suffex. The latter left issue, by Amabilia, daughter and heir of John de Leston, a son, John Monins, who was of Poulton, near Dover, knt. which estate he inherited in right of his wife Jocelyn, daughter and heir of John de Poulton, knt. He left by her Symon Monyns, of Dover, whose son Robert was likewise of Dover, and married one of the heirs of Craythorne, by whom he had three sons, John, Thomas, and Solomon, all of Dover. John, the eldest, lived in K. Edward III.'s reign; and in the Book of Aid, made in the 20th year of that reign, was charged to it for lands in Linacre and North Popyshall in this neighbourhood, and was of kindred to William Monins, who was several times Knight of the Shire for the co. of Norfolk in K. Richard II.'s reign, as appears by the record in the Tower, under the title De expensis Militum. He married Mabell, daughter of Bartholomew Pising, by whom he left John esq; who had before become possessed of the other part of this manor, by his marriage with the daughter and heir of Colby, who inherited this estate in right of his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas, son of John Malmaines, of Stoke, who was related to Henry Malmaines above-mentioned, on whose death in 46 Edward III, it descended to him, so that he became then seised of the entire fee of this manor.

John Monins, or Monyn, as the name was sometimes spelt in antient deeds, was descended from John de Monyn, knt. of the castle of Mayon, in Normandy, who attended William the Conqueror in his expedition into England, and bore for his arms—Gules, 3 crescents or, the coat-armour of his descendants at this time (x).

John Monins, esq; afterwards resided at Waldershare, where he built a new mansion, about a mile south-eastward from the antient house of Malmaines, in which he afterwards resided (y), as did his descendants down to John Monins, Monins, of Dover, who seems to have been a man of considerable account, from his obtaining a particular indulgence, under the seal of Pope Sixtus IV, dated anno 1474, to carry with him a portable altar and a priest, for the celebration of divine offices in his necessary journeys, which deed is now remaining in the hands of his descendant John Monins, of Canterbury, esq. He married Joane, daughter and heir of Sholdon, by whom he had three sons, Simon, Thomas, of Dover, and John, a priest, who was Parson of Deal; the former of whom married one of the heirs of Halden, by whom he had Nicholas, Simon, of St. Margaret at Cliffe, who died in 1471, and a daughter Joane. Nicholas Monins, the eldest son, married one of the heirs of Beaufield, by whom he had issue John Monins, who became possessed of Waldershare, as above-mentioned; Richard, who was of Biddenden; and Stephen, who was of St. Margaret's at Cliffe, which latter is in the list of those gentlemen of this county, taken anno 12 Henry VI, who were entitled to bear arma antiqua, i. e. the antient bearing or coat-armour of their ancestors.

(y) John Monins, esq; left issue, by the daughter and heir of Colbye, three sons, Robert, William, and Symon, and three daughters, married to Finneys, Crayford, and Exering. Robert, the eldest son, was of Waldershare in K. Richard III.'s reign, and married one of the daughters and heirs of Greenford, by whom he had Richard, who married the daughter and coheir of Petys, who was Mayor of Dover in 1509, and died without issue. John, who was of Swanton, of whom below, and three daughters, married to Diggs, Warren, and Parker; which latter, named Alice, was mother of Matthew Parker, Archbp of Canterbury. John Monins, of Swanton, lived in the reign of K. Henry VII, in the 20th year of which he compounded for 10 marcs, to be excused being made a knight of the lath, at the creation of Henry, then Prince of Wales. He left issue by Battel Anstive, of Cambridge, three sons, Edward, of whom below; John Monins, Lieutenant of Dover Castle, from whom descended the Monins's of Dover and Canterbury; an account of whom has already been given, under Charlton, above; the representative of which branch is John Monins, now of Canterbury, esq; and two daughters, one of whom married Bedingfeld. Edward Monins, esq; the eldest son, was of Waldershare, and was a Justice of the Peace, an office of great Monins, of Waldershare, knt. who was created a baronet, by patent, dated June 29, 1611. He was twice married, but had issue only by his second wife Jane, daughter of Roger Twisden, of Roydon, esq.; several sons and daughters (z). He died in 1643, and was succeeded in title and estate by his eldest son sir Edward Monins, of Waldershare, bart. who served the office of Sheriff of this county, in the 21st year of K. Charles I, and died possessed of this manor and estate in 1663, having married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Thomas Style, of Watringbury, (who died in 1703,) by whom he had several sons, who died infants, and five daughters, of whom, Susan married in 1673, to Peregrine Bertie, second son of Montague, Earl of Lindsey; Jane in 1659 to John, son and heir of sir Norton Knatchbull, bart. (a) Elizabeth to John, son of sir Anthony Percival, knt. Anne, first to sir Roger Pratt, of the co. of Norfolk, knt. and secondly to Sigismund Trafford, esq.; and Frances (b).

On his death, in 1663, this manor and seat devolved on his two eldest daughters and coheirs, Susan and Jane above-mentioned, the great respectability in those times, in the reign of K. Henry VIII. In the 2d and 3d years of K. Edward VI, he procured his lands in this county to be disgavelled, by the general act of that year. He died in the 6th year of K. Edward VI, having married Parnel, daughter and heir of Anthony Laverick, of Herne, esq.; by whom he had issue four sons and four daughters, which latter married Brook, Engelham, Lane, and Hammond of St. Alban's. Richard Monins, esq.; the eldest son, was of Sakwood Castle, and died anno 3 Elizabeth, leaving by his wife Katherine, daughter of Thomas Alese, of Colshill, several sons, and three daughters, married to Hornden, Sparke, and Baker. Of the sons, John Monins, the eldest son, was of Swanton, esq.; where he died without issue in 1568, leaving his next brother sir Edward Monins, of Waldershare, knt. his heir, who, in Easter term, anno 16 Elizabeth, levied a fine of all his lands. He died in 1602, having married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Lovelace, by whom he had William, of whom below, Richard, Thomas, and Martha, who died without issue; Elizabeth married to sir Henry Crispe; Frisilla to John Chamberlain, esq.; Frances to ----- Darcy, and Mary to Robert Hart. Sir William Monins, knt. the eldest son, resided at Waldershare, and was created a baronet, as above-mentioned.

(z) His first wife Elizabeth died in 1724, his second in 1639, and were both buried with him at Waldershare. He left issue Edward, who succeeded him in title and estate, but died without male issue; Thomas, who succeeded his brother in title, and died in 1678 in London, having married Elizabeth, widow of Robert Bromfield, of Tilmanstone, esq.; on whose death, without issue, the title of baronet became extinct. Anne married to sir Richard Betenson, knt. and bart. Jane married first to sir Timothy Thornhill, knt. secondly to Mathews, thirdly to Swift, and fourthly to sir Thomas Peyton, of Knolton, knt. John married to Mary, daughter and heir of William Hamon, by whom he had issue two sons; Edward, buried at Eythorne in 1647; William, of Shepherdswell, esq.; and a daughter Jane; and William died unmarried.

On the death of Susan, the eldest daughter and coheir above-mentioned, late wife of Peregrine Bertie, deceased, who seems at her death to have been possessed of the entire fee of this manor and estate, it became vested in her heirs and trustees (d), for the use of her two daughters and coheirs, and they, in the reign of K. William and Q. Mary, joined in the sale of it to sir Henry Furnese, afterwards of Waldershare, bart. who rebuilt this seat, after a design, as it is said, of Inigo Jones, and inclosed a park round it, which he planted in an elegant manner with avenues, according to the taste of that time.

Sir Henry Furnese had been created a baronet, by patent, on June 27, 1707, and died on Nov. 3, 1712 (e), leaving issue by his first wife, Anne, daughter of Robert Brough, esq.; (f) one son sir

(b) The above account and pedigree of the family of Monins is taken mostly from one attested by Ralph Bigland, clark. and Isaac Heard, Norroy King at Arms, in 1779, now in the possession of John Monins, of Canterbury, esq.; and, the more antient part especially, from the Visitations of the co. of Kent; from Mss. in the Herald's office, marked O 18, f. 43; from wills, parochial registers, and other such authentic evidences. The arms of Monins, viz.—Gules, 3 crescents or, are carved on the roof of the cloysters at Canterbury, and they are in a window of Newington church by Sittingborne, impaled with Digge.

(c) By her first husband she had issue Robert Henley, Lord High Chancellor, and Earl of Northampton.

(d) Viz. John, Lord Powlet, and Bridget his wife, the Honourable Henry and Robert Bertie, esqrs. James Johnstone, esq.; Edward Harley, esq.; and Anthony Henley, esq.; and Mary his wife, and Dame Jane Herbert and her trustees.

(e) Sir Henry Furnese, by his will, gave all his manors and lands to his son Robert, and the heirs of his body, remainder to his daughter Matilda, in like manner remainder to Henry, son of his brother George, and divers remainders over. Sir Robert, the son, suffered a recovery of all these premises, May 22, 1714.

(f) His second wife was Matilda, widow of Anthony Balam, esq.; by whom he had a daughter Matilda, married to Richard Edgcumbe, afterwards created Lord Edgcumbe.

Sir Henry Furnese was the eldest son of Henry Furnese, of Sandwich, by Anne, the daughter of Mr. Andrew Gosfright, of Sandwich, whose other children were, George, Mary, Elizabeth, and Anne. George Furnese, their second son, was in the East India Company's service, and left issue two sons, Henry and George, and one daughter Elizabeth, married to Mr. John Peirce, and afterwards her brother Henry's sole heir; which Henry Furnese was of Gunnerbury-house, as

Robert Furnese, bart. who resided here, and died possessed of this manor and seat, on March 14, 1733, being at that time Knight of the Shire for this county. He had been three times married, first to Anne, daughter of Anthony Balam, esq.; by whom he had issue a daughter Anne, who married the Honourable John St. John, second but at length only surviving son of Henry, Viscount St. John, and after his death Lord Viscount St. John; secondly, the Honourable Arabella Watson, one of the daughters of Lewis, Lord, afterwards Earl of Rockingham, by whom he had issue Henry, his successor in title and estates; and Catherine, afterwards married in 1736, to Lewis, Earl of Rockingham; lastly, he married Lady Anne Shirley, daughter of Robert Shirley, Earl Ferrers (g), by whom he left an only surviving daughter, Selina, married to Edward Dering, now sir Edward Dering, bart. Sir Henry Furnese, bart. survived his father but a short time, dying abroad on March 18, 1735, under age, and unmarried, and this, among the rest of his estates, by virtue of the limitations in his grandfather's will, became vested in his three sisters, as the daughters and coheirs of his father sir Robert Furnese, in equal shares and proportions, in coparcenary in tail general, with such re-well as his brother George, who was a Captain of Dragoons, and died without issue.

Of the daughters of Mr. Henry Furnese, Mary married Mr. John Solly, of Sandwich; Anne married Mr. Daniel Williams, of London; and Elizabeth married Mr. John Branch.

Sir Henry Furnese, the eldest son, became a capital merchant, and by his industry and abilities rose to eminence, wealth, and honours. Being always active, and zealous in support of the Revolution, he was favourably distinguished by K. William, and the Whigs in general, and the Ministry patronizing him, it gave him weight and consequence, and served to enable him in the various branches of trade which he carried on, the more speedily to acquire those riches which he afterwards accumulated. He served the office of Sheriff of London in 1701, and was in 1707 created a baronet as above-mentioned. At his death he bequeathed a handsome legacy for charitable uses to the several parishes in Sandwich, as may be further seen in the description of that town. He bore for his arms—Argent, a salbot hound sejant, within a bordure, sable.

Sir Robert Furnese, the only son and heir of sir Henry, served in parliament for New Romney in the 12th year of Q. Anne, and in the 1st year of K. George I, and in 1727 was elected Knight of the Shire for this county; but he died before the end of that parliament.

In the house of Waldershare was a portrait of sir Robert Furnese, by Carlo Maratti, painted at Rome, and there is now a portrait of him there, marked F. T. his hand resting on a book, intitled Monumenta Romana. There are there likewise two family pictures, by sir Godfrey Kneller; the one of sir Robert Furnese with his first wife and their daughter; the other of sir Robert and his second wife, with their son Henry and daughter Catherine. mainders over as were limited by sir Henry's will. After which, Catherine, Countess of Rockingham, and Anne St. John, and their respective husbands, in Hilary term, 1736, suffered recoveries of their respective two undivided third parts, and afterwards, by a decree of the Court of Chancery, at the instance of the parties, made Feb. 16, anno 9 George II, a writ of partition was agreed to, which was confirmed by an act of parliament passed specially for this purpose next year (b), by which this manor and seat, with Malmains and other premises in this parish, were allotted to Catherine, wife of Lewis, Earl of Rockingham, who died without issue in 1745, leaving her surviving, who then became possessed of this estate again in her own right (i). She afterwards married in 1751, Francis, Earl of Guildford, by whom she had no issue, and dying in 1766 (k), devised it, among the rest of her estates, to her surviving husband, who died possessed of it in 1790, upon which it came to his eldest son Frederick, Earl of Guildford, and knight of the garter, since whose decease, in 1792, his eldest son, the present Right Honourable George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, is become the present possessor of it, and resides at times at this seat (l).

(g) She lived to a very advanced age, and died in 1779.

(b) The act was entitled, an act for establishing and confirming a partition of the estates of sir Robert Furnese, bart. deceased, among his three daughters and coheirs, and for settling their shares and allotments, to such uses as their several undivided parts stood limited, and for other purposes therein-mentioned.

(i) By settlement on her marriage with Lord Rockingham, and suffering the recovery above-mentioned, her third part of these estates was limited, if she survived her husband without issue to her and her heirs for ever. In the schedule of these estates, annexed to the act, among those allotted to Catherine, Lady Rockingham, the total of which was of the annual value of 1266l. 15s. 7½d. Waldershare house, park, gardens, &c. containing 110 acres, were valued at 7000l. Malmains farm in Waldershare, containing 325 acres, was let at 126l. per annum; and wood-lands in Waldershare, Northborne, and Coldred, were valued at 40l. per annum. The total of sir Robert Furnese's estates, in the three schedules, amounted to 4600l. per annum. Waldershare park in the whole at present contains about 400 acres.

(k) She was buried by her own desire at Wroxtton in the co. of Oxford, as was the Earl of Guildford her second husband afterwards.

(l) The family of North derive their descent from Robert North, esq. who lived in K. Edward IV.'s reign, and was ancestor of Edward North, created Lord North, of Kirtling, by Q. Mary, in 1554, from whom descended Charles, (the 5th) Lord North, who married Catherine, daughter of William, Lord Grey of Werk, and was summoned in his father's life-time to parliament, anno 25 Charles II, by the title of Lord Grey, Baron of Rolleston, in the co. of Stafford; but this title became extinct on the death of his son William, in 1734.

APULTON is a district esteemed to be within this parish, though separated from the rest of it by a part of the parishes of Northborne and West Langdon intervening. It is situated northward from the other part of Waldershare, and appears by the survey of Domesday to have been at that time part of the possessions of Odo, Bp of Baieux, under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in it :

He died in the 1st year of K. James II, having married Frances, second daughter of Thomas Pope, Earl of Downe, by whom he had three sons and two daughters, of whom, Francis, the eldest son, became (the 2d) Lord Guildford, and died in 1729, having married in 1695, Elizabeth, daughter of Fulk Greville, Lord Brocke, who dying in 1699, without issue, he married secondly Alice, daughter and co-heir of sr John Brownlowe, of the co. of Lincoln, bart. by whom he had Francis, who succeeded him in title and estate; two other sons, who died infants; and a daughter, who died unmarried.

Francis, Lord Guildford, the only surviving son, was born in 1704, and in 1734, by the death of William, Lord North and Grey, as above-mentioned, succeeded as his heir to the former of those titles, the latter becoming extinct, bearing the title of Lord North and Guildford; and on April 8, 1752, he was further advanced, by letters patent, to the title of Earl of Guildford, in the co. of Surry. He married first, in 1728, Lucy, daughter of George, Earl of Halifax, who died in 1734, by whom he had issue Frederick, born in 1732, who became his heir; his second wife was Elizabeth, relict of George, Viscount Lewisham, and only daughter of sr Arthur Kaye, of the co. of York, bart. who died in 1745, by whom he had two daughters, whom he survived; one of whom, Louisa, married to John Peyto, Lord Willoughby de Broke, and a son Brownlow, now Lord Bishop of Winchester, who in 1771 married Miss Banister. Four years after the taking of the above survey, the Bishop of Baieux was disgraced, and all his possessions were confiscated to the Crown; soon after which, both these manors were granted by the King to Gilbert Magminot, for his assistance in the defence of Dover Castle, being held by the service of ward to it, and with other lands made up the barony of Magminot.

Of the family of Magminot and their heirs, these manors were again held by the eminent family of Malmains, who continued in the possession of them, till Henry Malmains joining with Simon, Earl of Leicester, in rebellion against K. Henry III, would have forfeited all his lands, had not the Abbat of the adjoining monastery of Langdon interceded for him and gained his pardon; for which service his descendant, sr John Malmains, through gratitude, gave the two manors of Apleton and Southwold, by his will, after the death of Lora his wife, who held them in dower, to the above-mentioned monastery (m). Accordingly in the 20th year of K. Edward III, Earl of Rockingham, who died in 1766, without issue. His Lordship lived to a good old age, and died at his house in London, on Aug. 4, 1790, in his 87th year, being at the time of his death Treasurer of the Queen's Household, Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the co. of Somerset, Recorder of Gloucester and of Taunton, High Steward of Banbury, &c. He was succeeded in titles and estate by his eldest son Frederick, Lord North, and knight of the garter, who became (the 2d) Earl of Guildford, a nobleman well known as having continued the Prime Minister of this country during the late unhappy American war. He died on Aug. 5, 1792, in London, being at that time Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports and Constable of Dover Castle, Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the co. of Somerset, Chancellor of the University of Oxford, Recorder of Gloucester and Taunton, &c. He was buried in the family vault at Wroxton in the co. of Oxford; the whole University attending the funeral procession with great solemnity as it passed through Oxford. His Lordship married in 1756 Anne, daughter of George Speke, of Dillington in the co. of Somerset, esq; by whom he left three sons and three daughters; the former were, George-Augustus, Frederick, and Francis; of the latter, Caroline, the eldest, married Sylvester Douglas, esq; and Anne and Charlotte are unmarried. The eldest son, George-Augustus, born in 1757, succeeded him in title, and in this estate and seat of Waldershare, being the present Right Honourable the Earl of Guildford, who first married in 1785, Miss Hobart, daughter of the Earl of Buckinghamshire. She died in 1794, leaving only an infant daughter. He married secondly, this year, 1796, the daughter of Mr. Thomas Coutts, of London, banker.

the Abbat of Langdon paid aid for them as one knight's fee, which Lora Malmains held in dower at Appleton, of the barony of Say, and they both continued in the Abbat's possession till the 1st year of K. Richard III, when the Abbat exchanged Southwood with Robert Monins, esq; for other lands elsewhere; but Appleton was, on the suppression of the abbey, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, surrendered into the hands of the Crown, together with the rest of the possessions of the monastery; and the King seized on Southwood, then in the possession of Edward Monins, esq; as part of them, and unjustly alienated from it, and afterwards granted both Appleton and Southwood, among other premises, in his 29th year, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who in the 1st year of Q. Elizabeth exchanged Appleton again with the Crown, but he retained Southwood, which has ever since continued part of the possessions of that see, and remains so at this time (n).

But the manor of Appleton, or Appulton, as it is sometimes written, was afterwards granted to sir Edwin Sandys, of Northborne, kn. (o) in whose descendants it continued, till it was at length passed away to Wickenden; and Robert Wickenden, of Dover, gent. died possessed of it in 1686, and by his will devised it to his son of the same name, whose descendant Mr. Nicholas Wickenden, of the same place, dying without issue about 50 years ago, devised it to his servants, who sold it to Mr. Samuel Billingsley, of London, whose widow marrying Richard Crickett, esq; entitled him to the possession of it, and he continues the present owner (p).

(n) In 1643, Edwyn Aucher was lessee of this manor, on a beneficial lease, at the yearly rent of 5l. 5s. The only possessions which the Archbishop has, as I am informed, at present in this parish, is about 80 acres of land, called Heasteden Down, the lessee of which is the Earl of Guildford; but there is a wood in this parish, called Southwood, containing 16 acres, lying near Hedling wood, belonging to Lewis Cage, esq;—but whether it ever had relation to the above manor, I know not.

(o) It was found in 1610 (as appears by a map, made that year for sir Edwin Sandys;) to have been held of the manor of Bishops Enbrooke, in Cheriton.

(p) This district contains near 300 acres, comprehended in one single farm, which is of the yearly value of 100l.

(q) The whole parish belongs to the Earl of Guildford, excepting Southwood and Heasteden Down; London Close about 12 acres, part of Linaere Court, and Appleton.

(s) There are two additional buildings on each side the chancel, each of which communicate with the church by a door broken through the walls of it. That on the north side has in it a most magnificent pyramidal monument, erected by sir Robert Furnese, bart. in memory of his father sir Henry Furnese. PRESENT STATE OF WALDERSHARE.

This parish extends about two miles from north to south, but it is very narrow across the other way. It contains in the whole about 1000 acres of land, the rents of which are about 600l. per annum (q). There are eight houses in it, besides one in the district of Appleton, which is entirely separated from the rest of it by the parishes of Northborne and West Langdon intervening, as has been already noticed. In the southern part of it is Waldershare park, having the house nearly in the centre, and the Belvidere at the south-west corner, on high ground, with a beautiful prospect from it. The church is situated near the middle of the eastern side of the parish. At the northern extremity is Malmains farm, and an open uninclosed down, called Maimage down, corruptly for Malmains down. The country here has much the same face and soil as those of the neighbouring parishes. There is a fair held here on Whit-Tuesday yearly, for toys and pedlary. There are no parochial charities.

The scarce plant, Origanum onites, pot marjorum; grows in Waldershare park (r).

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

WALDERSHARE is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to All Saints, is a small mean building, consisting of a body and chancel, having a wooden turret at the west end, in which hangs one bell. It is almost overgrown with ivy (s).

daughters Anne and Catherine, all buried here; the whole finely executed by Mr. Greene, of Canterwell. In the building, on the south side, is a large altar-tomb, on which are the figures of a man and woman, made out of all proportion, and conspicuously absurd, and an inscription to the memory of the Honourable Susan Bertie, fourth daughter and coheir of sir Edward Monins, of Waldershare, bart. by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of sir Thomas Style, of Watringbury, bart. and wife to the Honourable Peregrine Bertie, second son to the Lord Montague, Earl of Lindsey, Lord Great Chamberlain of England. She had three daughters, Bridget, Elizabeth, and Mary, of which, Elizabeth died in her lifetime. She died at Rocheſter, Dec. 30, 1697. Over it are banners, pendants, &c.—In the chancel, against the south wall, is a monument for sir Edward Monins, kn. and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Thomas Lovelace, of Hewer, esq; by whom he had one son William, and four daughters, Elizabeth, Mary, Priscilla, and Frances. Sir Edward was buried Nov. 27, 1602; he was brother of John Monins, esq; who died without issue, and son of Richard Monins, of Waldershare, and Catherine, daughter and heir of Thomas Aliffe, of Colsbill, in Milton, esq; also of sir William Monins, of Waldershare, bart. his son and heir, obiit 24 February, (his grave-stone says March,) 1642; also his wife Jane, daughter of Roger Tavisden, esq; of Roedon Hall in Peckham, in Kent, obiit 22 March, 1640, by whom sir William had four sons, Edward, Thomas, John, and William, and six daughters

The church of Waldershare was anciently appendant to the manor, and continued so, till one of the family of Malmains gave it to the neighbouring abbey of West Langdon (t), to which it was appropriated by Archbishop Walter Reynolds, in the 16th year of K. Edward II, anno 1322 (u). In which state it continued till the suppression of that monastery, in the 27th year of K. Henry VIII, when it came with the rest of the possessions of it, into the Kings hands, whence the appropriation of this church, together with the advowson of the vicarage, was afterwards granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, part of whose possessions it continues at this time (v).

In the time of K. Edward III, there were of the endowment of this church, one messuage, one garden and 9 acres of arable (w). In the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, this church was valued among the possessions of the Abbey of Langdon, at 12l. per annum (x). It is valued in the King's Books at 5l. 8s. but is now a discharged living, of the clear yearly value of 25l. (y)

In 1588 here were 33 communicants. In 1640 here were the like number, and it was valued at 38l. Archbishop Juxon, in conformity to the King's letters mandatory, augmented this vicarage 20l. per annum, by indenture, 14th Charles II, which was confirmed by others of the like tenor, in the 23d year of that reign (z).

There is no vicarage house, and only one acre of glebe-land, adjoining to the church-yard.

EYTHORNE,

COMMONLY pronounced Aythorne, lies the next parish westward from Waldershare, being written in the Saxon codicils, Hegytbe Thorne, in later records Eghelborne, and now usually Eythorne.

This parish, which is divided into the two districts of Upper and Lower Eythorne, is accounted to lie in the hundred of Eastry, the Constable of the upper half hundred of which exercises jurisdiction over it; notwithstanding which, the former being the southern part of this parish, within the borough of South Langdon, sometimes called Socage Langdon, is reputed to lie in the upper half hundred of Downhamford, the Borsholder for which is chosen at the Court Leet of the manor of Adisham, within which manor it is; and the latter or northern part is within the borough of Eythorne, and is reputed to be within the upper half hundred of Wingham.

This borough of Eythorne takes within its bounds lower Eythorne street, comprehending the church, Elnton farm, and Eythorne Court manor and lands, the whole being within the hundred last mentioned; at the Court of which a Borsholder is appointed for it (i).

THE MANOR OF EYTHORNE, alias EYTHORNE COURT.

CUTHRED, K. of Kent, about the year 807, with the consent of Cœnulph, K. of Mercia,

(e) He was soon afterwards collated to the rectory of Blackmanstone, which he held with this vicarage, by dispensation.

(f) He was at the same time collated to the rectory of Blackmanstone, which he held with this vicarage, by dispensation.

(g) He was collated at the same time to the rectory of Blackmanstone, and in 1764 to the curacy of Nonington with Wimlingfold. He lies buried in this church.

(h) He was collated in 1777 to the rectory of Iwychurch, which he resigned in 1789, on being presented to the rectory of Bledon, in the co. of Somerset.

(i) Neither Elmington, usually called Elnton, nor Street-end, were formerly included in this borough, both having been lately added to it, to serve particular purposes. The road between Pisfield, and Brincele, or the boundary of the demesne lands of the manor of Eythorne Court, and of the gave to Ætheinob, his most faithful minister, 3 plow lands, in the place which was called æt Heygbe Thorne, for a competent sum of money, that is, three thousand pence; and he covenanted to keep it free from all secular services, both within and without, and all other diminutions and burthens great and small, with the liberty of changing or giving them during his life, and of leaving them after his death, to whomever he would; to which gift were witnesses, K. Cœnulph of Mercia, K. Cuthred of Kent, and Archbp. Wulfred, with many others (k).

After which, this estate appears to have come into the possession of Archbishop Wulfred, who in the year 824, gave it with the lands of Langdune, (most probably the borough of South Langdon, in this parish), in exchange for Bereham, to the monks of the Priory of Christ Church in Canterbury (l). How long it remained with them, I have not found, in all likelihood it was wrested from them, during the period of those troublesome times, before the Norman Conquest; for not long afterwards, it appears to have been in the possession of the family of Badlesmere, in which it continued till Bartholomew de Badlesmere in the 15th year of K. Edward II, having joined the discontented barons, and by other acts of imprudence offended the King, his lands were seized on, and he himself was executed; upon which this manor coming into the hands of the Crown, continued there till it was granted by K. Edward III. to sir John Bowdon, who in the 18th year of that reign, conveyed it to John de Goldsborough, after whose death it was passed away to Thomas Holben, and he in the 12th year of the next reign of K. Richard II. alienated it to Robert Dane (m), who sold the reversion of it, to John Dygge, of Berham (n); after which this manor appears to have come into the possession of Robert Webbe, who in the 4th year of K. Henry VI. alienated it to John St. Clerc, and he transmitted it by sale to sir Walter Hungerford, of Heytisbury, knt. (o), as he did again about the latter end of the last mentioned reign, lands it claims over, being properly the line which divides the two boroughs.

He was steward of the King's household, under K. Henry V, who for his eminent services in the wars, gave him the castle and barony of Homert, in Normandy, to hold by the service of finding for the King one lance with a fox's tail hanging to it. In the next reign of K. Henry VI. he was made Lord high Treasurer of England, and created baron of Hungerford, and by his prudent management, Elizabeth. He in the 16th year of that reign, alienated it to Francis Santon, whose son in the 28th year of the same reign, sold it to fir William Ritber, of London, knt. (r) who dying without male issue, bequeathed it to Susan, one of his daughters and coheirs, then the wife of fir Thomas Casar, knt. one of the barons of the Exchequer (s), after whose death she again carried it in marriage to Mr. Thomas Philipot, second son of fir John Philipott, of Compton Wascelin, in the co. of Hants (t), whom she likewise survived, and at her death gave it to her only son by her second husband, Mr. Villiers Philipott, who at the latter end of K. Charles the I.'s reign, conveyed it by sale to Mr. John Brett, of London (u). How it passed afterwards, I have not found, only that after some intermediate owners it came into the possession of Richard Sherbrooke, of London, esq.; who owned it in the beginning of the present reign, and at his death devised it to his sister, married to Mead, by whom she left an only daughter, who marrying John Wilkes, esq.; entitled him to the possession of it, and his only daughter, Mrs. Mary Wilkes, is at this time owner of it (v).

His descendants in the elder branch ending in Mary, daughter and heir of his great grandson Thomas, Lord Hungerford, she by marrying with Edward, Lord Hastings, carried a great estate with her, and the baronies likewise of Hungerford, Botreaux, Molins and Moel, in right of which he was summoned to Parliament anno 1482; which baronies on the death of Francis Hastings, late Earl of Huntingdon, are come to his sister Elizabeth, Lady Moira. See Camden's Brit. p. 25, 165, and Mss. pedigrees of Hungerford. The Hungerfords bore for their arms—Sable, 2 bars argent, in chief 3 plates. There are many tombs and memorials of them in the church of Hungerford, and the chapel of Farley castle, in the co. of Somerset.

ELMINGTON,

usually called Elmton, is a manor in the northern confines of this parish, part of which at least was at the time of the taking the survey of Domesday, in the possession of Odo, Bishop of Baieux, under the general title of whose lands, it is thus entered in it:

Isde Osbt (filius Letardi) ten de epo. 15 acs in Esmetone & ibi manet un pbr. hoc utrunq; T. R. E. valeb. 30. sol. & post 20. sol. modo 30. sol. Sinc. tenuit de rege. E.

Which is: The same Osbert (son of Letard) holds of the Bishop, 15 acres in Esmetone, and there belongs to it one prebend. Both these in the time of K. Edward the Confessor were worth 30 shillings, and afterwards 20 shillings, now 30 shillings. Sired held it of K. Edward.

The Bishop of Baieux was disgraced, 4 years after this, and his estates were all confiscated to the Crown.

The eminent family of Malmains appear afterwards to have held this manor, of whom it was again held in K. Edward the II.'s reign, by Guido de Skillingbeld, and after him by Peter Condie or Cundie, of Sandwich, descended from those of that name, seated at Condies Hall, in Whitstaple, and he was possessed of it at the beginning of K. Edward the III.'s reign, but he was deceased before the 20th year of it, for on the aid levied that year, for the making of the Black Prince a Knight, Isabel, late his wife, was charged for it as a quarter of one knight's fee, which Guido de Skillingbeld before held in Elmington of John de Malmaines, being held of the Abbat of St. Augustine.

(v) The house is very large and ancient; it is built of stone; the walls are very thick and strong; they are much covered with ivy, the stems of which are the strongest I ever saw. In the windows are the 3 following shields, in painted glass, viz. one of 4 coats,—1st and 4th, per pale indented argent and sable, a saltier counterchanged;—2d, gules, 2 bears heads between 9 cross-crosets argent;—3d, gules, a fess cotized or, between 2 frets argent, impaling argent, a fess gules between 3 eagles sable.—The 2d shield, the same coat quarterly as that above mentioned, impaling argent, on a bend sable,

After which it descended to William son of John de Condie, who died seized of it in the 42d year of that reign, without lawful issue, upon which Margaret his sister and coheir, marrying Robert Grubbe, entitled him to the possession of it, but he likewise dying without male issue, Agnes, one of his coheirs, carried it in marriage to John Isaac, of Blackmanbury, in Bridge, esq; whose descendant James Isaac, about the latter end of K. Henry the VII.'s reign, conveyed it to George Guldeford, esq; in whom the possession of it was but of short continuance, for from this family, about the latter end of K. Henry the VIII.'s reign, it was passed away to sr Christopher Hales, who not long after alienated it to William Bois, of Nonington, esq; (w) whose second son Thomas Bois afterwards resided here, and afterwards at Barson, where he died in 1599 (x); notwithstanding his residence here, he seems never to have possessed the fee of it, which continued in the descendants of his eldest brother Edward, of Fredville, till Major John Bois, of that place, at the beginning of K. Charles the II.'s reign, sold it to Wm. Turner (y), whose son of the same name, of Grays Inn, and afterwards of the White Friars, in Canterbury, esq; died possessed of it in 1729, and was buried at Acrise, leaving by his wife Anna-Maria the youngest daughter of Thomas Papillon, of London, merchant, one son William, and two daughters (z); which William Turner, the son, was of the White Friars, esq; and inherited this

PRESENT STATE OF EYTHORNE.

EYTHORNE lies in a hilly uninclosed country, the soil of which is chalk, much covered with flints, and pretty barren for the most part of it. It contains about 1244 acres of land. The southern part, from its situation, is called Upper Eythorne, comprehending within it the borough of South Langdon, in which is a hamlet, called the Green, consisting of six houses, among which are two farms, the principal called Langdon farm, belonged to John Hollingbery Mann, esq; of Canterbury, lately deceased; the other now belongs to the Earl of Guildford. Another hamlet, called Upper Eythorne-street, comprehending the Forstal, contains 31 houses, among which is one, which once belonged to a tolerable large farm, called Park End, now belonging to the Earl of Guildford, the greatest part of which has been long since taken into Waldershare Park (c). At a small distance southward from the above Forstal, is a small seat pleasantly situated, built in 1762 by Peter Fezor, esq; of Dover, who occasionally resides at it (d).

(b) This estate, as I am informed, has been but very lately reputed to be within this parish. It pays a quit-rent to Knolton manor. It contains 350 acres of land, and is of the yearly rent of 150*l*.

See an account of the family of Papillon, under Acrise, in vol. iii. of this history, p. 346.

(c) About 70 acres of land, lying in this parish, are inclosed in Waldershare Park.

(d) Mr. Fezor is possessed of much landed property, dispersed in different parishes in this part of the county, and, as has been already noticed in the description of Dover, is a very considerable banker and merchant of that place; his mother was the daughter of Mr. Minet, who with his five brothers and three sisters, came over from France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1686, having sacrificed their situation and property in that country, for their attachment to their religion. Mr. Fezor married in 1750, Mary, eldest daughter of John Minet, A. M. Rector of Eythorne, descended of the same family, who died here in October 1794, by whom he has issue three sons and three daughters, viz. John-Minet Fezor, of Dover, banker and merchant, and of Updowne Place, in Ham, esq; who married in February 1794, the only daughter of sr Robert Laurie, of Maxwells town, in Scotland, bart. and M. P. for Dumfriess. James-Peter, likewise of Dover, and in partnership with his father and brother, as above-mentioned, who married in 1783 Frances, daughter of Thomas Bateman Lane, of Dover, esq; by whom he has issue, and William, who is unmarried. Alicia-Hughes, married in 1775, to Charles Wellard, of Dover, esq; Mary and Elizabeth, both unmarried.

Further northward is the borough of Lower Eytborne, comprehending Eytborne Court, and Lower Eytborne Street, consisting of 12 houses, having the church and parsonage house within it, the two small hamlets of Wigmore, (formerly Jenkin) (e), and Street End (f), each containing two houses. At the northern extremity of this parish is Elmington, but lately accounted within this borough, and a farm called Brimsdale, belonging to Mr. Thomas Harvey, late of Eytborne Court (g).

This parish is long and narrow, being more than two miles and a half from north to south, and not more than three quarters of a mile from east to west; at the south extremity of it are several lines of a Roman entrenchment, as has been already mentioned under Shebbertswell above. There is a large barrow or tumulus, about a quarter of a mile eastward from Eytborne Court wood, near the road leading to Walder-share.

They bear for their arms—Vert, two doves in pale, argent, beaked and legged gules, the upper one holding an olive branch, or.

(e) It belonged in 1635, to John Gurney, from which name it passed to Henry Jenkin, and John Hammond, and thence again to Hen. Nicholl, in 1739, and he sold it in 1769, to the Rev. John Minet, upon whose death it went in marriage with Henrietta his youngest daughter, to Mr. Thomas Sayer, the present owner of it, who purchased likewise a small farm in this parish, called Church Hope, of the widow Finnis, of Deal, before Jenkin's.

(f) This estate formerly belonged to Richard Ladd, afterwards to Richard Canney, of Deal, whose widow now owns it.

(g) He purchased it of Mr. Henry Nicholls, of Barbam, some few years since. These Harveys of Eytborne Court branched off from Richard Harvey, of West Studdal, the original ancestor, about 200 years since, of the family of this name dispersed over this part of Kent. The father of the above-mentioned Thomas Harvey first came to Eytborne Court as tenant in 1711, and his grandson Philip Harvey still remains so.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is small, consisting of a body and north isle, and two chancels, having a square tower, with battlements at the west end (b).

This church was esteemed as a vicarage, in Archbishop Stephen Langton's time, who came to the see in the 8th year of K. John, as appears by an ordination of that Archbishop, concerning a pension of three marks to be paid yearly to the Vicar of it by the nuns of Harwood, in the co. of Bedford (i).

EYTHORNE.

Edward III.'s reign made a decree, concerning the Vicarage of this church (ii), and as such it was esteemed in the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, when it was valued only at 4l. and as such with other small benefices, was not taxed to the tenth (k). But notwithstanding the above, this church has been for a great length of time accounted a Rectory, most probably so at first on a vacancy of the Vicarage, on a petition of the Vicar of it to the Archbishop, and it appears to have been so accounted in the 26th year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, when it was valued in the King's Books as a Rectory, of the yearly value of 15l. 12s. 6d. and the yearly tenths at 1l. 11s. 6d. (l)

In 1588 here were 76 communicants. In 1640 here were 80 communicants, and it was valued at 100l.

The patronage of this church has been for many years the property of the owners of Elmington manor, in this parish, and the owners of Walderbare manor adjoining alternately, and as such is now the joint property of David Papillon, of Acrise, esq; and the Right Honorable the Earl of Guildford, who present alternately to it.

BARSON.

THE next parish south westward is Barson, alias Barfriston, which latter is its proper and antient name; being written in the survey of Domesday, Barfrestone, but for the sake of contraction it has been of late both called and written by the former name of Barson only (v).

There is but one borough in this parish, viz. the borough of Barson, which contains the whole parish; the borough for which is chosen at the Petty Sessions, held for this division of the Laib of St. Augustine.

THE MANOR OF BARFRISTON, alias GERARDS,

AT the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, this place was part of the possessions of Odo, the great Bishop of Baieux, the King's half-brother, under the general title of whose lands it is thus entered in it.

Rannulf de Colubels holds there one yoke, which has been scotted in Hardes and to this time is not scotted to the King's tax.

On the confiscation of the Bishop's estates, which happened on his disgrace, about four years afterwards, this at Barfriston appears to be among the lands, which were granted by the King for the defence of Dover castle, on his new order for the government of it, to Hugh de Port, and made up together the barony of Port, being held by barony of that castle, by the service of performing ward there, for the defence of it.

In which grant this estate was esteemed as one knight's fee, under which notion it was held of his descendant, John de St. John, in K. Henry the III.'s reign, by a family named Wyborne; one of whom, John de Wyborne, held it in K. Edward the II.'s reign; but before the 20th of K. Edward III, this name was extinct here; for by the book of aid of that year, it appears to have been alienated from them, and in the tenure of different persons; for John de Monynbam paid aid for it, as the twentieth part of a knight's fee, which John de Wyborne before held in Barfrestone, of John de St. John; and Richard Harwood held one quarter of a knight's fee here likewise (w). But the former it seems was that part of Wyborne's estate, which comprehended the manor of Barfriston, which after the heirs of Monynbam had deserted their patrimony here, was alienated about the latter end of King Henry the VI.'s reign, to sir Thomas Browne, of Beechworth castle, in the co. of Surry, knt. comptroller of the household to that King, and in his descendants the property of it continued down to sir Thomas Browne, of the same place, knt. whose lands were disgavelled by the acts of the 1st and 8th of Eliza-

(w) This part of the estate afterwards came into the name of Wood, and the heirs of Thomas Wood possessed it in the reign of Philip and Mary.

(y) He was son of William Boys, of Nonington, esq; by Mary, sister and heir of sir Edw. Ringeley, of Knolton, knt.

(z) See an account of the eldest son Thomas, of Hoad Court, and his descendants, in vol. iii. of this Hist. p. 565. Edward was of Holt-street, and left issue several children; John was S. (b) Major Harvey resided first at Elmington in Eythorne, and afterwards at Dane Court, in the adjoining parish of Tilmanstone, under which parish more may be seen of him and of the family of Harvey, being the original place from which they all branched off. He left issue by Elizabeth Poremor, his first wife, a numerous family; of whom Richard, the eldest surviving son, was of Farthingloe, in Hougham; and by his wife, Margaret Hambrooke, of Hougham, left several sons and daughters, of whom Richard, the eldest, was of Barson, and rebuilt this seat as above-mentioned; and Thomas was of Alkbam, gent. Which Richard, the eldest son, now living, married in 1734, Elizabeth Nicholls, of Barham, by whom he has had seven sons and six daughters; of the former, Richard was Vicar of St. Laurence, in Tbanet, and of Eastry, and married Judith Matson, by whom he has a son Richard, late of Bennet College, Cambridge, and now vicar of St. Laurence, in Kent. Henry, the second, is an Admiral of the Royal Navy, and now of Walmer, having married Elizabeth, Charles the I.'s reign, to Anthony Percival, of Daver, knt. comptroller of the customs there, who died in 1646, and lies buried at Denton, with Gertrude his wife, daughter of sir Henry Gibbs, of the co. of Warwick, bart. (whose son John married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of sir Edward Monins, of Waldershare, knt. and bart. (a) in whose heirs this manor continued, till it was at length sold to Major Richard Harvey (b), who was of Eythorne first, and afterwards of Dane Court; his grandson, Mr. Richard Harvey, gent. was of Barson, and having pulled down the antient mansion of this manor, handsomely rebuilt it, and afterwards resided here; but in 1792 he alienated this estate to John Plumtre, of Fredville, esq; the present owner of it (c).

HARTANGER,

written in Domesday, Hertange, is a small manor daughter of Wm. Boys, esq; Lieutenant-Governor of Greenwich Hospital, by whom he has had issue four sons, Henry, a Lieutenant of the Navy, drowned at sea; Richard, William, Thomas; and a daughter Elizabeth, married to William-Henry Boys, Lieutenant of Marines. John, the third son, was likewise a Captain in the Royal Navy, and of Heronden, who died in July 1794, at Portsmouth, of the wounds he received in the glorious naval fight with Earl Howe against the French, on June the 1st preceding, having been made an Admiral, as a reward for his gallant behaviour in it. He married Judith, daughter of Henry Wise, of Sandwich, esq; by whom he has had four sons and three daughters; of the former, Henry Wise, now of Heronden, esq; married Margaret Dilnot; and John is a Lieut. in the Navy; Edward and Richard. Of the daughters, Sarab was the eldest, Mary married Wm. Boteler, late of Eastry, but now of Finglebam, esq; and Fanny married Rob. Curling, of Sandwich, surgeon.

The younger sons of Mr. Richard Harvey, by Judith Matson were, Thomas, Edward, Robert, and Samuel, of Sandwich, brewer, who married Catherine, daughter of Mr. Wm. Maundy, of Sandwich, gent. by whom he has issue. The daughters were, Mary, Fances, Margaret married to Thomas Freeman, Cl. Rector of St. Martin's, and Vicar of St. Paul's, in Canterbury; Elizabeth, married to William Wyborne Bradley, of Sandwich, brewer; and Sarab, married to John Tucker, of Shinglewell, Cl. and Rector of Gravesend, in this county.

(c) The demesne lands of this manor, or farm, for it has now only the reputation of having once been a manor, consists of 86 acres of land. See more of the Plumtres, under Fredville, in vol. iii. of this History, p. 710.

Which is: Radulf, son of Robert, holds of the Bishop Hertange. It was taxed at one sulling. The arable land is. . . . In demesne there is one carucate, and 5 villeins, with 2 borderers, having 2 carucates. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 40 shillings, and afterwards 10 shillings, now 60 shillings. Eddid held it of K. Edward (d).

Four years after taking this survey, the Bishop's estates, on his disgrace, were confiscated; upon which this manor of Hratangre came into the hands of the crown; whence it was afterwards, on the King's new arrangement of the government of Dover Castle, granted to Simon Fitz Adam, by whom it was held as one knight's fee, by barony, of that castle, by the service of ward for the space of fifteen days, for the defence of it.

Of Simon Fitz Adam and his heir Adam Fitzwilliam, this manor was afterwards held by the *Pirot*s. Alan Pirot died seised of it at the latter end of K. Henry the I.'s reign, and was succeeded in it by Robert Pirot, whose heir was Ingelram de Fontibus (e); how long he and his heirs held it, I do not find; but at the latter end of K. Henry III, or the beginning of K.

(d) Next after the above entry is the following one, which, though it refers to no particular estate by name, yet by its being within this Hundred, and placed next to Hartanger, most probably is the description of some estate, if not in this parish, yet adjoining to it. I shall therefore add it here.

(e) It appears by the Register of Ledes Abbey, that Sibilla de Watemle, for the remission of her sins, and for the soul of her Lord Alan Pirot, gave to the church of St. Mary and St. Nicholas, of Ledes, in free and perpetual alms, inter alia, the tythes of Hartangre, which were acknowledged to be of her right; to which were witnesses, Robert Pirot, lord of the fee, Ingelram de Fontibus his heir, and Agnes his wife, and Wido his brother, Simon de Woodeton, &c. which gift was confirmed by Theobald, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of K. Stephen, the Prior and Convent of Christ Church and others. Fol. 5, l. 1. fol. 2, p. 2, l. 16. fol. 5, l. 21. In the 8th year of K. EASTRY HUNDRED.

Edward I.'s reign, William de Hartanger held it. After him it became the estate of Robert de Hardres, as may be seen by the book of knight's fees, and he held it as one knight's fee, of the Honor of Clare. In the 8th year of the next year of K. Edward II. his next successor in it was Reginald de Tondresley; in which name, however, it did not continue long, for in the 20th year of K. Edward III, Richard, son of Richard de Retlinge, Henry Pirot, of Barfrestone, and John de Idcleigh, paid aid for it, as one knight's fee, which Reginald de Tonderfley before held in Hartanger, of the Earl of Arundel (f); after which the whole fee of it became velted in the heirs of Pirot, but how long it continued with them does not appear; but at the latter end of K. Henry the VI.'s reign it was come into the possession of sir Thomas Browne, of Beechworth castle, knt. (g) whose descendant of the same name, in the beginning of Q. Elizabeth's reign, passed it away to Francis Santon, esq; who died seised of it in the 25th year of it, leaving Francis Santon his son and heir (b). He passed it away soon afterwards to Edward Merriweather, second son of Edward, of Shebbertswell, who resided here, and dying seised of it in 1621, anno 20 James I, was buried in this church (i), and in his descendants it continued, till at length about the middle of the last century, it was sold to Pot, and *Mr. Wm. Rot. Esch. ejus an.

(b) By inquisition that year, Francis, son and heir of Francis Santon, was found to hold 60 acres of arable, 10 acres of wood, called Bromley Wood, and 60 acres of pasture, in Berfston, alias Barfston, called Hertanger, and Parets, in Eythorne, Shebbertswell, and Berfston, held of the King as of the castle of Dover, by knight's service; and he had livery of them that year accordingly.

(i) He married Ursula, daughter of Sbrubfale, of Faverfham, by whom he had several sons and daughters; of whom Edward, the eldest surviving son, (Anthony, the eldest, dying in Holland.) married the daughter of Thompson, remarried to John Moyle, of Wye; see his descent in the the heraldic visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619. It appears by the Parish Register, that the Merriweathers resided here from the year 1580 to the year 1647.

vivors, in trust, for them to pay 200*l.* per annum, out of the rents and profits of them, to Christ's hospital, and the remaining produce of them to the hospital of Bethlem, in London; in which trust, for the purposes above-mentioned, this manor continues vested at this time (k).

PRESENT STATE OF BARSON.

BARSON lies on the open hilly downs, with which this neighbourhood much abounds; they are in like manner for the most part arable, the soil upon the hills is chalky and not over fertile; in the valleys it is inclined to clay, and of course better land, though still of a coarse nature. The Court-lodge and church are nearly in the middle of the parish, which has in it, including the street, only 12 houses, and contains about 470 acres of land. This parish as well as its vicinity is exceedingly healthy, and has been already noticed under Coldred. Instances of longevity here are very frequent and as remarkable, of which the reader will find some mention in the note below (l).

At the southern extremity of the parish are a great number of Roman tumuli or barrows, which adjoin the lines of entrenchments at the end of Eytborne parish, all of which have already been noticed under Sbebbertswell above, in which parish most of them lie. There is no fair, nor any parochial charities.

There was in K. Henry III.'s reign a family resident here, who took their name from it; one of whom, Amicia de Barfreston, was a benefactor to the Priory of Davington, as appears by the ledger book of it.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanery of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a small building of great antiquity; the outside is curiously adorned with carve-work in stone, with circular arches and windows, especially at the east end; the west end has a fine circular arch with Saxon ornaments and zig-zag border; and in the inside is another like arch between the body and chancel (m).

p. 201.

The East end of Barfreston alias Barston Church.

(k) See Strype's Stow's survey, b. i, p. 194. This estate, in this parish, consists of 257 acres of arable, 101 acres of pasture, and 10 acres of wood.

(l) In 1700 the Minister resident in this parish was buried at the age of 96. The Minister who preached the funeral sermon was 82. The reader of the service was 87. The parish clerk was the same age, but then absent. The sexton 86, and his wife about 80, and several of the neighbouring parish of Coldred, who attended at the funeral, were above 100 years old; and in the year 1722 there were in this small parish, which consisted only of 58 souls, nine persons, whose ages made 636 years.

(m) This church, so well known to every lover of antiquity, of which so many engravings have been made, is a most curious specimen of Anglo Saxon architecture. It consists of a body and chancel, separated by a circular arch, supported by two elegant wreathed pillars; a row of singular uncouth heads are round the cornice; a beautiful circular window is at the east end; at the foot of the wall are two circular arches, forming recesses, probably for places of sepulture, and not improbably for the founders of the church. The grand south entrance, now partly hid by a modern porch, is most curiously sculptured with rows of figures of various kinds. Niches for statues are all round the building. There is no steeple, a small wooden turret having been taken down a few years since. There is only one bell.

In the chancel is a mural monument, for Thomas Boys, of Barfreston, gent. of the family of Fredville, obit 1599, æt. 72. By his wife Christian, daughter of Thomas Searles, of Wye, he had six sons and four daughters. Arms at the top—Or, a griffin segreant, sable, within a bordure, gules.—Another mural monument for Robert Ewell, Rector and Patron of this parish, one of the six preachers of Canterbury Cathedral, obit 1638, æt. 75. BARSON.

The advowson of this church, which is a rectory, was antiently appendant to the manor; but in the reign of K. Henry VIII. it was become an advowson in gross, and was in the possession of John Boys, of Denton, Attorney General to the Dutchy of Lancaster (n), who held it by knight's service of the King, as of his castle of Dover, and died seized of it in the 35th year of that reign (o); his son William Boys, of Denton, esq; who sold this advowson to his kinsman Thomas Boys, of Aythorne, with the condition of discharging the rent of 2 ls. and 4 d. due to the Queen for the castle guard, and 3 s. 2 d. for lathe silver (p), and in his descendants it continued down till the reign of K. Charles I. when it was alienated to Ewell, from one of which name it was sold (q) to sir Basil Dixwell, who was possessed of it in 1640; since which it has become part of the possessions of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, in Oxford, who are the present patrons of it.

This rectory is valued in the King's books at 7 l. 14 s. 0 d. (r); it is now a discharged living of the clear yearly value of about 30 l. In 1588 it was valued at 60 s. and here were communicants 40. In 1640 it was valued at 50 s. and here were the like number of communicants.

This rectory has been augmented by the Governors of Queen Ann's Bounty with 200 l. and a like sum added to it by the President and Fellows of St. John's College, with which the house, barn, and appurtenances were new built, and a barn, stable and lands were purchased in the parish of Alkham, now of the annual rent of 30 l.

There is a glebe belonging to it of 7 acres of land, of which one is in Nonington.

TILMANSTONE.

NORTH-eastward from Barson, the parish of Eytborne only intervening, lies that of Tilmanstone, in the survey of Domesday written Tilemanestone; but is now usually pronounced Tilmeston.

There are two boroughs in this parish, viz. Tilmanstone and Craythorne (u).

THE MANOR OF TILMANSTONE.

THIS place was part of the antient possessions of the see of Canterbury, and at the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, was held of the Archbishop, by knight's service, by William Folet, and it is thus accordingly entered in that record, under the general title of Terra Militum Archiepi.

Wills (Folet) ten de archiepo Tilemanestone. p. uno solin se defend. In dnio st. 2. car. & 5. bord. oli 20. sol. modo val. 30 solid.

Which is: William (Folet) holds of the Archbishop Tilemanestone. It was taxed at one suling. In demesne there are two carucates, and 5 borderers, formerly it was worth 20 shillings, now it is worth 30 shillings.

After the name of Folet was extinct here, this manor appears to have been held in separate moieties, and in K. Henry III.'s reign was in the possession of sir John de Tiddenden, and sir Roger de Tilmanstone, knts. who held it of the patronage of it by Mr. Eaw. Ewell, who for that year presented a clerk to it, and then probably sold it to Dixwell.

(s) Wills, Prerog. off.

(t) He held this Rectory, with the Vicarages of Shobberswold and Coldred annexed.

(u) The borough for Tilmanstone borough is chosen at North Court, it comprehends within its bounds the church and all the northern part of the parish, viz. the upper street and the three manor houses of Dane Court, North Court, and South Court. The borough for Craythorne borough is chosen at Eastry Court, and comprehends within its bounds the southern part of this parish, viz. Lower street and Barfield farm, in all nine houses, over all which, the Manor of Eastry claims paramount.

Archbishop

TILMANSTONE.

Archbishop by knight's service, as one knight's fee.

That part of it, which was held by the former, afterwards descended down to William de Tiddenden, who died possessed of it in the beginning of K. Edward III.'s reign. After which it appears to have come into the name of Warden, though Margery de Tiddenden, his widow, who survived him, and died anno 23 Edward III, appears by the Escheat Rolls to have had some interest in it. The other part, on the death of sir Roger de Tilmanstone, knt. in K. Edward I.'s reign, without issue, was carried by Motilda, his sister and coheir, in marriage to John de Sandhurst (v), who made a claim of liberties for this manor in K. Edward I.'s reign, the 6th year of it; whose son, John de Sandhurst, of Knolton, succeeded him in it, and died possessed of it in the beginning of K. Edward III.'s reign; and on the aid levied in the 20th year of it, Katherine, late wife of John de Sandhurst and Henry Warden, answered for one fee, which John Sandhurst and William Tiddenden before held in Tilmanstone of the Archbishop.

After which these moieties, from their respective situations, acquired the names of North and South Court; the former of which, called was carried by Christian, daughter and heir of John de Sandhurst and Katherine his wife, in marriage to William Langley, descended out of Warwickshire, whose son William de Langley was afterwards, in her right, of Knolton; and in the 37th year of K. Edward III.'s reign had the former liberties granted to this manor confirmed by inspeximus (w), and in his descendants it continued down to Edward Langley, of Knolton, who died seized of it in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, without issue, having married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Peyton, of Iselbam, in the co. Cambridge, esq; whom he left surviving and in the possession of it. On her death this manor, with her other estates in this county, came into the possession of her brother sir Robert Peyton, of Iselbam, knt. as heir-general of her first hus-

(z) North and South Court are strongly connected as to their manerial rights and jurisdiction, as appears by the warrants delivered to the bailiff to summon the tenants, the number of which amounts to 15 each, all of whom are summoned to both courts, two in each only excepted. Their claim is over the greater part of Tilmanstone borough and some lands contiguous in Eastry.

band above-mentioned, (for she afterwards married sir Edward Ringeley, knt.) by the marriage of his great grandfather John Peyton with Grace, a daughter of Langley. Sir Robert Peyton left two sons, sir Robert, of Iselbam, knt. ancestor of the Peytons, of the co. of Cambridge, and sir John Peyton, knt. to whom he gave this manor, with Knolton, and his other estates in this county (x); his grandson sir Samuel Peyton, of Knolton, knt. was created a baronet, by patent, on June 29, 1611, and died possessed of it in 1623; and his successor, sir Thomas Peyton, bart. alienated it to sir John Narborough, Admiral of the British navy, whose two sons being both lost at sea with sir Cloudeley Shovel, in 1707, their sister, Elizabeth, married to sir Tho. D'Aeth, bart. succeeded to this manor among the rest of their inheritance, and died seized of it in 1744; and his grandson sir Narborough D'Aeth, now of Knolton, bart. is the present owner of it (y).

A Court Leet and Court Baron is held for this manor (z).

THE MANOR OF SOUTH COURT,

being the other moiety of the manor of Tilmanstone, which as above-mentioned was held by the Tiddendens, and afterwards came into the name of Warden; was at length afterwards alienated to White, and John White, merchant of the staple, at Canterbury, afterwards knighted, held it in K. Henry VI.'s reign; one of whose descendants sold it to Cox, and Michael Cox, in the 8th year of K. Henry VII, did homage to Archbishop Moreton for it; whose successor, Tho. Cox, esq; was customer of Sandwich; at the latter end of K. Henry VIII.'s reign (a); and he passed it away by sale to Richard Fogge, afterwards of Dane Court, in this parish, esq; who died seized of it in 1598 (b); his descendant not long afterwards alienated it to Peyton, of Knolton (c), since which this manor has continued down in the same title of ownership, that the manor of South Court last described has, to sir Narborough D'Aeth, of Knolton, bart. the present possessor of both these manors.

(b) It was found by inquisition, that he held it of the Archbishop, ut de palatio suo Cantuar.

(c) See Philipott p. 338.

(d) Notice has been taken above, of the connection of the manerial rights of the two manors of North and South Court. The manor-house of the latter is at present a neat cottage, situated close to the north-east end of the church yard; some stone walls of the ancient mansion and the ruins of the barn still remain; the demesne lands are laid to the farm of North Court, which is a good farm house, they contain altogether 220 acres in this parish and Eastry.

TILMANSTONE.

is a manor and seat in this parish, which had antiently the same owners as North Court above-mentioned, and as such passed from the Tilmanstones to the Sandbursts, and thence in like manner, by marriage to Langley, from which name it passed, by sale, to Fennel, who sold it to Cox, and his descendant Thomas Cox, customer of Sandwich, died seised of it in 1559, being the 2d year of Q. Elizabeth. His heirs in the same reign alienated it to Richard Fogge (e), afterwards of Dane Court, esq; and in whose descendants it continued down to his great-great grandson Richard Fogge, mariner; who sold it about the year 1724, to Major Richard Harvey, then of Elmington, in Eythorne, who rebuilt this seat and afterwards removed hither (f). His grandson, the Rev. Richard Harvey, Vicar of Eastry, alienated it in 1763 to Gervas Hayward, of Sandwich, gent. (g) who in 1765 passed it away, by sale, to Michael Hatton, esq; a Commissary of the army, who afterwards resided here, and greatly improved this seat with additional building. He died possessed of it in 1776, without issue, leaving Alice his wife, daughter of Mr. Lilly, surviving, who afterwards possessed it

(e) See Philipott, p. 338. The more ancient part of the pedigree of Fogge may be seen, in vol. iii. of this history, under Repton, in Ashford, which was the principal seat of this family for many generations.—Richard Fogge above-mentioned, was the eldest son of George Fogge, of Brabourne, esq. by his first wife Margaret, sister of sir Thomas Kempe, knt. the son of sir John Fogge, of Repton, in Ashford, knt. who died in 1533; by Margaret daughter of Jeffry Goldwell, esq. Richard Fogge, esq; above-mentioned, was a Justice of the Peace in Queen Elizabeth's reign, in the 41st of which he died, anno 1598; he married Anne, daughter of Christopher Sackville, by whom he had one son Thomas, of Dane Court, esq; and three daughters, married to Rusborough, Rouse, and Powell; which Thomas married Sybel Floyd, of the co. of Gloucester, by whom he had a son Richard, and three daughters, one of whom married Henry Partridge, of the co. of Gloucester, esq; Richard Fogge the son, was of Dane Court, gent. and died in 1680, leaving issue by his first wife, Anne Darell, of Bethanger, two sons, and two daughters, viz. Edward, of Tilmanstone, gent. who married in 1677, Mary, daughter of Thomas Cripps, of Maidstone, gent. by whom he had no issue. Jane married in 1684, to the Rev. Strangford Viol, of Upminster, in the co. of Essex, from whom the Jacobs of Faversham are descended. Cicely to the Rev. Edward Busnall, Rector of Snaue, and Christopher Fogge, captain of a man of war, who died in 1708, æt. 58, and was buried in Rochester cathedral.—By his second wife, Richard Fogge left issue, one son John Fogge, who on failure of issue by his two brothers-in-law above-mentioned, succeeded to Dane Court. He died in the neighbourhood of Maidstone, having married Elizabeth Gray, who died at Dane Court, by whom he had issue Richard Fogge, who sold Dane Court about the year 1724. He was a mariner, and died aboard the fleet, at Gibraltar, in 1740. He married Elizabeth Rickaste, a sister of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, in Sandwich, who died and resided here till her death in 1791; upon which it came, by the directions of Mr. Hatton's will, to her niece Mrs. Hannab Lilly, who in 1795 carried it in marriage to Rawson Aislabye, esq; and he is the present owner of it (b).

A Court Baron is held for this manor (i).

THE MANORS OF GREAT and LITTLE BARVILLE are two estates in the southern part of this parish, the original name of which was Barfield. They seem antiently to have been one and the same estate, which was as early as K. Edward IV.'s reign, in the possession of the family of Harvey, and is the first place that I find mentioned of their residence or possessions in this county, from whence the several branches of them distributed throughout it, especially in these eastern parts. Richard Harvey died possessed of Barfield in 1472, anno 13 Edward IV. as did his son John, who was styled of Barfield, in 1479. He left issue two sons, Robert and Nicholas, who possessed it after their father's death, in moieties; the former died in 1518, and by his will, directed his moiety to be sold; after which there is no further mention of them here, and the pedigree of the family describes Robert Harvey (k), son of Robert above-in 1762, æt. 73; by whom he had one only daughter, Elizabeth, the wife of William Cock, a poor shepherd, now living in a wretched hovel, at Eastry.

The other children of John Fogge were, John, who died single. Anne, married to Thomas Austin, of Brimdale in Eythorne, whose son came to an unlucky end; and Jane, married to Ralph Goodchild, now of Sandwich, blacksmith. They bore for their arms the same coat as those of Repton, viz.—Argent, on a fess sable, 3 mullets of the field, between 3 annulets of the second.

(f) See an account of the family of Harvey, and its several branches, under Great Barville below, which was their original residence in this parish.

(g) He bore for his arms—Argent, on a pale sable, 3 crescents of the 1st.

(b) The demefne lands of this manor consist of 127 acres. It appears that Dane Court was once held of the manor of Knolton, but this has not been acknowledged for some time past.

(i) This manor receives quit-rents from one messuage only in Tilmanstone, from lands at Hacklinge, in Wortb, at and near Statenborough in Eastry, and Waterford in Erwell.

(k) Robert Harvey, son of Robert above-mentioned, his father's share in Barfield being sold, removed to Norbourne, where he died in 1568. He left issue by Margery his wife, 3 sons, of whom Thomas the eldest was of Eythorne, and died in 1580, leaving by Julian Denne his wife, several sons and daughters, Robert was the second son.

Richard was the youngest son, of Norbourne, he died in 1600, having married Elizabeth Axfens, by whom he had several sons and daughters, of whom Thomas, the eldest, of West Studdal, will be mentioned below, and Richard married Elizabeth Verrier, by whom he had among other children, Thomas, whose son Thomas was of Eythorne, where he died in 1734, æt. 83, leaving by Sarah Godfrey his wife a son Thomas, who was of Eythorne Court. He died in mentioned as of Norborne. Most probably this manor was at the time above-mentioned divided, but in what proportions does not appear, between these two brothers, Robert and Nicholas Harvey, and afterwards took the names of Great and Little Barville; by which, however, it should seem, that the former of them was the largest portion of the two. Great Barville soon after the above period became the property of the family of Crayford, of Mongeham, one of whom, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth purchased Little Barville of the heirs of Pix, or Picks, as they were sometimes spelt, several of whom are mentioned in the register of this parish, but without any distinction as gentlemen; and thus these estates became again united in the possession of one and the same owner.

In the descendants of Crayford this estate continued, till K. Charles II.'s reign, when Wm. Crayford, of Mongeham, esq; dying without issue (k), devised it to his wife Ursula, who remarrying with Nordasb Rand, esq; intitled him to the possession of it, and he in the year 1720 sold it to sir Robert Furnese, of Waldershare, bart. in whose descendants it continued down to Catber- 1765, æt. 82, having married Elizabeth Squires, of Thanet, by whom he had a son, Tho. Harvey, late of Eytborne Court, who married Mary Griggs, by whom he had six sons and four daughters; of whom Philip is the present occupier of Eytborne Court, and resides there.

To return to Thomas Harvey, of West Studdal, (the eldest son of Richard Harvey, of Norborne, by Elizabeth Austens.) who married Elizabeth Pepper, and died in 1660, leaving issue a numerous family, of whom Richard the eldest was of Selton, as will be further mentioned below, and Hemy was of Kettington, where he died in 1672, leaving issue six sons and three daughters; of the former, Thomas, the eldest, who died in 1702, was father of Thomas Harvey, late of Tunbridge, esq; deceased; of whom, see vol. ii. of this history, p. 355.

Richard Harvey, of Selton, (the eldest son of Thomas Harvey, of West Studdal, by Elizabeth Pepper, died in 1675, leaving by Sarah, his first wife, (his second wife was Jane Baker.) one son Thomas, who was likewise of Selton, and died in 1696. He married Anne Hougham, of Barton, by whom he had eleven children; of the sons, the eldest was Richard, of Dane Court, who will be further mentioned below; Solomon was of Selton, and died in 1733, having married Catherine Jull, by whom he had several children of whom, Solomon was the eldest; and Robert was of London, and married Elizabeth Mayo, by whom he left issue.

Richard Harvey above-mentioned, the eldest son of Tho. by Anne Hougham, was usually styled Major Harvey. He was first of Elmton, in Eytborne; and afterwards having purchased and rebuilt Dane Court, he removed to it. He died in 1732, having been twice married, first to Elizabeth Paramore, by whom he had a numerous issue; from which descended the Harveys of Barson, Alkham, Dover, Sandwich, and of St. Laurence, in Thanet, as is fully noticed under Barson above, p. 199. His second wife was Frances, daughter of Captain Stephen Pilcher, and widow of Pettit, by whom he had four sons and three daughters; of whom, John will be mentioned below; Mary married rinc, sister and coheir of his son sir Henry, who carried it in marriage, first to Lewis Earl of Rockingham, and 2dly to Francis, Earl of Guildford, to whom, on her death in 1766, she devised this estate. He died seized of it in 1790, and his grandson the Right Hon. George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, is the present possessor of it. (l)

Twelve acres of land here belong to the alms houses, in Dover, for distressed mariners; and about five acres to Boys's, alias Jesus Hospital, in Canterbury, devised by the will of sir John Boys, knt.

THE PRESENT STATE OF TILMANSTONE.

This parish is pleasantly situated in a vale, adjoining to an open uninclosed country, with which the contiguous parishes abound. The soil, like that of the neighbourhood, is variable; the vallies more fertile than the higher grounds, which are generally thin and light. The northern part of the parish is more fertile than the southern part of it; the whole contains more than 1100 acres of land, 44 houses, and about 240 inhabitants; it is esteemed exceedingly healthy (m). There are two streets, or villages, called Upper William Jeffrys, Alderman of Bristol; and Catherine married William Tournay.

John Harvey, the son above-mentioned, was of Dane Court, esq; and died in 1759, having married Margaret Maude, by whom he had issue Richard, of whom below, Tcke, John, Marg. Mary, Frances married to Wm. Brett, esq; Capt. of the Royal Navy; and Catherine, married to John Hayward, late of the Black Friars, in Cant. gent. deceased.

Richard Harvey, the eldest son, was of Eastry, Cl. and died in 1772, having had by Catherine Springett, his wife, three sons and five daughters, viz. John Springett Harvey, esq; of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law; Richard Maude Harvey; Richard Harvey, of Trinity College, Cambridge; Catherine; Mary married in 1774 to John Boys, of Betsfanger, gent. Sarah married to James Joines, of Gravesend, gent. Frances, Anne, Elizabeth, and Anne-Maude.

The Coat of Arms assumed by the several branches of this family, are those of their female ancestor Austyn, or as the name is sometimes spelt Astyn, viz. Argent, on a chevron gules, 3 crescents or, between 3 lions gambes erased, sable, armed of the 2d.

(k) See more of the Crayfords, under Mongeham, above, p. 137.

(l) This estate, now known by the name of Barfield only, in one single occupation, contains about 300 acres of land, all in this parish, including the demesne lands of Little Barville, the buildings of which are pulled down; the scite of them is still to be traced, in a rough pasture ground on the north side of the highway, (formerly called St. Margaret's street.) leading from Dover to Knolton.

Part of the lands of this estate are said in antient records, to be within the district of Stormesdon, in this parish; but no such name is known, or has been ever heard of, by the inhabitants of the parish or its neighbourhood.

(m) This appears from the Parish Register, in which the ages of numbers of persons buried, are from 80 to 100 years. The Register begins in 1558, and on an average throughout it, the births exceed the burials full a third part in number.

and Lower Street, in the former of which is the church, and about half a mile westward the estate called New Purchase (n); at the same distance north-west from the church is Dane Court; and in a line at a like distance, still further, Thornton, adjoining to Eastry and Knolton parishes (o); all situated in the northern district of it. In the southern district is the Lower Street; and still further southward, Barville, and Elmton.

The parish is long and narrow, being about a mile from east to west, and near two miles from north to south. It is rather an unfrequented place, and has nothing further remarkable in it. There is no fair, nor any parochial charities in it.

William Boys, esq., third son of William Boys, of Nonington, esq.; by Mary Ringeley, resided in this parish in Q. Elizabeth's time, in the 31st

(n) This estate lies all in Tilmanstone, southward, and contiguous to the demesne lands of Dane Court. It formerly belonged to the Fogges, and was probably part of those demesnes, and was sold off, as the name of it seems to imply. After this it came into the possession of the family of Neve. Gabriel Neve, of Hayes, near Bromley, in this county, inherited it from his father, and dying possessed of it, devised it to his son Philip Neve, of London, esq.; who about 1780 fold it to Mr. Bourn, of Brighthelmstone, in Suffex, and he in 1792 alienated it to Mr. Thomas Allen, of Dover, the present owner of it.

It contains 240 acres of land.

(o) The house of Thornton farm is divided by the boundary line of the parishes of Tilmanstone and Eastry; it contains 100 acres in this parish, and 120 in Eastry. It is part of the Knolton estate, having formerly belonged to the Peytons, and now to Mr. Narborough D'Aeth, of Knolton, bart.

(p) In the chancel, against the east wall, is a brass plate let into a square piece of marble; on it are the figures of a man and woman, on his side one son, on her's three daughters, all kneeling, with the arms of Fogg, with a label of 3 points, impaling Sackville, with a crescent, for Richard Fogg, esq.; and Anne his wife, no date. (The Register says, Richard Fogg, esq.; buried Sept. 13, 1598.) A gravestone for Richard Fogg, esq.; father of 14 children, famous for his poetry, and skill in heraldry, obit 1680, æt. 74; his wife Anne, of the family of the Darrells, of Calehill, viz. daughter of Nicholas Darrell, S. Strangford Viol*, late Rector of Upminster, in Essex, and Jane his wife, daughter of Richard Fogg, esq.; married Edward Jacob, surgeon, of Canterbury, by whom she had eight children, four of whom survived, Sarah, Edward, Richard, and Anne; she died March 16, 1719, æt. 33; also for Edward Jacob aforesaid, and Mary, daughter of John Chalker, of New Romney, gent. his second wife; she died October 10, 1727, æt. 33, leaving a daughter Mary. THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS parish is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, is a small mean building, consisting of a body and chancel, with a square tower at the west end, very low, but formerly higher, having been taken down a few years ago; there is one bell in it (p). This church was antiently part of the possessions of the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, to whom it was appropriated by Archbishop Stephen Langton, about the end of K. John's reign; the Archbishop reserving to himself and successors, the nomination and institution of a Vicar, and at the same time he endowed the vicarage, decreeing and ordaining, Wi. Tonge, now obliterated. In the north window are remaining four figures; 1st, a man in armour with a shield, having a plain cross on it, on his breast, in the attitude of thrusting a lance through the jaws of a beast lying at his feet; probably, by the cross designed for St. George; 2d, a young man crowned; 3d, an older man crowned, with a globe and sceptre in his hands, and seemingly weeping; 4th, an antient man kneeling, full bearded, on his shoulder a child holding a globe and sceptre, to which he is looking up. In the south window is the figure of a man bearded, with a palmer's bonnet on, and staff, holding in his right hand a book. In the body of the church, a marble monument against the north wall, near the chancel, and inscription, shewing that in the vault underneath are deposited the remains of Michael Hatton, esq.; of Dane Court, obit Aug. 1, 1776, æt. 60; also Mrs. Alice Hatton his widow, obit December 31, 1791, æt. 86. Arms—Azure, a chevron between three wheat sheaves or, impaling gules, 3 lilies argente stalked and leaved vert. On a tablet near the above, Alice Lilly, late of Dane Court, obit Feb. 1, 1791. Arms of Lilly as before. A monument against the same wall for Thomas Michael Tierney, late student of Brazen Nose College, Oxford, and son of Thomas Tierney, of London, by Savine his wife, obit February 11, 1770, at Arras, in France, on his return to England, æt. 19; (This young man was a relation of Mr. Hatton's.) On seven different gravestones, are memorials for the Smiths, resident at Thornton, from the year 1632 to 1664.

In the windows of this church were formerly much more painted glass, viz. the figure of a man kneeling, his hair cut round, his hands joined in a praying posture, having his sword and spurs on, and a surcoat with this coat quarterly, 1st and 4th, Per pale and fess indented, argent, gules; 2d and 3d, a fess, in chief 3 balls; and fronting him those of his two wives, kneeling in a like posture, with their hoods on and surcoats; on the first those arms—Per fess, in chief 2 lions rampant; on the 2d, sable, a bend or, in the sinister corner in chief, a leopard's face. In the following page is a drawing of them.

And these coats in the different windows—Sable, a griffin segreant, or;—Gules, on a chevron or, 3 lions rampant sable, a label of 5 points argent, for Cobham;—Gules, a bend ermine between 2 martlets or, and Per pale and fess indented or and azure, for Langley.

Henry VIII.'s reign; when, by an act specially passed for the purpose, their hospital, with all their lands and revenues, were given by it to the King and his heirs for ever (r).

Notwithstanding the above reservation of the nomination and institution of a Vicar to this church by Archbishop Langton, it should seem that the patronage of this vicarage, as well as the appropriation of this church, remained with the knight's hospitallers, and came into the King's hands on the suppression of their order, and remained there till the year 1558, being the last of Philip and Mary, when the advowson of the vicarage was granted among others to the Archbishop (s); and the appropriation likewise was granted to him in the third year of Queen Elizabeth, on the Queen's having taken into her hands certain manors and lands, parcel of the

The vicarage of Tilmanstone is valued in the King's book at 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* (t) It is now a discharged living, and is of the yearly value of 45*l.* In 1588 here were 109 communicants, in 1640 there were the like number of communicants, and it was valued at 50*l.* In 1740 it was of the value of 60*l.*

Archbishop Wake, in 1719, on the petition of Nicholas Carter, Vicar of this church, gave licence for him to take down the old vicarage house and to erect a new one (u). This vicarage is at present endowed with one half of the great tythes, with a vicarage house, and garden only, for the Vicar's use. The remaining half of the day, Cbenoltone, in other ancient records Cxelton, and afterwards both Knoldon, and Knolton, taking its name from its situation on the knoll of a hill.

There is no Rorsholder appointed for this parish.

THE MANOR OF KNOLTON.

At the time of taking the survey of Domesday, in the 15th of the Conqueror's reign, this manor was part of the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Baieux, under the general title of whose lands it is entered in it as follows.

Turstin ten de epo. Cbenoltone p. uno Solin se desid Tra e. . . . In dno sunt. 2 car. cu. 2. bord. T. R. E. & post. val. 4. lib. modo. 7. lib. & tam reddit. 8 lib. Eduuard tenuit. de rege. E.

Which is: Turstin holds of the Bishop, Cbenoltone. It was taxed at one suling. The arable land is In demesne there are 2 carucates, with 2 borderers. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, and afterwards, it was worth 4 pounds, now 7 pounds, and yet it pays 8 pounds. Eduuard held it of K. Edward.

Four years after the taking of this survey, the Bishop was disgraced, and all his estates confiscated to the crown, whence the seignory of this manor seems to have been granted to Wm. de Albineto, or Albini, surnamed Pincerna, who had followed the Conqueror from Normandy, in his expedition hither (b). Of his heirs it was afterwards held by knight's service, by the family of Perot, or Pyrot, as the name was frequently spelt; one of whom, Alanus Pyrot, held it in King Henry III.'s reign, by knight's service, of the Countess of Ewe, to whom the seignory paramount of it had descended from William de Albineto above-mentioned (c); sr Ralpb Pyrot, his successor, was possessed of this manor in the next of K. Edward I. in the 13th year of which he had a grant, dated at Alton Burnel, October 4th, of free warren in all his demesne lands of Knoltone, among others in other different counties (d).

Shereve, anno 52 Henry III; but I rather suspect they had respect to some other place of this name, and not to this manor.

(d) Philipott, p. 208, in his account of Knolton, says, that this manor was held by the family of St. Ledger; one of whom, Hugh de St. Ledger, was one of the Recognitores Magnæ Assise in the reign of K. John, in the 4th year of which he appears to have held this manor; that his son John de St. Ledger, in the 12th year of K. Henry III, exchanged his whole estate of Knoldane with Reginald de Cornbill; whose third son Reginald, in the 56th year of that reign, transferred his whole right in the manor of Knoldane to the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, in Canterbury, by whom it was almost immediately afterwards conveyed over to Perot.

This latter part indeed, appears by a register book of the above priory, carta 2008, which in some measure corroborates Philipott's account; but I doubt much, if this manor

KNOLTON.

His eldest son Master Thomas Perot, Cl. is recorded in the Chartularie of this manor as Lord of Knolton, by the gift of his father, in the 33d year of that reign (e), and he died seised of it in the 4th year of K. Edward III. (f) He was succeeded in it by Henry, who was of Knolton, and served the office of Sheriff of this county at the latter end of the 6th year of that reign, though before the end of it (g) John de Sandburst appears to have been lord of it (b). He left an only daughter and heir Christian, who married William de Langley, but he died in the year last mentioned (i); so that this son of the same name became intitled to the inheritance of it; and accordingly, in the book of aid, made anno 20 Edward III. William Langley is charged with two knight's fees, which Ralph Perot before held in Knolton and Ringleton, of the honor of Ewe.

He resided at Knolton, and was Sheriff of this county in the 21st year of that reign, and from the 23d to the 25th and part of the 26th year manor of Knoldane, above-mentioned, in the possession of the St. Ledgers and Cornbills, was this manor of Knolton; for in one of the charters in the above register, it is said to have been held of the fee of William del Bec and Eustace de Burne, being entered in it, under the title of Carta Manerii de Hicbam. Further, K. Edward II, in his 10th year, granted to the above Prior and Convent, free warren within their manor of Knoldane, among the rest of their possessions, at which time and long before, that priory, according to the Knolton chartularie, could not be possessed of it, as there is by it an uninterrupted chain of ownership in the family of Perot, from the end of K. Henry III.'s reign, to the beginning of that of K. Edward III.

(e) At the same time, he gave to his youngest son Alanus, the manor of Ringelton, in Woodnesborough. Many others of this family are mentioned in the above chartularie, from K. Henry III.'s reign, to that of K. Edward III.

(f) Rot. Esch. ejus an.

(g) See vol. i. of this history, p. lxxxii. The Perots bore for their arms—Argent, a fess sable, in chief, 3 escallops; as appears by the coat, quartered with those of Langley on the front, and in the windows of this church.

(b) He was son of John de Sandburst, by Matilda, sister and coheir of Roger de Tilmanstone. In the chartularie above-mentioned, in the same deed, mention is made of Richard, son of Adam atte Halle de Pyleholte. And in another, dated anno 10 Edward III, Adam de Aula, or atte Halle, and Christian his wife, gave to John de Sandburst and Katherine his wife, and William de Langley and Christian his wife, their lands at Pilbolte, where Richard, son of the aforesaid Adam, then dwelt. Witnesses, Richard de Retling, John Pyrot, Richard de Knolton, and others, of which name of Knolton, several are mentioned in the chartularie, from the reign of K. Edward I. to that of K. Henry V.

In regard to Pilbolte abovementioned, there is a wood in Eastry parish, formerly called Pilbolte, now usually Pilot Wood, belonging to the owners of Knolton, and it is probable, there was once a hamlet there, as many wells have been discovered in and about it. The road leading from Knolton, that is, the high road to Beisbanger, in the north-east part of this parish next to Eastry, was likewise called Pilholt, per quamdam viam vocat. Pilbolte, says the old records of the bounds of Eastry parish.

of it (k); as was his descendant of the same name, in the 4th year of K. Henry V, at which time he was a Justice of the Peace for this county, an office then of no small estimation (l). His son William Langley was of Knolton, esq; in the next reign of K. Henry VI. and married Lucia, widow of John Norton, daughter and coheir of Marcellus at Lese; by whom he had issue John Langley, esq; who kept his shrievalty at his manor house of Knolton, in the 20th year of K. Henry VII. (m) He died in the 11th year of K. Henry VIII. seised of this manor (n), leaving the possession of it to his son Edward Langley, of Knolton, esq; who died without issue, having married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Peyton, of Peyton Hall and Iselbam, in the co. of Cambridge, esq; whom he left surviving and in the possession of it; she afterwards remarried sir Edward Ringeley, knt. who became entitled to it in her right, and afterwards resided at Knolton (o).

This chartularie of Knolton manor, mentioned so frequently above, is an ancient Mss. containing a curious collection of deeds and charters relating to this manor, and the several owners of it, in whose possession it was formerly, but afterwards in the hands of John Philipott, alias Somerjet, esq; and very lately in the library at Surrenden.

(i) He was descended from a family of this name, in the co. of Warwick, viz. from Geoffry de Langley, a man of great power and office in K. Henry III.'s reign, who lived to a great age, not dying till the 2d year of K. Edward I. He had a younger son named Geoffry, who was in the Welsh expedition with his brother Walter, and from him probably were the Langleys of this county immediately descended. See an account of them and their pedigree, in Dugdale's Warwick, p. 135, 136.

William de Langley above-mentioned, was son of Benedict de Langley, who had other children, viz. John, Margaret, and Agnes.

(k) See vol. i. of this history, p. 83, 84.

(l) Ibid. p. 86. He left three sons; Richard, whose widow Anne remarried William Darell, esq; Walter, and William, who married the widow of John Norton, esq; as above-mentioned, which last died anno 2 Henry VII. as appears by the Escheat Rolls of that year.

The arms of Langley-Per pale and fess indented, azure and or, are carved on the stone roof of the cloysters at Canterbury; and they are painted on the glass of the windows of the church of Knolton, as will be further mentioned below; and they were formerly in the windows of the churches of Sheldwich, Tilmanstone and Nonington, those in the latter having on them a bend comonly, argent and gules. Their arms were formerly over the door-way of the house of Knolton, which was re-edified by one of them, but there are none such remaining now.

(m) See vol. i. of this history, p. 89.

(n) By the Escheat Roll of that year, he was found to hold this manor of the Dean of the chapel of St. Stephen, Westminster, by knight's service.

(o) He died without issue in 1543. By his will he directed to be buried in our Lady church, in Sandwich, in Jhesus chapel, on the left hand side the altar, and mentions in it Dame Jane his wife, then surviving, his castle and household stuff at Knolton; and at Sandwich, in his great house, called the King's lodgings, in St. Clement's parish,

KNOLTON.

Upon her death this manor, with other estates in this county, became the property of her brother Sir Robert Peyton, of Ijelham, knt. as heir-general at law of her first husband above-mentioned, by the marriage in K. Henry VI.'s reign, of his great grandfather John Peyton, of Peyton Hall, with Grace, daughter of Langley (p).

Sir Robert Peyton died in 1518, leaving by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of sir Robert Clere, of the co. of Norfolk, knt. two sons; sir Robert, who was of Ijelham, knt. ancestor of the Peytons, baronets, of the co. of Cambridge; and sir John Peyton, knt. to whom he gave Knolton and his other estates in this county.

The latter afterwards resided at Knolton, where he died in the 2d year of Q. Elizabeth's reign, having married Dorothy, daughter of sir John Tyndal, knt. of the Bath, at the Coronation of Q. Anne Boleyn, by whom he had issue two sons, sir Thomas Peyton, of whom below, and sir John Peyton, knt. governor of the Tower of London, and two daughters, married to Monins, and Engeham.

Sir Thomas Peyton, the eldest son, was of Knol- his brother Edward Peyton, his sister Mary married to William Boys, of Nonington, esq; (who became his heir) and his brother William Ringeley. If the Lady Jane above-mentioned was the sister of Langley, the name Elizabeth, above in the text, must be erroneous in all the pedigrees of Peyton; and it should seem not to have been a second wife, from his being at that time possessed of Knolton House. The reader will likewise observe the mention of his brother Edward Peyton.

(p) Philipott, p. 209, who says, p. 260, ex Autographis penes Dom. Thom. Peyton, Baronetum. That the family of Peyton, and that of Ufford, were primitively one, and bore the same paternal coat, and were known by the same name, both being deduced from the same root and original, only Peyton was the eldest house. Now the foundation on which the change of the name was established was shortly this—John de Peyton flourished in K. Henry II.'s reign, and left four sons; of whom, the three eldest were named, John, Robert, and John. To John the eldest, he gave his manor of Peyton, in the co. of Suffolk; to Robert his second son, he gave his manor of Ufford, in Suffolk likewise, who on that account altered his name from Peyton, and assumed that of Ufford; and from him this name of Ufford was transferred to the Earls of Suffolk, and other persons eminent in the several ages in which they lived. John, the third brother, by deed sans data, demised all his interest in Boxford to his eldest brother John de Peyton, by which name he then called him; which justifies not only the antiquity, but the seniority of this family of Peyton, before that of Ufford; and from this John de Peyton, the elder brother above-mentioned, were the Peytons of Cambridgeshire, and of Knolton, baronets, originally descended.

But the mullet in the first quarter of the arms of the Peytons, of Knolton, being the distinction born by the third house, seems to contradict the assertion, as does a Mss. pedigree in my hands, attested by the officers of arms, which begins the descent from William de Mallet, a noble Norman, who came into England with the Conqueror; whose third son was lord of Sibton and Horham, in the co. of Suffolk; his second son Reynold was sewer to Roger Bigod, Earl of ton, knt. he died in 1611, having married Anne, daughter of sir Martin Calborpe, knt. Lord Mayor of London, by whom he had one son Samuel, and four daughters, married to Darell, Clarke, Hales, and Banister. Sir Samuel Peyton, knt. the son, resided at Knolton, and was created a baronet by patent, dated June 29th, in the same year in which his father died, which was the 10th of K. James I. He died in 1623, leaving by his wife Maria, second daughter and coheir of sir Roger Aston, knt. three sons and two daughters (q); of whom, sir Thomas the eldest son, was of Knolton, bart. (r) and dying in 1684, was buried in Westminster Abbey, having had three wives; the first of whom was the daughter of sir Peter Osborn, knt. Governor of Guernsey; the second was Cecilia, widow of sir William Swan, knt. and the third Jane, daughter of sir William Monins, bart. He left issue by his second wife a son Thomas, who died in his life time in 1667 without issue, and four daughters, who became his coheirs; viz. Dorothy married to sir Basil Dixwell, bart. Catherine to sir Thomas Longueville, bart. Elizabeth to Wm.

Norfolk; and his eldest son and heir John, was lord of the manors of Peyton Hall, in Ramsvold, and in Stoke Neyland; which last left issue Robert de Ufford, his eldest son, so surnamed from his manor of Ufford, in the co. of Suffolk. Peter de Peyton, his second son, so surnamed from his manor of Peyton Hall, in Ramsvold; and John de Peyton, his third son, so surnamed from the manor of Peyton Hall, in Stoke Neyland and Boxford, in the co. of Suffolk, whose son and heir was sir John de Peyton, of Stoke Neyland, knt. from whom, by direct descent, in the 5th degree, was John Peyton, of Peyton Hall and Wyken, esq; who died in K. Henry VI.'s reign, having married Grace, daughter and heir of Langley, as above-mentioned.

He left issue by her, Thomas Peyton, esq; who died in 1484, having been twice married, first to Margaret, daughter and heir of sir John Barnard, of Ijelham, knt. and 2dly to Margaret, daughter and coheir of sir Hugh Francis, knt. by the latter descended the Peytons of St. Edmundsbury, and of the co. of Warwick, Worcester, and Gloucester; by the former he had issue a son Thomas, who died in his life time, leaving issue by Joane, only daughter and heir of Thomas Eard, or Yerd, of Denton, in this county, esq; a son sir Robert Peyton, of Ijelham, knt. and a daughter Elizabeth, married first to Edward Langley, of Knolton, esq; and secondly to sir Edward Ringeley, knt. as above-mentioned.

(q) His widow remarried in 1626 Edward, son of Wm. Cholmeley, of Highbgate, esq; Of the sons, sir Thomas was the eldest; Samuel died without issue; and Edward left a son, who was killed in battle in Flanders. Of the daughters, Anne married Henry Oxenden, of Herne; Elizabeth; and Margaret married Thomas Osborn.

(r) Sir Tho. Peyton, bart. was an active Royalist, during the civil wars in K. Charles I.'s time, and was with other Kentish gentlemen, defeated near Maidstone. For his conduct in public affairs, he suffered imprisonment, being committed to the Tower on April 6, 1655, in which he continued till the 10th of August following, during which time a band of soldiers was sent down to search his house at Knolton.

Longueville, of the Inner Temple, esq; and Esber to Thomas Sandys, esq; (s)

After his death, this manor descended to his four daughters and coheirs (t), who joined with their trustees, not long afterwards, in the sale of it to sir John Narborough, knt. Admiral of the English fleet, who was by K. James II. created a baronet by patent, dated Nov. 5, 1688 (u). He had issue two sons, sir John Narborough, bart. and James Narborough, esq; who were both lost with their father-in-law, sir Cloudefley Shovel, knt. Admiral of the Royal Navy, being ship-wrecked on the rocks of Scilly, with several other ships of the Squadron, in his voyage from Toulon, on Oct. 22, 1707 (v).

On their death unmarried, Elizabeth their only sister and heir entitled her husband Thomas D'Aeth, of North Cray, esq; to the possession of this manor and seat, among the rest of their estates in this county (w).

He was afterwards, by patent, dated July 16, 1716, created a baronet, and resided at Knolton, the mansion of which he rebuilt, and died possessed of it in 1744, leaving issue by his first wife above-mentioned, who died in 1721, one son Narborough, and five daughters, Elizabeth, married to the Hon. Henry Dawney, third son of Henry Viscount Downe; Elbanna to Capt. Fitzgerald, an officer in the French service; Sophia to William Champneis, of Boxley, esq; Bethia first to Herbert Palmer, esq; and 2dly to John Cosnan, esq; whom she survived, and is now of Wingham College; and Harriet, who married Josiah Hardy, esq; by his second wife Jane, daughter of Walter Williams, of the co. of Monmouth, he

There is a pedigree of this family in the Heraldic visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619.

(t) On his widow's remarrying, the possession of this seat came into the hands of his Executor, who devised it for a term of years to Edward, Lord Wolton, and he resided at it; and at his death in 1628, devised his interest in it to his wife, Lady Margaret Wootton.

(u) He bore for his arms—Gules, a chief ermine.

(v) See vol. i. of this history, p. 207.

(w) He was descended from William D'Aeth, who was of Dartford, in this county, and Principal of Staple's Inn, in K. Edward VI. Q. Mary, and Q. Elizabeth's reign. He died in 1590, and lies buried with his two wives in Dartford church. By Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Vaughan, of Erith, who was of K. Edward VI.'s Household, he had three sons, Thomas, William, and John, and five daughters; of the sons, Thomas was of Dartford, and died in his father's life time, having been twice married, first to Joane, daughter of William Head, by whom he had issue, as will be mentioned below, and 2dly Maudlin, daughter of Stokes, of London, by whom he had an only daughter Alice; William the second son was of London, and left a son Thomas.

left one son Francis, afterwards in holy orders and Rector of this parish.

He was succeeded in title and estate by his eldest son sir Narborough D'Aeth, of Knolton, bart. who married in 1738, Anne, daughter and heir of John Clarke, of Blake Hall, in the co. of Essex, esq; and died in 1773; she survived him, and left an only son and heir, the present sir Narborough D'Aeth, now of Knolton, bart. the possessor of this estate.

A Court Baron is held for this manor, which is very extensive, for it not only claims over this parish, but great part of Cbillenden and Woodnesborough, part of Eythorne and of Denton.

PRESENT STATE OF KNOLTON.

The parish of Knolton is very small; it contains only 432 acres. Almost the whole of it, except a very few acres, is the property of the D'Aeth family, whose mansion in it is beautifully situated on the knol of a hill, having an extensive prospect over the neighbouring country and adjacent channel (x). The Park in which it stands contains about 200 acres. It is finely wooded, and the soil of it, as well as the rest of the parish, is exceedingly healthy and dry, though being rather inclined to chalk, it is not very fertile. The lands are mostly arable and uninclosed; the hill and dale is frequent and continual throughout it; the whole arrangement of them forming a most pleasing and cheerful view to the eye. Adjoining to the gardens, at the back of the mansion, is the church and parsonage house, and beyond this, on the declivity of the hill northward, close to sons and two daughters; of whom, Thomas the eldest son was of Dartford, gent. and married Mary, daughter of Barton, serjeant at law, by whom he had three sons, Adrian and Abel, who died without issue, and Thomas D'Aeth, of London, gent. who at length became his heir, and married Elbanna, daughter of sir John Rolt, of Milton Ernest, in the co. of Bedford, knt. by whom he had issue one son Thomas, who was of North Cray, esq; and created a baronet in 1716, as above-mentioned.

They bear for their arms—Sable, a griffin passant volant, or; between 3 crescents argent; and for their crest, a griffin's head or, holding in its beak a trefoil vert.

There is a pedigree of this family in the Heraldic visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619.

The offices, which are exceedingly commodious, were built by sir Tho. D'Aeth in 1715. In the old part of the house are the arms of Peyton on a chimney piece; and the arms of Peyton, impaling Calborpe, in every window, &c. which sufficiently point out the builder, but the arms of Langley are no where in the house.

Longueville, of the Inner Temple, esq; and Esther to Thomas Sandys, esq; (s)

After his death, this manor descended to his four daughters and coheirs (t), who joined with their trustees, not long afterwards, in the sale of it to sir John Narborough, knt. Admiral of the English fleet, who was by K. James II. created a baronet by patent, dated Nov. 5, 1688 (u). He had issue two sons, sir John Narborough, bart. and James Narborough, esq; who were both lost with their father-in-law, sir Cloudefley Shovel, knt. Admiral of the Royal Navy, being ship-wrecked on the rocks of Scilly, with several other ships of the Squadron, in his voyage from Toulon, on Oct. 22, 1707 (v).

On their death unmarried, Elizabeth their only sister and heir entitled her husband Thomas D'Aeth, of North Cray, esq; to the possession of this manor and seat, among the rest of their estates in this county (w).

He was afterwards, by patent, dated July 16, 1716, created a baronet, and resided at Knolton, the mansion of which he rebuilt, and died possessed of it in 1744, leaving issue by his first wife above-mentioned, who died in 1721, one son Narborough, and five daughters, Elizabeth, married to the Hon. Henry Dawney, third son of Henry Viscount Downe; Elbanna to Capt. Fitzgerald, an officer in the French service; Sophia to William Champneis, of Boxley, esq; Bethia first to Herbert Palmer, esq; and 2dly to John Cosnan, esq; whom she survived, and is now of Wingham College; and Harriet, who married Josiah Hardy, esq; by his second wife Jane, daughter of Walter Williams, of the co. of Monmouth, he

(s) The Peytons of Knolton, bore for their arms—Sable, a cross engrailed, or; in the first quarter a mullet pierced, argent.

There is a pedigree of this family in the Heraldic visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619.

(t) On his widow's remarrying, the possession of this seat came into the hands of his Executor, who demised it for a term of years to Edward, Lord Wotton, and he resided at it; and at his death in 1628, devised his interest in it to his wife, Lady Margaret Wootton.

(u) He bore for his arms—Gules, a chief ermine.

(v) See vol. i. of this history, p. 207.

(w) He was descended from William D'Aeth, who was of Dartford, in this county, and Principal of Staple's Inn, in K. Edward VI. Q. Mary, and Q. Elizabeth's reign. He died in 1590, and lies buried with his two wives in Dartford church. By Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Vaugban, of Erith, who was of K. Edward VI.'s Household, he had three sons, Thomas, William, and John, and five daughters; of the sons, Thomas was of Dartford, and died in his father's life time, having been twice married, first to Joane, daughter of William Head, by whom he had issue, as will be mentioned below, and 2dly Maudlin, daughter of Stokes, of London, by whom he had an only daughter Alice; William the second son was of London, and left a son Thomas.

Thomas D'Aeth, esq; the eldest son of William, as above-mentioned, left issue by Joane Head his first wife, three left one son Francis, afterwards in holy orders and Rector of this parish.

He was succeeded in title and estate by his eldest son sir Narborough D'Aeth, of Knolton, bart. who married in 1738, Anne, daughter and heir of John Clarke, of Blake Hall, in the co. of Essex, esq; and died in 1773; she survived him, and left an only son and heir, the present sir Narborough D'Aeth, now of Knolton, bart. the possessor of this estate.

A Court Baron is held for this manor, which is very extensive, for it not only claims over this parish, but great part of Cbillenden and Woodnesborough, part of Eythorne and of Denton.

PRESENT STATE OF KNOLTON.

The parish of Knolton is very small; it contains only 432 acres. Almost the whole of it, except a very few acres, is the property of the D'Aeth family, whose mansion in it is beautifully situated on the knol of a hill, having an extensive prospect over the neighbouring country and adjacent channel (x). The Park in which it stands contains about 200 acres. It is finely wooded, and the soil of it, as well as the rest of the parish, is exceedingly healthy and dry, though being rather inclined to chalk, it is not very fertile. The lands are mostly arable and uninclosed; the hill and dale is frequent and continual throughout it; the whole arrangement of them forming a most pleasing and cheerful view to the eye. Adjoining to the gardens, at the back of the mansion, is the church and parsonage house, and beyond this, on the declivity of the hill northward, close to sons and two daughters; of whom, Thomas the eldest son was of Dartford, gent. and married Mary, daughter of Barton, serjeant at law, by whom he had three sons, Adrian and Abel, who died without issue, and Thomas D'Aeth, of London, gent. who at length became his heir, and married Elbanna, daughter of sir John Rolt, of Milton Ernest, in the co. of Bedford, knt. by whom he had issue one son Thomas, who was of North Cray, esq; and created a baronet in 1716, as above-mentioned.

They bear for their arms—Sable, a griffin passant volant, or; between 3 crescents argent; and for their crest, a griffin's head or, holding in its beak a trefoil vert.

There is a pedigree of this family in the Heraldic visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

KNOLTON is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Clement, is a small building, consisting of one isle and a chancel, having a small wooden tower at the west end, in which is a clock and one bell (a).

sinister, Peyton impaling Langley, quartering as over the north door; all which are evidently works of a later date than the building of the church itself, which was erected by the Langleys.

Weever, in speaking of an antient tomb in this church, for one of the Ringeley family, certainly meant Langley; such a tomb might exist in his time, and was removed or cased over, when the large altar monuments were erected, which remain at present. Sir Edward Ringeley had only an interest in this estate for life, and was buried at Sandwich, as has been already mentioned.

This tomb of Langley had on it his portraiture kneeling on a cushion, his hands joined and uplifted, his hair cut round, his sword and spurs on, and his surcoat covered with the arms of Langley; all long since destroyed. Underneath is a drawing of it from a Miss. of Peter Le Neve.

*The Effigy of Langley,

The following monuments and memorials remain in this church. In the chancel, an oval monument against the east wall for John Langley, esq; Lord of Knolton and Patron of this church, descended from the ancient family of the Langleys, connected first by kindred and afterwards by marriage to the Peyton family, to which, on account of his affection, as well as for a very moderate sum of money, he transferred his estate in perpetual inheritance, obiit anno 10 Henry VIII. 1519. This monument was erected by Tho. Peyton; arms at top, Langley, 1st, Argent, a fess sable, in chief 3 ogresses; 2d, Gules, a cross-croset argent; 3d, Gules, an eagle displayed argent. A correspondent monument against the east wall on the other side of the altar for John Peyton, second son of sir Robert Peyton, of Iselbam, in the co. of Cambridge, knt. and heir of his uncle John Langley; he had issue by Dorothy, daughter of sir John Tyndall, K. CHILLENDE N, WRITTEN in the survey of Domesday, Cilledene, lies the next parish westward from Knolton, taking its name from its cold and low situation. The manors of Knolton and Woodnesborough claim over part of this parish, as does the manor of Adisham over another part of it.

A borsholder is appointed for this parish by the Justices, at their petty Sessions for this Division of the Latb of St. Augustine.

THE MANOR.

This place at the time of taking the survey of Domesday, was part of the possessions of Odo, (c) Prynne, p. 594.

(d) (e) (g) They were likewise Rectors of Cbillenden; the latter lies buried in the chancel of this church.

(h) He was half-brother to the late fr Narborough D' Aeth, bart. In 1767, he was collated to the Vicarage of Godmersham, which he held with this Rectory, but resigned it in 1771, on being presented to the Rectory of Eythorne, which he likewise held with this Rectory.

(i) He resigned this Rectory, on being collated to that of Iwechurch.

The arable land is In demesne there is nothing now, but 9 villeins have there 2 carucates and an half. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor it was worth 60 shillings, and afterwards 30 shillings, now 40 shillings. Godwin held it of K. Edward, and 5 others. Thomas Osbern put their lands into one manor.

Four years after the taking of this survey, this estate, on the Bishop's disgrace and the confiscation of his estates, came into the hands of the crown.

After which is came into the possession of a family, who took their surname from it, and there is mention made in deeds, which are as ancient as the reign of K. Henry III. of John de Cbillenden, Edward and William de Cbillenden, who had an interest in this place; after this name was become extinct here the Bakers of Caldbam, in the parish of Capel, near Folkestone, possessed it (k), in whom this manor continued till K. Henry VI.'s reign, when it passed by sale to Hunt, whose descendants remained entitled to it for two or three descents, when one of them alienated it to Gafen, of Aputon in Ickham (l), in which name it continued for some time, and till it was at length sold to Hammond, of St. Alban's, in Nonington (m), in whose descendants it has continued down to William Hammond, late of St. Alban's, but now of the White Friars, in Canterbury, esq; who is the present owner of this manor (n).

PRESENT STATE OF CHILLENDE N.

The parish of Cbillenden is very small, containing only 160 acres, and the whole rents in it amount to little more than 250*l.* per annum. There are three farms in it, one belonging to Mr. Hammond described above, and the other two to fir Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, bart. (o) The high road from Canterbury to Deal, leads through the village, called Chillenden Street, which has 22 houses in it; on the south side of which, on a small eminence, stands the church. It lies low in a bottom, the soil is chalky, and the lands are arable, open and uninclosed. It has nothing further worth notice in it. A fair is held here on Whit Monday, for pedlary, &c. There are parochial charities.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

CHILLENDEEN is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Bridge. The church, which is dedicated to All Saints, seems antient, it is a mean building, very small, having a square tower at the west end, in which there is only one bell (p). It has nothing further worth mention in it.

This church was part of the possessions of the Priory of Ledes, in this county, being given to it by William de Northwic, in the presence of Archbishop Baldwin, about the latter end of K. Henry II.'s reign (q); but the Prior and Convent never obtained the appropriation of this church, but contented themselves with the reservation of a pension of eight shillings yearly from it, to the use of their infirmary; in which state it continued till the dissolution of the Priory in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, when the advowson, together with the above pension, came with the rest of the possessions of the Priory, into the hands of the Crown, in which the patronage of this church continues at this time.

But the annual pension of 8s. was soon afterwards settled by the king in his 33d year, among other premises, on his new founded dean and chapter of Rocheſter, part of whose possessions it still continues.

This rectory is valued in the king's books at 5l. (r) It is now a discharged living, and is of about the clear yearly value of 26l. (s) In 1588 it

(o) One of these farms is called Great Chillenden, and contains 156 acres of land, of the yearly rent of 110l. In 1650, it belonged to George Crayford, gent. whose widow Margaret, in 1661, conveyed it to Andrew Read, gent. who settled it on Mary his wife, after which it came to their niece Mary March, who carried it in marriage to John Frencham, Cl. and their son John Frencham resided here for some years, and in 1756 sold it to fir Brook Bridges, bart. whose son, now of Goodnestone, bart. is the present owner of it. With this estate is included a smaller farm, of 28 acres, called Little Chillenden. The other farm belonged to the St. Legers, of Deal, of whom it was purchased by the late fir Brook Bridges, bart. and now belongs to his son above-mentioned.

(p) It consists of a body, and one chancel. In the windows, are remains of very handsome painted glafs. In the north window of the body is still legible DNS. NICHVS and in another place, in larger letters MDEN; probably the termination of Chillenden. The only was valued at 40l. communicants 77. In 1640 it was valued at the same, communicants 70.

There are three acres of glebe. The present Incumbent has built a tolerable good parsonage house on the scite of the antient one. There is no land within this parish exempt from the payment of tythe.

E A S T R Y,

THE next parish north-eastward from Knolton is Eastry, written in the survey of Domesday, Eſtre and Eſtrei, and in other ancient records Eaſtreye and Eaſtria. At the time of taking the above survey, it was of such considerable account; that it not only gave name, as it does at present, to the hundred, but to the greatest part of the latb in which it stands, now called the lath of St. Augustine(y). There are two boroughs in this parish, viz. the borough of Hurdenden, which is within the upper half hundred of Downhamford, and comprehends the districts of Hurdenden, Selson and Skrinkling, and the borough of Easfry, the borough of which is chosen at Easfry Court, and comprehends all the rest of the parish, excepting so much of it as lies within that part of the borough of Felderland, which is within this parish.

THE MANOR OF EASTRY.

This place in the time of the Saxons appears to have been part of the royal domains, accordingly Simon of Durham, Monk and Precentor of that church, in his history, styles it villa regalis, quæ vulgari dicitur Easterige pronuncione (z). The royal ville or manor, which in the vulgar pronunciation was called Easterige, which shews the antient pre-eminence and rank of this place, for these villæ regales or regiæ, as Bede calls them, of the Saxons, were usually placed upon or near the spot, where in former ages the Roman stations had been before; and its giving name both to the lath and hundred in which it is situated corroborates the superior consequence it was then held in.

How long it continued among the royal domains, I have not found (a); but before the termination of the Saxon Heptarchy, the manor of Easfry was become part of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, and it remained so till the year 811, when Archbishop Wilfred exchanged it with his Convent of Christ Church for their manor of Bourne (b), since from the Archbishop's possession of it called Bishopshourne. After which, in the year 979 king Ægelred, usually called Ethelred, increased the church's estates here, by giving to it the lands of his inheritance in Estrea (c) to the use of the Monks serving God in it, free from all secular service and fiscal tribute, except

(a) Egbert, king of Kent, was in possession of it about the year 670, at which time the king's two nephews, Ethelred and Ethelbright, sons of his father's elder brother Ermenfrid, were kept by him, as writers say, by their uncle in his palace here and were murdered by his order, at the instigation of one Thunnor, a flattering sycophant, lest they should disturb him in the possession of the crown. After which Thunnor buried them in the King's Hall here, under the cloth of estate, from whence, as antient tradition reports, their bodies were afterwards removed to a small chapel belonging to the palace, and buried there under the altar at the east end of it, and afterwards again with much pomp to the church of Ramsay Abbey. To expiate the king's guilt, according to the custom of those times, he gave to Domneva, called also Ermenburga, their sister, a sufficient quantity of land in the Isle of Thanet, on which the repelling invasions and the repairing of bridges and castles (d); and in the possession of the Prior and Convent above-mentioned, this manor continued at the taking of the survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, anno 1080, being entered in it under the general title of Terra Monachorum Archiepi; that is, the land of the Monks of the Archbishop, as follows.

In Lest de Estrei. In Estrei Hund.

In demesne there are 3 carucates and 72 willeins, with 22 borderers, having 24 carucates. There is one mill and a half of 30 shillings, and 3 salt pits of 4 shillings, and 18 acres of meadow. Wood for the pannage of 10 hogs.*

After which, this manor of Easfry continued in the possession of the Priory, and in the 10th year of K. Edward II. the Prior of Christ Church obtained a grant of free warren in all his demesne lands in it, among others (e), about which time it was valued at 65*l.* 3*s.* (f) after which K. Henry VI. in his 28th year, confirmed to the Priory the above liberty of free warren, and granted to it a market, to be held at Easfry weekly on a Tuesday, and a fair yearly, on the day of St. Matthew the Apostle and Evangelist (g); in which state it continued till the dissolution of the Priory in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII. when it came into the king's hands, where it did not remain long, for he settled it, among other premises, in the 33d year of his reign, on his new created Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, part of whose possessions it continues at this time.

(i) The house is large, partly antient and partly modern, having at different times undergone great alterations. In the south wall are the letters T. A. N. in flint, in large capitals, being the initials of Thomas and Anne Newinſon. Mr. Isaac Bargrave, father of the present leſſee, new fronted the house, and the latter in 1786 put the whole in complete repair, in doing which, he pulled down a considerable part of the ancient building, conſiſting of ſtone walls of great ſtrength and thickneſs, bringing to view ſome Gothic arched door ways of ſtone, which proved the houſe to have been of ſuch conſtruction formerly, and to have been a very antient building. The chapel, mentioned above, is at the eaſt end of the houſe. The eaſt window, conſiſting of three compartments, is ſtill viſible, though the ſpaces are filled up, it having for many years been converted into a kitchen, and before the laſt alteration by Mr. Bargrave the whole of it was entire.

(k) In the 34th year of K. Henry VIII. Chriſtopher Newinſon, L.L.D. was leſſee of them, whoſe grandſon ſir Roger Newinſon held them in 1617; Henry Palmer was leſſee in 1641; Mr. Thomas Bargrave in 1647, in whoſe deſcendants the leaſe has continued down to Isaac Bargrave, eſq; the preſent leſſee.

The Newinſons reſided at the Court Lodge of Eaſtry for many years. They were originally of Brigend, in Wetberell, in the co. of Cumberland; John Newinſon had two ſons, Roger and Nicholas, whoſe deſcendants were of Sheriff's Hatton, in the co. of York. Roger the eldeſt left two ſons, Rowland, of Brigend, and Richard, of Newby, in the co. of Westmoreland, whoſe ſon Stephen Newinſon, L.L.D. was Prebendary of Canterbury, and Chancellor of Norwich, and died in 1581; Rowland was father of Chriſtopher Newinſon, L.L.D. leſſee of this eſtate, who died in 1551 and lies buried in Adiſbam church; by Anne his wife, he left Thomas Newinſon, eſq; who reſided at Eaſtry Court, and died in 1590, leaving by Anne, daughter of Richard Teobald, of Stonepit, remarried to Edward Fagg, of Ewel, who died in 1694, ſix ſons and four daughters; of whom, Roger was the eldeſt, and Thomas the ſecond died in 1616; ſir Roger Newinſon, knt. the eldeſt ſon, reſided at Eaſtry Court, where he died in 1625, leaving a numerous iſſue by his wife Mary Bladder; of whom Thomas Newinſon, eſq; died in 1634, having before his death alienated his intereſt in theſe premiſes in Eaſtry. They all lie buried in this church, as will be further mentioned below.

Chriſtopher Newinſon, L.L.D. in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, had a younger brother Richard, father of Chriſtopher Newinſon, of Canterbury, who died in 1617, leaving an only daughter and heir, married to Roberts, of Canterbury.

He lies buried, with others of his family and of the Roberts's, in St. Alphege's church, in that city. Sir Roger Newinſon, of Eaſtry, knt. had a third brother Nicholas Newinſon, of London, whoſe ſon Chriſtopher died in 1637, and left Elizabeth his wife ſurviving, who reſided at the Black Friars, in Canterbury, where ſhe died in 1633, and was buried in St. Alphege's church. THE FAMILY OF BARGRAVE.

The family of Bargrave, alias Bargar, was originally of Bridge, in this county, and afterwards of the adjoining pariſh of Patricbourne; where John Bargrave, eldeſt ſon of Robert, built the ſeat of Bifrons and reſided at it, of whom and his poſterity an account has already been given in vol. iii. of this hiſtory, p. 721. Isaac Bargrave, the 6th ſon of Robert above-mentioned, and younger brother of John, who built Bifrons, was anceſtor of the Bargraves of Eaſtry; he was S. T. P. and Dean of Canterbury, a man of ſtriſt honour and high principles of loyalty, for which he ſuffered the moſt cruel treatment. He died in 1642, having married in 1618 Elizabeth, daughter of John Dering, of Egerton, eſq; by Elizabeth, ſiſter of Edward Lord Wotton, the ſon of John Dering, of Surrenden, eſq; by Margaret Brent.

By her he had iſſue Thomas Bargrave, of Eaſtry Court, gent. of whom below; Robert, who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Robert Turner, of Canterbury; Anne married firſt in 1636 to Thomas Ceppin, Cl. and 2dly to ſir Henry Palmer, of Howlets, knt. Mary married to John Smith; Hester married firſt to Francis Nowers, 2dly to Francis Turner; and Elizabeth married to *Edward Wiſford, D. Thomas Bargrave, of Eaſtry Court, gent. the eldeſt ſon, married Honora Eſcott, re-married to Josiah Roberts, of Canterbury, gent. and died in 1682, by whom he had Charles Bargrave, of Eaſtry Court, gent. who married Elizabeth, daughter of Whitwick, who died in 1732, as he did in 1713; by her he had three ſons and five daughters, viz. Isaac Bargrave, of Eaſtry Court, eſq; of whom below; Charles, who married Auſtin, of Sheppy; and Robert Bargrave, of Eaſtry likewiſe, gent. who died in 1779, et. 84, having married firſt Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Francis Leigh, of Hawley, knt. who died in 1737, et. 32; and 2dly in 1753, Elizabeth Baſſett, of Canterbury, widow; leaving by his firſt wife one ſon, Robert Bargrave, of Dolers Commons, Proſtor, who died in 1774, et. 39, having married Rebecca, daughter of Sayer Rhudde, L.L.D. by whom he had one ſole daughter Rebecca, who became the heir-general of this family, and in 1776 married James Wyborne, of Hull, in Sholden, gent. now living, by whom ſhe has iſſue ſeveral children.

SKRINKLING, alias SHINGLETON,

the former of which is its original name, though now quite lost, is a small manor at the south west extremity of this parish, adjoining to Nonington.

It is within the borough of Heronden, or Hardenden, as it is now called, and as such, is within the upper half hundred of Downhamford. This manor had antiently owners of the same name; one of whom, sir William de Scrinkling, held it in K. Edward I.'s reign, and was succeeded by sir Walter de Scrinkling his son, who held it as one knight's fee, of Hamo de Crevequer (l), and in this name it continued at the time of the aid, levied in the 20th year of K. Edward III. when Martin, and Alicia sister of Bartholomew de Scrinkling, paid aid for it, as one fee in Skrinkling, which John Skrinkling before held of Hamo de Crevequer.

Soon after which it appears to have been alienated to William Langley, of Knolton, in whose successors it continued, till Edward Langley, of Knolton, esq., dying without issue in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, Elizabeth his widow, daughter of Thomas Peyton, of the co. of Cambridge, esq.; became possessed of it, and afterwards entitled her second husband sir Edward Ringeley, knt. to the possession of it, together with Knolton, where he afterwards resided; but upon her death this manor became the property of her brother sir Robert Peyton, of Iselbam, knt. as heir-general at law of her husband above-mentioned, by a marriage in K. Henry VI.'s reign of his great-grandfather John Peyton, of Peyton Hall, with Grace, a daughter of Langley, and in sir Robert Peyton's descendants of the elder branch it continued down to sir Thomas Peyton (m), of Knolton, Isaac Bargrave, of Eastry Court, esq.; the eldest son, died in 1727, having married Christian, daughter of sir Francis Leigh, of Hawley, knt. who died in 1772, by whom he had one son Isaac, born in 1721, and two daughters; of the latter, Christian married Claude Clare, of Hythe, clerk; and Frances married John Broadley, of Dover, surgeon, who died in 1784, æt. 79; she survived him and was afterwards of Canterbury, widow. Isaac Bargrave, esq.; the son, was bred to the profession of the law, and was an eminent attorney and solicitor in London, from which he has retired for some years, and now resides at Eastry Court, of which he is the present lessee. He married in 1751 Sarah, eldest daughter of George Lynch, of Canterbury, M. D. who died at Herne, in this county, in 1787, without issue.

bart. who dying without male issue in K. Charles II.'s reign, his daughter and coheir and their trustees joined in the sale of it to sir John Narborough, bart. whose two sons being drowned at sea in 1707, Elizabeth, their sister and heir, married to Thomas D'Aeth, of North Cray, esq.; but afterwards of Knolton, bart. intitled him to the possession of it, in whose descendants it has continued down to his grandson sir Narborough D'Aeth, now of Knolton, bart. who is entitled at present to the inheritance of it (n).

There was a chapel belonging to this manor, the ruins of which are still visible in the wood near it, which was esteemed as a chapel of ease to the mother church of Eastry, and was appropriated with it by Archbishop Richard, Becket's immediate successor, to the Almory of the Priory of Christ Church, in Canterbury (o); but the chapel itself seems to have become desolate many years before the dissolution of the Priory, most probably soon after the family of Skrinkling became extinct; the Langleys, who resided at the adjoining manor of Knolton, having no occasion for the use of it (p).

HERONDEN, alias HARDENDEN,

now usually called Hernden, is a district in this parish, situated about a mile northward from Singleton, within the borough of its own name, the whole of which is within the upper half hundred of Downhamford.

It was once esteemed as a manor, though it has not had even the name of one for many years past, the manor of Adisham claiming over it. The mansion of it was antiently the residence of a family of the same name, who bore for their arms—Argent, a heron with one talon erect, gaping for breath, sable (q); one of which family

(n) See Knolton above, p. 211.

(o) See Battely's Somner, pt. ii, p. 96.

(p) This estate consists of 200 acres of land in Eastry, and 200 acres in Nonington, of the yearly rent of 120*l.* It pays no quit rent to any other manor.

The chapel stood in Singleton wood, near the south-east corner; the foundations of it have been traced, though level with the surface, and not easily discovered. It stood east and west, in length within, 38 feet, in breadth 19, without any distinction of body and chancel. There is now on this estate only one house, built within memory, before which there was only a solitary barn, and no remains of the antient mansion of it.

Pilbolt wood, mentioned above under Knolton, is on this estate, southward of the house, and adjoining the north side of the high road from Deal to Canterbury.

(q) These arms are on a shield, which is far from modern, in Maidstone church in this county, viz. 1st and 4th, Heronden as above; 2d and 3d—Sable, 3 escallop shells, 2 and 1 argent, impaling argent, on a fess 3 falcons volant or; and in the west window of Lincoln's Inn chapel is a coat of arms of a modern date, being that of Anthony Heronden, esq.; argent, a heron azure, between 3 escallops sable.

lies buried in this church, near the chancel; and in the time of Robert Glover, Somerset Herald, his portrait and coat of arms, in brass, were remaining fixed to his tombstone, but since torn away. The coat of arms is still extant in very old rolls and registers in the Heralds office, where the family is styled Heronden, of Heronden, in Eastry; nor is the name less antient, as appears by deeds which commence from the reign of K. Henry III. which relate to this estate and name (r); but after this family had remained possessed of this estate for so many years it at last descended down, in K. Richard II.'s reign, to sir William Heronden, knt. (s) from whom is passed, most probably either by

(r) There were several branches of this name dispersed in different parts of this county, all of whom bore in their coat armour a heron, but in various attitudes, and with different additions and colours. In Tenterden there is a mansion still called by their name, the antient possessors of which bore—Argent, a heron volant, azure; and there are still remaining in other parts of West Kent, several of the names of Heronden and Heruden, who, though now of no higher rank than yeomen freeholders, are probable derived from the original stocks either of Eastry or Tenterden.

(s) Philipott, p. 148. In the Parliament of 7th Richard II. sir William de Heronden, knt. (whether him above-mentioned, I know not for certain, but probably so) and others were openly accused before the Lords, for receiving divers sums of money for giving up several holds and fortresses, without the assent of the King or his General, to the amount of 20,000 franks of gold; in regard to which they made excuse and submitted to the King's mercy; to which the Chancellor replied and gave judgment, that they should pay back to the king what they had received, and remain in prison till they had made fine and ransom with the king, and with them sir William Heronden was committed to prison, his body and goods to be at the king's pleasure. Cotton's Records, p. 293.

(t) Philipot says, it passed to Richard Boteler in marriage with the female heir of sir William Heronden; but if so, his descendants would have quartered the arms of Heronden, which they never did; nor would the several grants of arms and records in the Heralds office have been entirely silent on this head.

(u) The grandson of Richard Boteler, or Butler, above-mentioned, was John Boteler, who lived in K. Henry VI.'s reign and resided at Sandwich, of which town he was several times mayor, one of the Burgesses in Parliament, and one of the canopy supporters at the marriage of K. Henry VI. and lies buried in St. Peter's church, in Sandwich; his son Richard, of Sandwich likewise, had a grant of arms in 1470, anno 11th Edward IV. by Thomas Holm, Norroy, viz. Gyronny of 6, sable and argent, a covered cup or, between 3 talbot's heads erased and counterchanged of the field, collared, gules, garnished of the 3d. He died in 1477, æt. 33, and was buried in the above church; his son John Boteler was mayor of Sandwich in 1504, and dying in 1507 was buried with his ancestors in the same church. It appears by his will, that he died seised of this manor of Heronden, with Poulton and other lands in this neighbourhood, which descended to his son Richard, who was of Sandwich, of which he was twice mayor, and dying in 1545, anno 37 Henry VIII. was buried as above; on his death, his son Henry Boteler succeeded to these estates. gift or sale, to Richard Boteler, or Butler, of Sandwich, gent. (t)

He was descended from those of this name, formerly of Butler's fleet, in Ash, whose ancestor Thomas Pincerna, held that manor in K. John's reign, and was probably so called from his office of chief butler to that Prince; whence his successors assumed the name of Butler, alias Boteler, or as they were frequently written Botiller, and in allusion to their office bore for their arms—One or more covered cups, differently placed and blazoned (u).

In the descendants of the above-mentioned Richard Boteler, this estate of Heronden, or Hernden, as it was usually called, continued

Sandwich, of which he was twice mayor; he rebuilt the mansion of Heronden, to which he removed in 1572, being the last of his family who resided at Sandwich. He had the above grant of arms confirmed to him, which had been made to his ancestor Richard Boteler in K. Edward IV.'s reign, and died in 1580, being buried in St. Peter's church; he was twice married, first to Alice, daughter of Robert Iden, of Sandwich, who died in 1559, by whom he left Richard, of Heronden; his second wife was Elizabeth Thompson, of Canterbury, widow of John Masters, who died in 1603, by whom he left several children; of whom, William Boteler, was of Rocheester, esq. to whom he gave Poulton manor; and John, to whom he gave Hackling; which William Boteler died in 1614 and was buried in Eastry church, having married Elizabeth, daughter of sir William Crayford, of Mongeham, knt. who died in 1675, and was buried in Higham church, by whom he had Henry, of Goodnestone, and other children.

Richard Boteler, of Heronden, eldest son of Henry, by his first wife as above-mentioned, resided at this seat. In 1589 he obtained a grant from Robert Cook, Clar. of a new coat of arms, viz. Argent, on 3 escutcheons sable, 3 covered cups or. Ten years after which, wishing as it should seem, to shew himself a descendant of the family of this name, seated at Graveney, in this county, but then extinct, he obtained in 1599 a grant of their arms from William Deltbic, Garter, and William Camden, Clar. to him and his brother William, viz. quarterly, 1st and 4th, sable, 3 covered cups or, within a bordure argent; 2d and 3d, Argent a fess chequy, argent and gules, in chief three cross-crosets of the last, as appears (continues the grant) on a grave-stone in Graveney church. It likewise recites, that the said Richard and William were the sons of Henry, late of Heronden, who was the son of Richard, who was the son of John, who was the son of Richard, to whom arms were granted in the reign of K. Edward IV.

This Richard Boteler died in 1600, æt. 50, and was buried in Eastry church, and had engraved in brass on his grave-stone there the above coat, granted in K. Edward IV.'s time, as well as this last granted in 1599, conjoined in one shield, as well to shew his right to them both, as to substantiate to posterity, his kindred and connexion with the Botelers of Graveney. He married Catherine, daughter of Alexander Hawker, of Challock, who died in 1616, by whom he had among other children, Jonathan of Heronden, and Thomas of Rowling, afterwards his brother's heir; which Jonathan Boteler above-mentioned, resided at Heronden, where he died unmarried in 1626; upon which this estate descended to his only surviving brother Thomas, who removed to Heronden, which estate, by his extravagant course down to Jonatban Boteler, the eldest son of Richard Boteler, of Hernden, who died unmarried possessed of it in 1626, upon which it came to his next surviving brother Thomas Boteler, of Rowling, who upon that removed to Hernden, and soon afterwards alienated that part of it, since called to Mr. Henry Pannell, from whom soon afterwards, but how I know not, it came into the family of Reynolds (v); from which name it was about 40 years since alienated to John Dekewer, of Hackney, esq; who dying in 1762, devised it to his nephew John Dekewer, of Hackney, esq; the present possessor of it (w).

ANOTHER PART of this estate of Hernden, since known by the name of

was afterwards sold by Thomas Boteler above-mentioned to Capell, from whom it passed into the family of Johnson (x), in which it continued till Mr. Edward Johnson alienated it to Daniel Kelly, of the Upper Farm, in Hernden, gent. who by his will in 1724 devised it to his second son Richard Kelly, since whose death in 1768 (y), it has come to his two sons Richard and William Kelly, who are the present possessors of it (z).

course of life, he wasted, and in a great measure alienated; he died in 1651, having married Joane, daughter and co-heir of Thomas Apleton, of Eastry, who died in 1674, by whom he had Jonatban, of Goodnestone, Cl. who by Anne his wife left a son Thomas, who died at sea, unmarried; Catherine married to John Full, of Woodnesborough; Henry who died single; Richard Boteler, of Brook-street, in this parish, whose descendants will be there mentioned; and Jane.

There is a pedigree of Butler, alias Boteler, of Hernden, in the Heraldic visitation of Kent, anno 1619.

(v) In the rental of Adisham manor in 1693, John Reynolds is said to hold of that manor, a messuage and 116 acres of land in Hernden, in Eastry, late Boteler's, and afterwards Pannell's.

(w) See more of the Dekewers, under Sandwich below. This farm contains 116 acres, and is of the yearly value of 75*l.* to which has always belonged a district of land in Tickenhurst, valued at 20*l. per annum*.

(x) In the rental of Adisham manor, anno 1693, Thomas Johnson, gent. is said to hold of it a messuage and 116 acres of land in Eastry, late Boteler's, and afterwards Capell's.

(y) He lies buried in this church. See more of their burials in St. Mary's church, in Sandwich.

The Kellys bore for their arms—Argent, 2 lions rampant combatant, gules, holding in their paws a castle in chief, vert.

(z) This farm consists of 116 acres, and is of the yearly value of 54*l.*

(a) His other sons were John the eldest, and Jeremy the second son; to the former of whom, he devised by his will an annuity of 40*l.* and to the latter of 20*l.* charged on this estate. Daniel was the third son above-mentioned; Solomon the fourth son, to whom he devised his chief mansion and malt-house, in St. Peter's, in Sandwich; Benjamin, and David, the 5th and 6th sons.

HERNDEN, alias THE UPPER FARM, remained in the possession of Thomas Boteler above-mentioned, at the time of his death in the year 1650, and was directed by his will to be sold for the benefit of his surviving wife Joane and his five children, and according in 1657 it was conveyed by her, Jonatban their eldest son, and Henry and Richard their youngest sons and coheirs, to John Kelly, of Ash, yeoman, who by his will in 1669, devised it to his youngest son Daniel Kelly (a), who died possessed of it in 1733, and by will devised it to his eldest son of the same name, on whose decease in 1751, it descended to his only son Wm. Kelly, of Hernden, who in 1766 pulled down the antient mansion of Hernden, and built the present handsome house on the scite of it, and in 1784 alienated it to John Harvey, of Sandwich, esq; then a Captain, of the Royal Navy, who occasionally resided at it; he died at Portsmouth on June 30, 1794, in consequence of the wounds he received in the glorious naval engagement with the French fleet, on the 1st of that month preceding; by his will he devised this estate to his wife Judith for life, remainder to his eldest son Henry Wise Harvey, esq; which latter now resides here (b).

Mr. Richard Austin, of Eastry, by his will in 1585, ordered his body to be buried in the church of Eastry, and devised to his eldest son Vincent, inter alia, his house and lands in the quylledge of Harnden, in Eastry.

See an account of the descent of Captain Harvey, his marriage and issue, above under Barson, p. 199 (b); where as well as under Eythorne, p. 197, he is, through misinformation, styled Admiral, the rank of which, though intended for him, was prevented by his death. Captain Harvey was born at Elmington, in the neighbouring parish of Eythorne, in 1741; his singular courage and attention to his duty marked his conduct throughout life, and never shone more conspicuous than in the memorable engagement of June 1, above-mentioned, in which being commander of the Brunswick, of 74 guns, he sustained the fire of three French line of battle ships, and destruction seemed to menace him on every side; but in this terrible conflict, by his intrepid bravery, his ship singly sunk one superior in force, and left two others absolute wrecks upon the water; which individual conduct may truly be admitted to have contributed very materially to that victory, upon which the fate of his country in a great measure depended, and will ever render his memory dear to it. His remains were interred in a vault in Eastry church on July 5, having been attended to the gates of Portsmouth by Earl Howe and the principal officers of the fleet with much solemnity. Most of the principal inhabitants of the neighbouring town of Sandwich, in which he had for some time resided, and had served the office of mayor of it in 1774, appearing in mourning on the day of his interment, as a mark of their respect for his memory.

See an account of Captain Harvey's preferments in the navy, in Gen. Mag. p. 673, and p. 954, for 1794.

This hamlet contains six houses, the three farm houses above-mentioned, and three cottages.

A seal gold ring for the thumb or fore-finger, weighing 19 penny weights, with this motto, Do not, for to repent, and the antient coat of arms granted, as above described, in K. Henry IV.'s time to Richard Boteler, engraved on it, was found on the tooth of an harrow, in the grounds in the south part of Hernden bottom, a few years since, and is now in the possession of William Boteler, of Eastry, esq;

The hamlet of Selson, with the estates of Gore and Wells, being the remaining part of this borough, will be further mentioned below.

STATENBOROUGH,

written in the survey of Domesday, Estenburge, and in other antient records, Stepenberga, and long since Statenborough, is a seat on the northern confines of this parish, which was at the time of taking the above survey in the Conqueror's reign, part of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, being held of the Archbishop by knight's service, under which title it is thus entered in it.

Which is: William Folet holds Estenberge of the Archbishop, and it was taxed at half a suling, and there be has 12 villeins with one carucate and an half.

After which the record continues, that it was, with Buckland and Fingletham, valued in the time of King Edward the Confessor at 40 shillings; when the Archbishop received them, 10 shillings, now 30 shillings.

How this estate passed afterwards, I have not found, till about the beginning of K. Henry III.'s reign, when it was become the estate of a family which took its surname from it, as appears by a dateless deed among the archives of St. Bartholomew's hospital, in Sandwich, in which lands are given to it, abutting to those of the heirs of Simon de Statenberg, at Statenberg (c); when it passed from this name does not appear, but at the latter end of K. Richard II.'s reign, I find a deed, which mentions William Cooke, of Stapynberge, and part of this estate is at this day called Cooksborough; but in the middle of K. Henry V.'s reign, it was in the possession of a family called Atte Hall, who were succeeded in it by William Bryan, of Canterbury, gent. How long it continued in this name, I have not found; but in the second year of K. Richard III. anno 1484, it was become the property of John Kennett, of Canterbury, gent. whose son Thomas Kennett, of that place, clerk, in 1534, conveyed his interest in it to Christopher Hales, esq;

the king's attorney-general, afterwards knighted, whose daughter and coheir Margaret carried it in marriage to Ralph Dodmore, of Lincolns Inn, gent. and they jointly in 1557 alienated it to Saphire Paramor, of Eastry, yeoman (d), who died in 1591, and by will devised this estate to his son Bartholomew Paramor, afterwards of Statenborough, who by his second wife Ellen Omer, left three sons his coheirs in gavel-kind, Joshua, John, and Saphire; to the former of whom he devised it in tail, and in 1621, the two latter joined in levying a fine, by which they conveyed all their interest and title in it to their brother Joshua, who died possessed of it in 1650.

By his will he devised it to his son Saphire Paramor, of Statenborough, gent. and he in 1681 conveyed it to his son Joshua, which deed he afterwards at his death in 1693, confirmed by his will; this Joshua Paramor, of Statenborough, gent. died in 1705, leaving by Mary his wife, widow of Denne, and daughter of Mr. Ralph Philpot, of Worde, several children, to the eldest of whom, Joshua Paramor, he devised his estate; and he in 1713 conveyed it to his mother Mary, in fee, and she that same year passed away her interest in it to her cousin Capt. John Paramor, of Sandwich, who rebuilt the house and afterwards resided here. He died possessed of it in 1737, leaving it to his son John Paramor, of Statenborough, esq; who died without issue in 1750 (e), having devised his estate, among others, by his will to Mary, eldest daughter of his sister Mary, deceased, the wife of Thomas Fuller, of Sandwich, esq;

but she dying unmarried and under age, the whole descended by his will and second codicil to it, after the death of Mrs. Paramor, his widow, in 1759, to his three nieces and coheirs; that is, one moiety to Jane, wife of John Hawker, of Sandwich, gent. only daughter of John Hayward, of Sandwich, gent. by Jane, his sister then deceased (f); the other undivided moiety to Jane, wife of William Boys, she died in 1790 without issue. Mr. John Hayward was one of the sons of John Hayward, of Sandwich, gent. by Mary, daughter of John de Back, of Sandwich, merchant, by whom he had several sons, viz. Richard, who died 1712; another Richard, who died 1753; John above-mentioned, who married first Jane Paramor, and 2dly Katherine,

On a division of their estates in 1761, this estate was allotted to these two surviving daughters and coheirs last mentioned (b); and on a future subdivision between them in 1774, this of Statenborough, with Gore, in this parish likewise, formed a part of that share, which was allotted to Jane, since deceased, whose husband William Boys, of Sandwich, esq; is the present possessor of it (i).

The manors of North and South Court, and of Dane Court in Tilmanstone, claim over this hamlet of Statenborough.

(b) These estates were, by virtue of a commission of partition issued out of chancery, in pursuance of a decree made in 1761, allotted and appointed to Mrs. Boys, and Sarab Fuller her sister, as their moieties of Mr. Paramor's estates, and by an order of that court in 1762, they were conveyed to John Revutt, esq; of Chekers, in the co. of Bucks, in whom the legal estate was vested by Mr. Paramor's will, to the use of the two sisters above-mentioned, according to their respective interests; and this estate of Statenborough with Gore, is now vested under a settlement in Mr. Boys, for life, remainder to his issue, by Jane his wife above-mentioned.

Mr. Boys is descended from the eminent family of this name, spread over the several parts of East Kent, but whose principal seat was at Fredville, in Nonington. Wm. Boys was of Fredville, esq; in K. Henry VIII's reign, whose fourth son, by Mary, sister and heir of sir Edward Ringeley, knt. was of Bekeborne, and left among other children, Edward, ancestor of the Boys's, of Betshanger; and John, who was the second son, of Challock, from whom descended in the 5th descent, *Wm. The village of Eastry is situated on a pleasing eminence, a little to the northward of the centre of the parish, exhibiting a picturesque appearance from every point of view; the principal street in it is called Eastry-street, on the east side of which stands the church, with the court-lodge, parsonage, and vicarage, adjoining the church yard. borough and Sandwich, are Great and Little Walton farms, the former of which is vested in the trustees of the children of Mr. William Castle, of Sandwich; the latter is the property of Taylor White, of the co. of Hertford, esq; About half a mile eastward of the street is Great and Little Hay (m), the former belonging to Mrs. Sarah, widow of John Brickenden, of London, M. D. and the latter to the Earl of Guildford. At the south-east extremity of this parish lies the hamlet of Updown, adjoining to Ham and Betsbanger, in the former of which parishes some account of it has been already given. At the southern bounds of the parish, adjoining to Tilmanstone, on the south side of the high road from Canterbury to Deal, lies the hamlet of Wenstone, formerly called Wendestone, consisting of only two rebuilt the present one; his grandson Richard Boteler dying unmarried in 1773, his four sisters became his coheirs, and they with their husbands, viz. William Kelly and Sarah his wife, Henry Kelly Bradford and Elizabeth his wife, Robert Brown and Mary his wife, William Cronk and Catherine his wife, conveyed it in 1774, to their cousin Wm. Boteler, esq; the present owner of it.

The other estate, to which belong about 15 acres of land, formerly belonged to Roger Whitehead, who sold it to Morgan Lodge, gent. and he in 1695 demised it to Richard Knight, who in 1716 sold it to Thomas Fuller, gent. who built a neat house here, in which he resided; after his death it was possessed by his daughter Mary, who dying unmarried in 1783, devised it by will to her nephews Thomas and Edward Rammell, the latter of whom dying in 1785, it came to his brother Thomas, who is the sole possessor of it. He has much enlarged the house and resides in it.

Mention has been made above, in the description of the borough of Hernden, in this parish, of the descent and arms of the Botelers of that place, resident there for many generations, in which the reader will find that Richard Boteler, of Brookstreet, was the youngest son of Thomas Boteler, of Hernden, esq; who died 1651, by Joane Apleton his wife; which Richard resided at Brookstreet, where he died in 1682, leaving by Susan his wife, daughter of Sapphire Paramor, of Statenborough, gent. who died in 1724, a son Thomas, of Brookstreet, who died in 1737, having married Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Ralph Philpot, of Fenderland, who died in 1749, by whom he left issue several sons and daughters, of whom Elizabeth, married John Fuller of Molland, in Afb; Catherine, Thomas Boteler, of Brookstreet, who died in 1760, leaving by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Salmon Morrice, of Betsbanger, esq; who died in 1775, one surviving son and heir, Richard Boteler, who died single in 1773; and four daughters, who became their brother's coheirs: viz. Sarah married to William Kelly, of Hernden; Elizabeth, to Henry Kelly Bradford, of Sandwich; Mary, to Robert Brown, of Dover, afterwards of Ireland; and Catherine, to William Cronk, of Sandwich, afterwards of Chilbam. The other children of Thomas Boteler, by Elizabeth Philpot above-mentioned were, Richard, of Eytborne, surgeon, from whom the present Mr. Boteler, of Eastry is descended, as will be mentioned below; William, who was a Captain in the army, and died unmarried, at Oswego, in North America, in 1759; and Mary, married first to Daniel Stoddard, of Afb; and secondly, to Simon Turner, of Afb, gent.

On the western side of the parish lies the borough of Hernden, which although in this parish, is yet within the hundred of Downhamford and manor of Adisham; in the southern part of which is Skrinkling, or Sbingleton, as it is now called, already described above; and the hamlet of Hernden, consisting of the three farm houses of the upper, middle, and lower farms of Hernden; and three cottages; altogether containing 330 acres of land, lying very compact together. At the northern part of this borough lie the estates of Selson, Wells, and Gore, forming a hamlet of six farm houses and four cottages; the former consists of three estates, one called Upper Selson, belongs to the Earl of Guildford (n); and the other two, called Lower Selson, belong, one to

To return to Richard Boteler, of Eytborne, mentioned above; he married Anne, daughter of Robert Jager, of Canterbury, widow of James Wood, who died in 1787. He died in 1792, æt. 76, having had issue by her, one son William; and three daughters, Elizabeth; Susanna, married to William Sankey, of Eytborne, surgeon; and Anna-Maria, deceased. Which William Boteler is now of Brookstreet, esq; a gentleman to whose liberal friendship I am much indebted, as well as for his communications and assistance, towards the description of this hundred, and its adjoining neighbourhood.

He has been twice married; first, in 1774, to Sarah, daughter and coheir of Thomas Fuller, of Statenborough, esq; who died in 1777, by whom he has issue one son, William Fuller, now of St. John's College, Cambridge.—Secondly, in 1785, to Mary, eldest daughter of John Harvey, of Sandwich, and Hernden, esq; late Captain of the Royal Navy, by whom he has issue three sons and three daughters.

He bears for his arms—Argent, on 3 escutcheons sable, 3 covered cups or; which coat of arms has been constantly borne by this younger branch of the Boteler's, settled at Brookstreet, as appears by the grave-stone of Thomas Boteler, of Brookstreet, who died in 1737, the son of Richard Boteler, of Brookstreet, the younger son of Thomas Boteler, of Hernden, who was the younger son of Richard Boteler, of Hernden, to whom these arms were granted by Cooke, Clar. in 1589. Mr. Boteler, of Eastry, is the last surviving heir male of the family, both of Hernden, and of Brookstreet.

(m) In the chartularie of Knolton manor mention is made, in a deed anno 15 Edward I. of Johnz de la Hay, miles F. Jobis de la Hay, militis, and in another, anno 6 Edward III. of Jobes f. Jobis de Hey, and of the sister of John atte Welle, knt. Dat. ap. (n) SELSON is written in antient deeds, Selvestone, Selson, and Silston; the estate of Upper Selson, consisting of 110 acres, was formerly the property of the Harsteets, of whom it was purchased by Mr. Richard Harvey, of West Studdal, of whose descent and family see Tilmanstone, above, p. 204 (t). He afterwards resided here, and died possessed of it in 1675, as did his son Thomas Harvey in 1696, whose son Robert Harvey in 1733, sold it to sir Robert Farnese, bart. from whom it has descended in like manner the heirs of Mrs. Mary Hardres, of Canterbury, lately deceased; the other to Mr. Wm. Philpot, jun. of Sandwich. Wells is the property of Mr. William Gibbs, of Ickham (o). The third estate in Selson, called Gore, is the property of William Boys, of Sandwich, esq; (p)

Near this estate is another, a large farm, situated likewise at Gore, usually called the New Farm, alias Gore, of which only nine acres are within the borough of Hernden, belongs to Mr. Isaac Sladden, of Christ Church, Canterbury (q).

About half a mile from Gore, at the north-east limits of this parish, in the road to Sandwich, is the hamlet of Statenborough, already taken notice of above; and at a small distance from it is that part of the borough of Fenderland, or Fenderland, as it is usually called, within the bounds of this parish, in which, adjoining the road which branches off to Word, is a small feat, now the property and residence of Mrs. Dare, widow of William Dare, esq; who resides in it (r); near it are four cottages, likewise in this parish.

Round the village the lands are for a little distance, and on towards Statenborough, inclosed with hedges and trees, but the rest of the parish is in general an open uninclosed country of arable land, like the neighbouring ones before manner as Waldersbare, and his other estates, to the Right Honourable the Earl of Guildford, the present owner of it.

LOWER SELSON consists of two farms, one of which, containing 70 acres of land, of the annual value of 57l. was formerly the property of the Whitfield's, who though yeomen, had several estates in this neighbourhood; from them it came to the Manwoods, one of whom, Peter Manwood, esq; sold it about the year 1693 to John Hardres, of Canterbury, esq; (See his descent, vol. iii. of this history, p. 733.) the heirs of whose only surviving daughter and coheir Mrs. Martha Hardres, of Canterbury, spinster, late deceased, are the present owners of it.

The other farm, consisting of about 60 acres of land, has been the property of the family of Philpot for many generations, the present owner being Mr. William Philpot, jun. now of Sandwich.

(o) Wells, within the hamlet of Selson, was in the beginning of K. Henry VII.'s reign, the estate of Harry Baxe the younger, who alienated it to Thomas Elware, who resided at it, and died possessed of it in 1499, and by his will gave it to Roger Frynne, his executor, on condition that he should pay yearly for ever, to the churchwardens of the church of Eastry, towards the reparation of the church works yearly, there to be done and expended, 3s. 4d. From the Frynnes, or as they were afterwards called, Friends, this estate passed into the name of Owre, one of whom, William Owre, died seized of it in 1541, whose son Wm. Owre sold it to Thomas Whitfield, who resided at Selson, and died in 1568, after which it continued in his descendants for some time, and till it was at length alienated to Terry, and in 1701 Richard Terry, of Trepnam, in Wingham, died possessed of it, and by will devised it to his eldest son of the same name, whose daughter carried it in marriage to . . . described; the soil of it towards the north is most fertile, in the other parts it is rather thin, being much inclined to chalk, except in the bottoms, where it is much of a stiff clay, for this parish is a continued inequality of hill and dale, and from these little eminencies the eye commands the most pleasing prospects; notwithstanding the above, there is a great deal of good fertile land in the parish, which meets on an average at 15s. an acre. There is no wood in it.

The parish contains about 2,650 acres; the yearly rents of it are assessed to the poor at 2679l. At the south end of the village of Eastry, beyond Reaper's Row, were formerly butts, erected for the practice of archery among the inhabitants; adjoining to the land where they were, which is still known by the name of the Butts, is a pond, still called Butsole (s).

A spacious handsome edifice has been lately built in this parish as a workhouse, for the poor of the united parishes of Eastry, Norborne, Shebertswell, Tilmanstone, Coldred, Lydden, Waldersbare, Knolton, Betsbanger, Swingsfield, Denton, Wootton, and Cbillenden.

of Ickham, who has purchased the other part of it, and is now entitled to the entire fee of this estate. It consists of 70 acres of land, of about the yearly value of 60l.

(p) This is only a small farm, consisting of a messuage and 21 acres of land; it most probably belonged antiently to the same owners that Wells did, as mentioned above, and so came to the Owres, and thence to the Whitfields; one of whom, John, eldest son of Thomas Whitfield, who died in 1568, joined with the Owres, who had yet some interest left here, and sold it to Richard Harvey, of Selson, gent. whose grandson Robert Harvey, with others of his family in 1735, conveyed it to John Paramor, of Sandwich, afterwards of Statenborough, esq; since which it has continued in a like line of succession with that estate, and as such, is now the property of Wm. Boys, of Sandwich, esq;

This farm consists of 120 acres of land, of the yearly rent of 120l.

In March 1792, Mr. Boteler, of this parish, discovered, on digging a cellar in the garden of a cottage belonging to him, situated eastward of the highway leading from Eastry Cross to Buisole, an ancient burying ground, used as such in the latter time of the Roman Empire in Britain, most probably by the inhabitants of this parish, and the places contiguous to it. He caused several graves to be opened, and found with the skeletons, fibulae, beads, knives, and bones of shields, &c. and in one a glass vessel. From other skeletons, which have been dug up in the gardens nearer the cross, he is of opinion, that they extended on the same side the road up to the cross, the ground of which is now pretty much covered with houses; the heaps of earth or barrows which formerly remained over them, have long since been levelled, by the great length of time and the labour of the husbandman; the graves were very thick, in rows parallel to each other, in a direction from east to west.

St. Ivo's well, in Eastry, is mentioned by Nierembergius, in Historia de Miraculis Naturæ, lib. ii, cap. 33; but I can find no trace of it, even by tradition, at this time.

This place gave birth to Henry de Eastry, who was first a Monk, and then Prior of Christ Church, in Canterbury; who, for his learning as well as his worthy acts, became an ornament, not only to the society he presided over, but to his country in general. He continued Prior 37 years, and died, far advanced in life, in 1222 (t).

PREMISES OF LESSER NOTE.

Richard at Church, as appears by his will, proved anno 1484, was possessed of a tenement called Brook Place, in this parish, with a piece of land called Brookaker, lying at Wendeston, in the lordship of Master Longleygb.

Peter Darby, of this parish, by his will, proved 1497, desired to be buried in the body of this church, before the altar of St. Job Baptist. He mentions his place, called Esole, in Nonington; his lands in Asb, at a place called Flete; his place called Goddards, in Eastry, with the lands belonging to it; his place in Eastry, towards the Butts, called Nether Place, with the lands belonging to it; and his place called Worbope, lying at Heronden, with the lands belonging to it (u); all which he devised to Thomas his son, and his heirs for ever.

Thomas Whitfield the elder, of Eastry, by his will proved 1568, devised to John his son, his messuage at Selson, in which he then dwelt; and to Mark his son, his tenement, called Nether Knowle, in Eastry street.

(t) See Battely's Somner, pt. 1, p. 146. In pt. 2, p. 116, he is said to have continued Prior 47 years, and to have died in 1331.

Christian Goddard, of this parish, widow of Oliver Goddard, gave by her will in 1574, a tenement and garden in Eastry, over against the vicarage house, for the use of the poor people there for ever; the same is now vested in the churchwardens of this parish, and is of the annual value of 2*l.* 10*s.* and a tenement and garden in Eastry to the clerk, to instruct in learning, one of the poorest man's children, being a boy, of this parish, from time to time; which is vested in the churchwardens for ever.

Thomas Appleton, of Eastry, yeoman, by his will, proved in 1593, gave to the relief of the poor of this parish, the sum of 5*l.* to be paid to the churchwardens yearly, and to be distributed by them to the use of the poor people, inhabitants here, fourteen days before Christmas day; and the same to be paid out of certain lands belonging to him, called Hardiles, in the parish of Woodnesborough.

Richard Thompson, by will in 1673, ordered that twenty-four poor people should receive, at three several times in the year, viz. at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, a twopenny loaf; secured on a house and garden in Eastry, the annual produce of which is 12*s.*

Anne Freind, of Eastry, spinster, by will, proved in 1715, gave to the poor of the parish there 5*l.* and to the overseers of the poor of it, and their successors for ever, three acres and one rood of arable land, at or near a place called Dedmans gapp, in Eastry, in the occupation of Daniel Kelly, and holden of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury; the said overseers to renew the lease of the same from time to time, and to let the same, or otherwise employ it to the best advantage; in trust, that the yearly rents and profits should be equally paid and distributed on Christmas Day yearly, in the chancel of the church, among such industrious

(v) The church, excluding the tower, is 147 feet long, and 40 feet in breadth; the bells have been all cast at different times, and are very unmusical. The church is well kept and neatly paved, and exhibits a noble appearance; to this many handsome monuments contribute. The arch over the west door is circular, but no other parts of the church has any shew of great antiquity. In the chancel, is a mural monument against the south wall, for Jane, wife of John Hayward, of Sandwich, gent. and daughter of John Paramor, gent. and Jane his wife, obit 1720, æt. 24; also for Jane, wife of the said John Paramor, obit 1732, æt. 57; also the said John Paramor, of this parish, gent. obit 1737, æt. 65; arms at top, Paramor impaling Clere, argent, on a fess argent, 3 eagles displayed or. Against the south wall, Thomas Fuller, of Eastry, gent. obit 1748, æt. 79; also Mary his wife, daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Terrey, obit 1748, æt. 78; they left John, Thomas, Mary, and Elizabeth; also their two sons, John Fuller, gent. of Eastry, obit 1760, æt. 64; and Thomas Fuller, of Statenborough, esq; obit 1773, æt. 67; also Mary, a daughter of Thomas Fuller, esq; obit 1754, æt. 18; also Mary Fuller, of Eastry, daughter of the first mentioned Thomas Fuller, obit 1783, æt. 86; arms—Fuller, argent, 3 bars and a canton gules, impaling ermine, on a pile gules, a leopard's head passant delis or. Against the north wall, a monument in memory of Charles Bargrave, esq; and Elizabeth his wife; Dame Frances Leigh, relict of sir Francis Leigh, of Hawley, knt. Isaac Bargrave, eldest son of the said Charles and Elizabeth; and Christian, relict of the said Isaac Bargrave, and daughter of the said sir Francis Leigh and Frances his wife; no dates to any of them. Adjoining to the above, southward, is an elegant pyramidal monument, on which is a bust and emblematical sculpture for John Broadley, gent. many years surgeon at Dover, obit 1784, æt. 79, erected by his wife Frances, daughter of Isaac and Christian Bargrave. Sandwich. The church, which is exempted from the Archdeacon, is dedicated to St. Mary; it is a large handsome building, consisting of a nave and two side isles, a chancel at the east end, remarkably long, and a square tower, which is very large, at the west end, in which are five bells (v).

In the will of Williams Andrewwe, of this parish, anno 1507, mention is made of our Ladie chapel, in the church yard of the church of Estrie.

In the chancel of the church were, till lately, eighteen stalls, for the use of the Monks of Thomas, brother of sir Roger Newynson, who died in 1616. At the head of sir Roger Newynson's grave-stone, is one of black marble, on which have been the figures of a man and woman and inscription, underneath a coat of arms, at the top a lozenge, at bottom and underneath seven sons and six daughters, all torn away; but probably it was for Lady Mary, wife of sir Roger Newynson. Against the north wall, near the east end, is affixed a helmet of iron, with the crest of Newynson. A grave-stone for Joshua Paramour, gent. buried 1650, æt. 60; arms at top Paramour. Over the south-east pillar, betwixt the spring of the arches, an elegant pyramidal marble and tablet for Robert Bargrave, of this parish, obit 1779, et. 84; also Elizabeth his wife, daughter of fr Francis Leigh, of Hawley, obit 1737, et. 32; also Robert Bargrave, their only son, Proctor in Doctors Commons, obit 1774, et. 39, whose sole surviving daughter Rebecca, wife of James Wyborne, of Sholden, caused this tablet to be erected; arms Bargrave, with a mullet, impaling Leigh, or, on a chevron sable, 3 lions rampant argent, in the dexter corner an annulet of the second.

In the cross isle, near the chancel called the Boteler's isle, a brass plate for William Boteler, esq; obit 1614, et. 50; arms—3 covered cups, rest obliterated. (Memorandum, he married Elizabeth, daughter of fr William Crayford, she died the year following, and was buried in the chancel of Higbam church, near Rochebester, in which is an handsome altar tomb to her memory, with an inscription and arms of Boteler, 3 covered cups, impaling Crayford.) One for Richard Boteler, gent. obit 1682, et. 52; also Susan his wife, daughter of Saphire and Margaret Paramor, of this parish, gent. obit 1724, et. 82; for Thomas Boteler, gent. of this parish, only son of Ricard and Susan Boteler, obit 1737, et. 61, leaving issue by Elizabeth his wife, three sons and three daughters; also Elizabeth, wife of the said Thomas, and daughter of Ralph and Elizabeth Philpot, obit 1749, et. 61. Adjoining to these, are three other grave-stones, all of which have been inlaid, but the brasses are gone; they were for the Boteler family, and on one of them, which had an inscription and four shields, one at each corner, now gone, one of the coats was lately remaining, being the antique arms of Boteler-Girony of 6 pieces, &c. impaling ermine of 3 spots; a fragment of the inscription has been recovered, the brass of it having been turned and placed in a neighbouring church for another family. It is as follows:—

 . . . rtii anno dom. 1580 et, Richardi Boteler,
 . . . ri filii ejus qui mortem obiit tricesimo,
 . . . narii anno dom. 1600 et reliquit Quin,
 . . . lios et duas filias superstites.

At the south end of this isle is a coffin-shaped grave-stone, the surface of which is much scaled off, probably for one of the Hernden family, and that mentioned to have remained with brasses on it in the time of Roberts Glover, Somerset Herald, (see above, p. 218 (f), but there are no marks of any having been, at this time. In the passage from the nave to the chancel, a grave-stone for Anne, wife of John Austen, and daughter of William Naylor and Anne Finnis, obit 1656, et. 68.

In the south isle, a grave-stone, for Catherine Harvey, daughter of the Rev. Richard Harvey, and Catherine his wife, obit 1769, et. 17; for Mrs. Elizabeth Lawson, obit 1752, et. 75. On the south side are the following altar monuments: first, for Thomas Harvey, gent. obit 1696, et. 64; also his daughter, Mrs. Sarah, late wife of Mr. William Barnard, citizen of London, who died in childbed 1696, et. 32; also Anne, the wife of the said Thomas Harvey, obit 1716, et. 85; second, for Solomon Harvey, gent. of this parish, obit 1733, et. 77, Catherine his wife, obit 1744, et. 79. Their son Solomon, A. B. obit 1713, et. 23. Adjoining to the above is a grave-stone, now level with the earth, probably, formerly a tomb, and supported with brick work, on which is enough of the inscription legible to appropriate it to Mary, the wife of Richard March, daughter of Alexander Hawker, of Challock, gent. . . . her sister Boteler, the rest obliterated. (From the Register, it appears she was buried in 1611; Mrs. March, and Catherine, wife of Richard Boteler, were sisters, and the daughters of the above Mr. Hawker.) An altar tomb for Thomas Faulkner, obit 1610; William Faulkner, obit 1616, the inscription almost obliterated; another large and handsome one, fenced with iron railing, near the south door of the chancel, for Thomas Rammell, of Eastry, obit 1759, et. 56; Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Thomas and Mary Fuller, obit 1781, et. 72; also their children, Mary, John, and Jane, who died in their infancy; Susan, who died in 1770, et. 18; Edward, obit 1785, et. 38; Mary, obit 1789, et. 41. In the church yard are four vaults, two near the south chancel door, for the families of Fuller, and Rammell; the third, near the west door of the tower, for Peiman; and a fourth, adjoining northward to the last, for another branch of the Rammell family.

The church of Eastry, with the chapels of Skrinkling and Wortb annexed, was anciently appendant to the manor of Eastry, and was appropriated by Archbishop Richard (successor to Archbishop Becket,) in the reign of K. Henry II. to the almony of the Priory of Christ Church (w), but it did not continue long so, for Archbishop Baldwin (Archbishop Richard's immediate successor) having quarrelled with the Monks, on account of his intended college at Hackington, took this appropriation from them, and thus it remained as a rectory, at the Archbishop's disposal, till the 39th year of K. Edward III.'s reign (x), when Archbishop Simon Islip, with the king's licence, restored, united and annexed it again to the Priory (y); but it appears, that in return for this grant, the Archbishop had made over to him, by way of exchange, the advowsons of the churches of St. Dunstan, St. Pancrase, and All Saints in Bread-street, in London, all three belonging to the Priory (z). After which, that is anno 8 Richard II, 1384, this church was ermine; third, as the second; fourth, a saltier engrailed between 4 oak leaves, being the arms of Anne Theobald, widow of Thomas Nevinton; waire, on a chief 3 roses, for Partricke, impaling quarterly, first and fourth, a demi lion rampant; second and third, 3 mallets, 2 and 1.

William Craller, (Pensionarius,) of the church of Eastry, was buried in the chancel of this church, as appears by his will proved in 1488.

Several of the Frynnes, or as they were afterwards called, Friends, who lived at Waltham in this parish in K. Henry VII.'s reign, lie buried in this church.

(w) This appropriation was confirmed by the bulls of the Popes Lucius and Alexander III. See Battely's Somner, pt. ii, p. 97.

(x) During the time of this rectory continuing in the Archbishop's disposal, there were several compositions for tythes, entered into by the Rectors, viz. a composition with the Prior and Convent of St. Martin's in Dover, on the tythes of La Menesse als Wortbe Menesse, anno 1229. valued among the revenues of the Almony of Christ Church, at the yearly value of 53l. 6s. 8d. (a) and it continued afterwards in the same state in the possession of the Monks, who managed it for the use of the Almony, during which time Prior William Sellyng, who came to that office in K. Edward IV.'s reign, among other improvements on several estates belonging to his church, built a new dormitory at this parsonage for the Monks resorting hither.

On the dissolution of the Priory of Christ Church, in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign, this appropriation, with the advowson of the vicarage of the church of Eastry, was surrendered into the king's hands, where it stayed but a small time, for he granted it in his 33d year, by his dotation charter, to his new founded Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, who are the present owners of this appropriation (b); but the advowson of the vicarage, notwithstanding it was granted with the appropriation, to the Dean and Chapter as above-mentioned, appears not long afterwards to have become parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, where it continues at this time, his Grace the Archbishop being the present Patron of it.

(b) By the survey of this Parsonage, after the death of K. Charles I, in order to its being sold for the use of the State in 1649, it was returned, that it then consisted of a faire Parsonage house, containing a hall, two parlours, a kitchen, buttery, milkhouse and other offices, with eight chambers over them; three barns, two stables, with a granary over them; a pidgeon house with other outhouses; one garden, one orchard, one little bowling green, one court yard, and one great yard; worth together by estimation 10l. together with the tythes of corn and other profits of the Parsonage, estimated coibs annis at 400l. The late Dean and Chapter, by indenture in 1615, demised to sir Thomas Smith, sir John Scott, and sir Richard Smith, all the above premises, with their appurtenances in Eastry and Tilmantstone, with the authority to keep all courts and to receive the profits of them, during the natural lives of sir Richard Sondes, of Lees Court, George Sondes his eldest son, and Anthony Sondes his third son, paying the yearly sum or rent of 85l. 5s. and every seventh year, over and above the yearly rent, the sum of 200l. but that the premises were worth on improvement, over and above the reserved rent, the sum of 369l. 14s. 4d. and for entertainment money 4l. per annum. EASTRY.

This Parsonage is entitled to the great tythes of this parish and of Worth; there belong to it 52 A. 2 R. 33 P. of glebe land in Eastry parish; 15 A. 3 R. in Tilmanstone, and 2 R. 24 P. in Worth—in all 69 A. 17 P.

There is a small manor belonging to it, called

which receives quit-rents from the houses and lands in Eastry and Church-street, extending almost down to Little Walton, and likewise from the houses built on the waste in Reaper's Row, adjoining to the glebe there, and from a trifling quantity of land at or near Brook-street; the rents of the whole are very inconsiderable.

The Parsonage house is large and ancient; in the old parlour window is a shield of arms, in painted glass, being thole of Partheriche (c), impaling, quarterly, 1st and 4th, Gules, within a bordure sable, bezantee a demi lion argent, for Linze; 2d and 3d, Argent, 3 mullets sable, for Hamerton. The parsonage is of the annual rent of about 700*l.* The Countess Dowager of Guildford has the present interest in the lease of this parsonage, by the will of her husband, the late Frederick, Earl of Guildford, who deceased in 1792.

As to the origin of a vicarage in this church, though there was one endowed in it by Archbishop Peckham, in the 20th year of K. Edward I, anno 1291 (d), whilst this church continued in the Archbishop's hands, yet I do not find that there was a Vicar instituted in it, but that it remained as a Rectory, till near three years after it had been restored to the priory of Christ Church, when, in the 42d year of K. Edward III, a Vicar was instituted in it, between whom and the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury, there was a composition entered into, concerning his portion, which he should have in it by way of an endowment of this vicarage; which composition was confirmed by Archbishop Simon Langham, at Forde, on the 2d of the nones of August that year (e); and next year there was an agreement entered into between the Eleemosynary of Christ Church and the Vicar of this church, concerning the manse of this vicarage (f).

The vicarage of Eastry, with the chapel of

(c) Mr. William Partherich lived at Eastry Parsonage, but whether as tenant or lessee, I know not; but he styles himself, in 1573, Willus Partheriche ffermor Ibidem, from which most probably he was only tenant. From the Register of Eastry, it appears that his wife Alice was buried here in 1570, and his son Edward was born in 1573; after him Mr. Argent was tenant to the lessee; in the latter end of the last century the Denne family, afterwards the Fullers, then Rammell, and now Mr. Edward George.

Worth annexed, is valued in the king's books at 19*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* and the yearly tenths at 1*l.* 19*s.* 2½*d.* (g)

In 1588 it was valued at 60*l.* Communicants 335. In 1640 here were the like number of communicants, and it was valued at 100*l.*

The ancient pension of 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* formerly paid by the Priory of Christ Church, is still paid to the Vicar by the Dean and Chapter, and likewise an augmentation of 14*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* yearly, by the lessee of the parsonage, by the covenant of his lease. The vicarage house is built upon the south east angle of the farm yard of the parsonage; the land allotted to it is very trifling, not even sufficient for a tolerable garden; the foundations of the house are antient, and probably part of the original building when the vicarage was endowed in 1367.

There were two awards made in 1549 and 1550, on a controversy between the Vicar of Eastry and the Mayor, &c. of Sandwich, whether the scite of St. Bartholomew's hospital, near Sandwich, within that port and liberty, was subject to the payment of tythes to the Vicar, as being within his parish, he having received 5*s.* per ann. for such tythe, time out of mind. Both awards adjudged the legality of the above payment, as due to the Vicar; but the former award adjudged the scite of the hospital not to be within the bounds of the parish of Eastry, and the latter, that it was within the precinct of it. See Boys's Sandwich, p. 59 & seq.

WOODNESBOROUGH,

OR Winsborough, as it is usually called, lies the next parish northward from Eastry, being written in the survey of Domesday, Wanesberge. It took its name according to Verstegan, from the Saxon idol Woden, (and it is spelt by some Wodensborough) whose place of worship was in it; however, that may be, the termination of the word berge, or borough, shews it to be of high antiquity.

Part of this parish, over which the manor of Boxley claims, is within the jurisdiction of the Justices of the town and port of Sandwich, and liberty of the Cinque Ports; and the residue is in the hundred of Eastry, and jurisdiction of the county of Kent.

There are three boroughs in this parish, viz. Cold Friday (x), Hamwold (y), and Marshborough (z); the boroughs of which are chosen at the Petty Sessions of the Justices, acting at Wingham, for the east Division of the lath of St. Augustine.

THE MANOR OF WOODNESBOROUGH, alias was as the time of taking the survey of Domesday, two estates, both which were part of the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Baieux, under the general title of whose lands they are entered in it as follows.

Turstinus ten de epo. 1. jugu in Wanesberge & ibi sunt 2. bord. Tocchi tenuit de rege E.

Which is: Turstin holds of the Bishop, 1 yoke in Wanesberge, and there are 2 borderers. Tocchi held it of K. Edward.

And again in another place, but both within the hundred of Eastry,

Which is: Osbern, son of Letard, holds of the Bishop 1 suling in Selinge. There he has one villain paying 2 shillings. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor, it was worth 60 shillings, and afterwards, and now 30 shillings. Aluin held it in the time of K. Edward the Confessor.

Four years after the taking of this survey, the Bishop was disgraced, and all his estates were confiscated to the Crown; after which the feignory of these estates was granted, among others, to the family of Crevequer, and made a part of their barony, which consisted of lands assigned by the Conqueror, for his assistance in the defence of Dover castle, and were held of the king by barony.

Of the Crevequers, as chief lords of the fee, these estates were again held by the family of Malmainses, who were succeeded in one part of them, afterwards called the manor of Woodnesborough, by one of the name of St. Ledger; and in the other, then called Selinge, by owners of the same name; and at the latter end of K. Henry III.'s reign, Nicholas de Selinge, and the heirs of John St. Ledger, as appears by the book of knight's fees in the Exchequer, held them as three quarters of a knight's fee of Hamo de Crevequer (a); the part of the former descended to John de Shelving, for so the name as well as the estate was then called (b), and he erected a mansion on it for his residence, which afterwards bore the name of Shelving (c), and died seized of it in the 4th year of K. Edward III, (d) leaving the possession of it to his wife Benedicta, daughter and coheir of Robert de Hougham, of Hougham, near Dover. The part of the latter descended to Edward de St. Ledger, on whose death, his son Thomas de St. Ledger succeeded to it; and in the 20th year of that reign, Benedicta de Shelving and Thomas de St. Ledger paid aid for them, as three quarters of a knight's fee, which John de Shelving and Edward St. Ledger held in Woodnesberge and Dene, of Hamo de Crevequer, of which Benedicta above-mentioned held half a fee, and Thomas de St. Ledger one-fourth (e).

From St. Ledger the manor of Woodnesborough afterwards passed by sale into the name of White, one of whom, Robert White, died seized of it in the 12th year of K. Henry VIII; and from Shelving, the estate of Shelving was afterwards alienated to Dynely, or Dingley, as the name was variously called and spelt; and in K. Henry VIII.'s reign Henry Dynely was in possession of it (f).

After which their respective heirs joined in the sale of both to Knight; from which time I find no further mention of the manor of Woodnesborough, but of the manor of Shelving only, which in the beginning of K. Charles I.'s reign was the property of Edward Knight, gent. who died in 1632, leaving two daughters his coheirs, who seem to have divided this estate between them; that part, with the manor and court-lodge, still retaining the name of Shelving; the other, from its situation, taking the name of Church-gate farm (g).

The manor of Shelving was very soon afterwards sold to Solomon Hougham, of Sandwich, gent. who died possessed of it in 1658 (h), and was succeeded in it by his eldest son Richard Hougham, of the same place, gent. who died seized of it in 1662; not long after which, it appears to have passed into the possession of John Grove, of Tunstall, gent. in right of Mildred his wife, who died seized of it in 1677 (i), and devised it to his daughter Rebecca Grove, who died unmarried in 1738, upon which it came, by her father's intail of it, to her eldest brother John Grove, gent. who died in 1755, upon which it descended to his eldest son Pearce Grove, esq; who dying unmarried, devised it to his brother Richard Grove, formerly of Cambridge, but then of the Temple, London, esq; who dying likewise unmarried, a few years ago, and having no near relations, devised it, with the greatest part of his estates, to Mr. William Jemmett, of Asb-

He left issue three sons; Richard, Solomon, and Henry, and a daughter, Anne; Richard, the eldest son, was of Sandwich, gent. and died without issue in 1662; Solomon, the second son, was of London, merchant, and afterwards of St. Martin's, in Canterbury. He was Sheriff of Kent in 1696, and died unmarried in 1697, æt. 73, all whom above-mentioned, lie buried in St. Mary's church, in Sandwich. Henry Hougham, the third son, had three sons; Solomon, John, and Charles, and a daughter Elizabeth; of whom, Solomon, the eldest, became heir and executor to his uncle Solomon above-mentioned, and was of Canterbury, gent. he died without issue in 1714, æt. 58, and was buried at Sandwich, with his ancestors. (See Boys's Sandwich, p. 324, 367.) John died without issue, before his brother, and Charles became his brother Solomon's heir, and was of St. Martin's, Canterbury, whose son Henry was father of William Hougham, now of St. Martin's, Canterbury, senior, esq; This branch of the Houghams bear for their arms—Or, 5 chevrons sable.

is another manor, situated less than a quarter of a mile north-eastward from Shelving, which in antient time was held by the family of Malmains, by ward to the castle of Dover, being part of the family of Crevequer, and they continued in the possession of it till the latter end of K. Edward II.'s reign, or the beginning of K. Edward III., when it was become the property of Goldborough, and Peter de Goldborough died seized of it in the 32d year of that reign (l); his successor in it was William atte Welle, of Sandwich, who died two years afterwards, as appears by the inquisition taken after his death (m), upon which two parts of it escheated to the crown (n), and the remaining part came into the possession of Agnes his widow, who died seized of it in the 36th year of that reign, holding it by the service above-mentioned, when the king became entitled to the whole of this manor, which afterwards was granted to a family of its own name; one of whom, sir John Grove, died possessed of it in K. Henry VI.'s reign, and lies buried in St. Peter's church, in Sandwich, to which he was a good benefactor, under a monument, on which are his effigies lying at full length, and on his shield, as well as underneath, his arms, viz. 3 leaves in sinister

(k) Shelving House is situated eastward of and very near the church; the present building is very mean, and exhibits no appearance of ever having been a mansion; some antient flint foundations have however, I find upon enquiry, been found round it. The demesne lands are only 30 acres; the annual rent 33*l*.

(m) He was found to die seized of this manor, held of the King in capite, as of his castle of Ledes, by the service of the 4th part of one knight's fee, and performing service at the court of that castle, from three weeks to three weeks, and by the service of performing ward to the Castle of Dover, by the payment of 6*s.* 8*d.* in lieu of all other service.

(n) Notwithstanding this, the family of Atte Welle remained in this parish for some time afterwards, for among the archives of St. Thomas's alias Ellis's Hospital, in Sandwich, are two indentures, dated in 1453, anno 32 Henry VI., wherein Thomas Atte Welle, of Hamwold, in this parish, infroffed Henry Grensbilde, of Sandwich, in a mesuage and land, at Hamwolve. See Boys's Sandwich, p. 155, 156.

(o) It was in the south isle of that church, under an arch in the wall. Mr. Boys, author of the collections for Sandwich, has been permitted to remove the figure of sir John Grove, from the fallen isle, where it must have been soon destroyed, into the church, beside the font. See collections for Sandwich, p. 299, 353. Philipott, p. 308, says on the tomb of sir John Grove, in St. Peter's church, were his arms—Ermine, on a chevron 3 escallops, and that he bend, their stalks upwards, on a canton 3 crescents (o), which arms were likewise formerly painted on the windows of this church; not long after his death it became the property of sir John Whyte, knt. merchant of the staple of Canterbury, who died seized of it in the 9th year of K. Edward IV. (p) as did his descendant Robert Whyte, anno 12 Henry VIII., holding it in capite by knight's service, and leaving it to Thomas White his son and heir (q); at length his descendant Henry White, son of sir Thomas White, knt. one of the masters of the Court of Requests, died possessed of it in the 14th year of Queen Elizabeth's reign, leaving by Bridget his wife, one of the daughters of Henry Bradshaw, esq. deceased, late Chief Baron of the Exchequer (r), three daughters, Agnes, afterwards married to Thomas Scudamore, Philippa, and Jane, who became his coheirs, and had livery of this manor in the 21st year of that reign (s); three years after which, Thomas Scudamore and Agnes his wife, in 1581, for the sum of 540*l.* conveyed their third part of it to William Fleet. Next year Philippa, who had married Walter Gifford, joined with her husband, and conveyed her third part of it to Roger James, of the city of London, merchant (t), who two years afterwards purchased of Jane, youngest daughter and coheir of Henry White above-mentioned, then the wife of Henry Ferrers, esq. their third part of this manor (u).

In 1594, Sarah, widow of Roger James, with was owner of Grove, in Staple. But as to the arms, he is certainly mistaken, for on the tomb they are as mentioned above in the text, and this is corroborated by a shield of the same arms, formerly in the windows of this church of Woodnesborough; perhaps they might be two different families, bearing the different coats above-mentioned. The coat mentioned by Philipott, as above, was formerly in the windows of Sittingbourne church, being impaled with Cromer, who married one of the family of Grove. See vol. ii. of this history, p. 617; and vol. iii. p. 672, note (b).

her two sons Thomas and John, purchased of William Fleet, mentioned above, the remaining third part of it, for the sum of 600*l.* and thus became entitled to the entire fee of this manor, which afterwards, on the death of Tho. James without issue, became the property of his brother John James, who afterwards resided at Grove, and in 1626 settled it on his son Henry, in tail, who left issue four daughters his coheirs, viz. Joice married to Edward Sayer, esq; Catherine; Elizabeth married to William Bix; and Afra; and they became possessed of this manor in equal shares. After which Edward Sayer and Catherine James conveyed their shares for 1725*l.* and Elizabeth James, then unmarried, in 1659, and Afra James in 1662, conveyed their respective shares to Peter de la Pierre, or Peters, as the name was afterwards called and spelt, who then became possessed of the entire fee of this manor, which afterwards continued in his descendants (v), till three-fourths of it were, about the year 1757, alienated to Mr. Thomas Alkin, of Canterbury, who in 1773 devised his interest in it, after his wife's death, to his son Thomas Verrier Alkin, Cl. and his daughters Margaret Alkin, and Susan then the wife of John Fowell, D.D. as tenants in common, in general tail, with benefit of survivorship in tail general, with remainder to his own right heirs.

The other fourth part of this manor remained in the descendants of Peter de la Pierre, or Peters, till partly by marriage, and partly by sale, it became the property of Mr. Isaac Warner, of Bermondsey, merchant, whose son Simeon Warner, (v) Peter de la Pierre, alias Peters, the first purchaser of this estate, was of the Black Friars, in Canterbury, surgeon, and was twice married; by his first wife, daughter of Chirontie, he left four sons and two daughters, of whom Susan married Edward Crayford; and Mary married Mr. Robert Jacob. John, the eldest son, had by his father's will, a moiety of Grove manor, whose descendants will be mentioned below; Peter, the second son, was of Dover, surgeon, and by his father's will, possessed a fourth part of Grove manor, which in 1684 he devised by his will to his sole daughter and heir Margaret, who married Alexander Kenton, by whom she had three daughters; Margaret, Mary, and Anne, the latter of whom married Isaac Warner, of Bermondsey, merchant, who, partly by marriage and partly by purchase, became possessed of this fourth part of Grove manor, which his son Simeon Warner, in 1778, conveyed for 1200*l.* to Dr. John Fowell; Michael, the third son of Peter, was of Canterbury, gent. and became possessed of the other fourth part of Grove manor by his father's will. He died in 1708, and left two sons; to the eldest of whom Peter, he devised the above share in this estate, and he in 1749, for the sum of 600*l.* sold it to Mr. Thomas Alkin.

To RETURN NOW to John, the eldest son of Peter, the first purchaser of this manor, who possessed the moiety of it by his father's will. He died in 1689, leaving four sons and two daughters; of whom Susan married Gilbert Innes; and Jane married Peter Gleane. The sons were, Peter, of in 1778, conveyed it to John Fowell, of Bishopborne, D.D. and he, together with the descendants of Mr. Thomas Alkin above-mentioned, in 1779, conveyed the whole of it to Mr. Henry Jessard, of Statenborough, gent. who in 1791 alienated it to Mr. Stephen Southerden, and he in 1793 passed it away by sale, to Peter Feltor, of Dover, esq; the present owner of it (w).

BUCKLAND.

The ville and farm of Buckland, written in Domesday, Bocoland, lies at a small distance south-eastward from Grove manor. About the year 1074, Odo, Bishop of Baieux, had some interest in this place, for he then gave to St. Augustine's monastery, in Canterbury, certain tythe in the small villa of Bocklande, which Roger de Malmains, who became lord of the fee after the Bishop's disgrace not long afterwards, and the confiscation of his estates, took from it (x); and it appears by the survey of Domesday, taken about the year 1080, that the Archbishop of Canterbury had likewise some estate here, which was held of him by knights service, under which title it is thus entered in it.

Elizabeth Peters, the daughter above-mentioned, married in 1722, Thomas Barrett, of Lee, esq; and she, or their sole daughter Elizabeth, sold her interest in it, in 1757, for 800*l.* to Thomas Alkin, of Canterbury, gent.

Lewis de la Pierre, alias Peters, last mentioned, of Canterbury, gent. by his will, in 1744, devised his part to James, son of Walter Franklyn, by Jane his niece; which James Franklyn, by his will, in 1751, gave it to his father Walter Franklyn, who in 1757 conveyed it for 800*l.* to Mr. Thomas Alkin, above-mentioned.

(w) The demesne lands of this manor are 180 acres, of about the yearly value of 184*l.* The manor house is old and ruinous, but not beyond a common farm house. The antient mansion stood a little northward of the present house, as it should seem, where there is a small square plat of ground, moated round, which could hardly be for any other purpose.

The manor of Knolton claims over this manor, which pays a castle guard rent of 11*s.* to Dover Castle.

WOODNESBOROUGH.

Roger de Malmains, as has been mentioned above, afterwards became lord of the fee of this estate, which was held of his descendants by a family who assumed their name from it; and in an antient deed, of the gift of lands to St. Bartholomew's hospital, in Sandwich, mention is made of lands in this parish abutting to those of the heirs of Matthew de Bockland, and among the witnesses are Richard de Bockland, and Bernard, and Robert, sons of Matthew de Bockland; besides which, there is mention made of this name in several other antient deeds, belonging to the above hospital (y). How long they continued here, or who possessed it afterwards, I have not found for a great length of time, but in the year 1553 it was in the possession of the name of Wollet, for William Wollet, of Eastry, then died seized of it, and devised it to Daniel Wollet his son, by the name of Buckland Barns, with the lands, &c. so that then, most probably, there was no house here. He sold it to Thomas Appleton, of Eastry, who died in 1593, leaving two daughters his coheirs, viz. Joane married to Thomas Boteler, of Hernden, gent. and Elizabeth to Thomas Berry, of Canterbury, gent. which latter became, in right of his wife, possessed of it, and he sold it to sr Samuel Peyton, of Knolton, bart. who owned it in 1622, in whose descendants it continued for some time afterwards. The next owner that I have found of it, is of the name of Barnes, and in 1750, Elizabeth Barnes, of London, appears to have been owner of it; she devised it by will to Mr. Rich, of London, whose widow Elizabeth is in the possession of it for her life, but the reversion of it was in 1783 purchased by Samuel Whitbread, late of London, esq; not long since deceased.

PORTION OF TYTHES.

The great and small tythes of the ville of Buckland, containing 86 acres, together with those of the manor of Ringleton, being an estate in fee, have been in the hands of the lessees of the Parsonage of this parish for many years past, the late proprietor being Oliver Stephens, of Woodnesborough Parsonage, esq; lately deceased.

accounted a manor. It was once the estate of the Clitberows, but how long it continued in that name I know not; however in the beginning of the last century it was in the hands of several different owners, whose properties in it at length passed wholly into the name of Hatchet, who in 1675 conveyed it to Barton, and he, at no long interval afterwards, passed it away to Elgar, and George Elgar, in 1682, alienated it to John Dowden, but in the year 1703, Scorier and others conveyed it to Smith, in which name it descended to Mr. Richard Smith, who becoming a bankrupt, his assignees in 1749 sold it to Richard Solly, of Sandwich, esq; upon whose death in 1789 it came to his only son Richard Heaton Solly, of St. Margaret's, the present possessor of it (z).

LITTLE POULDERS was formerly the property of the Terrys of Ospringe, in which it continued till it was carried in marriage by Olive Terry, in 1749, to Nathaniel Marsh, esq; whose son Terry Marsh, of Canterbury, esq; died possessed of it in 1789, and was buried in a vault, with the family of Terry, in Staple church, and his widow, daughter of Peirce, is now in the possession of it.

DENN COURT

is a manor in the southern part of this parish, adjoining to the borough of Hammill, which in K. Richard II.'s reign belonged to sr Nicholas de Daubridgecourt, knt. who in the 13th year of that reign conveyed it by sale to Tho. Elys, of Sandwich, and he having procured a licence of mortmain, conveyed it to certain feoffees for the endowment of the hospital of St. Thomas, of Sandwich, usually called Ellis's hospital, part of of the possessions of which it remains at this time (a).

HAMWOLD,

or as it is now called, Hammill, is a borough and district in the western part of this parish, which in the survey of Domesday is written both Hamolde, and Aimolde, at the time of taking which it was part of the possessions of Odo, Bishop of Baieux, the Conqueror's half-brother, under the title of whose lands it is thus described in it.

In 1535, this estate was estimated to contain 160 acres of land, of the annual rent of 10l. per annum. In 1703, it was let at 95l. per annum. In 1757, at 110l. afterwards at 140l. By lease in 1792, at 220l. per annum. See Boys's Sandwich, p. 149 et seq.

This description certainly comprehends, at least, the two manors of Hamwold, one of which, now called or Hammill, as it is usually pronounced, was antiently written in deeds and old evidences, Hammonds, alias Teukers, and sometime after the conquest was become the estate of Osburn Hacket, who gave the tythes of it to the priory of Rockester (b), and in his descendants it continued down to Ralph Hacket (c), who held it at the latter end of K. Henry III, or beginning of K. Edward I.'s reign, as appears by the book of knight's fees of that time, as one knight's fee in Hammell, of Geoffry de Say; how long it continued in this name, does not appear, but on the aid, levied in the 20th year of K. Edward III, there seems to be in the book of it two different entries concerning this place, viz. Of the heirs of Charles de Horton for one fee, which Tho. de Horton and Edward de Piato held in Hamwold, of Geoffry de Say.

And a little further: Of Peter Goldesborough for half a fee, which John de Malmains held in Shelving, Hamwold, and Woodnesborough, of Geoffry de Say.

After which, the family of Greenshield, whose principal seat was at Whitstaple (d), became possessors of it, probably long before there is any mention made of them as such, for there is no evidence of their property here, till the beginning of K. Henry VI.'s reign, when John Greenshield was possessed of it, whose son Henry Greenshield, of Sandwich, died in the last year of K.

Edward IV. without issue, seized of this manor, which he by his last will, proved at Canterbury, ordered, as well as his other estates, to be sold (e); and he appears by it to have been possessed by descent, of lands besides at Whitstaple, Herne, and Sandwich. His feoffees alienated this manor to the Elys's, of Sandwich, whence it passed by sale to Wilson, from which name it was alienated to Mr. Edmund Parbo, of Sandwich (f), who died possessed of it in 1640, and was buried in the church yard of St. Peter there, leaving Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Nicholas Richardson, of Sandwich, surviving, who held it in jointure at her death in 1664; they left no issue male surviving (g), so that this manor came by his will to the issue of his sole daughter and heir Elizabeth, (who died before her mother in 1657,) by her husband Capt. John Boys, of Sandwich; in whose descendants it continued, till it was at length, by one of them in 1711, conveyed by sale to Mr. Ralph Terry, who built the present house, which is a handsome one, on it.

After which it became vested, as it is presumed, by way of mortgage, in John Lynch, of Groves, in Staple, esq; by virtue of which he came into possession of it, and his heirs afterwards in 1762, together with the sons of Mr. Ralph Terry, above-mentioned, joined in the conveyance of the fee simple of this manor to sir Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, bart. who died possessed of it in 1791, and his eldest surviving son, of the same name and place, bart. is at this time intitled to it (h).

HAMWOLD COURT,

usually called Hammill Court, and formerly Lower Hammill, to distinguish it from that above-mentioned, is situated at no great distance from it. This estate was always accounted a manor, though for some time since it has lost of Hales Owen, in Shropshire; and Edmund the second, above-mentioned, the purchaser of this manor, was first of Staples Inn, London, and afterwards of Sandwich, gent. and died in 1640, having been twice married; first, to Abigail Gibbs, of Sandwich, by whom he had no issue; and secondly, to Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Richardson, of Sandwich, who died in 1664, by whom he had issue Edmund, who died before him in 1638, unmarried; and Elizabeth, who became his heir, and died in 1657, having married Captain John Boys, of Sandwich, by whom she had a numerous issue; one of whom, William, being his second son, was ancestor of William Boys, esq; now of Sandwich. The Parbo's bore for their arms—Vert, semee of fleurs de lis, fretty or, a chief ermine.

There is a pedigree of them in the Heraldic Visitation of Kent, anno 1619.

In the 20th year of K. Edward III. *Tbo. Henry VIII. to Mr. Nicholas Moyes, gent. and he conveyed it to Rogers, of London, brewer, whoſe heir paſſed it away to Everard (i), as he did to Roger James, of London, merchant, who by will in the 31ſt year of Q. PORTION OF TYTHES.

The portion of tythes in this diſtrict of Ham-mill, which belonged to the priory of Rocheſter, as mentioned above, as given to it by Oſbern Hacket, owner of the manor of Upper Hamwold, was valued in the 8th year of K. Richard II. at 25s. per annum; on the diſſolution of the priory, in the 31ſt year of K. Henry VIII, this portion of tythes came into the hands of the crown, and was granted by the king, in his 33d year, to his new founded Dean and Chapter of Rocheſter, part of whoſe poſſeſſions it remains at this time.

THE MANOR OF RINGLETON,

or Ringſton, as it is ſometimes written, is ſituated about three-quarters of a mile weſtward from Woodneſborough church, and at the time of taking the ſurvey of Domeſday, was likewise part of the poſſeſſions of Odo, Biſhop of Baieux, under the title of whoſe lands it is thus entered in it.

Edward I.'s reign (o); from whose heirs it descended in like manner as Knolton to John de Sandhurst, who left an only daughter and heir Christian, who married William de Langley, by which marriage he became entitled to it; his heirs passed it away to Robert White, whose heirs held it in the 20th year of K. Sir John White, of Canterbury, knt. a descendant of Robert White above-mentioned, died seised of it in the 9th year of K. Edward IV. He left Thomas White his son and heir, who in pursuance of his father's will, for the purpose of raising a sum of money for charitable uses, alienated it to Boteler, or Butler, of Heronenden, in the adjoining parish of Eastry, from which name it was passed away by sale to Neame, whose son Daniel Neame sold it to Spencer, and his successor Nicholas Spencer, gent. customer of Sandwich, in Q. Elizabeth's reign, dying without issue (r), his sister Anne entitled her husband Mr. Andrew Hugbes to the possession of it. He died seised of it in 1628, leaving it to his son Leonard Hugbes, gent. (s) in whose descendants it continued, till it was at length carried by a female heir of this name, in marriage to Justinian Champneis, of Westenbanger, esq; who died possessed of it, far advanced in years, in 1748, leaving issue three sons, Justinian, Wm. and Henry, on whom this manor devolved, in such proportions as was limited by his marriage settlement, according to which it has, with Westenbanger, and his other estates, ever since continued (t), being now vested, one sixth part

PORTION OF TYTHES.

It appears by the register of Ledes Abbey, that Sibilla de Watemle, for the remission of her sins, and for the soul of her lord Alan Pirot, gave to that priory, in pure and perpetual alms, among other premises, the rent of two shillings in the ville of Ringleton; to which grant was a witness, among others Robert Pirot, lord of the fee (v).

In the year 1074, Odo, Bishop of Baieux, and Earl of Kent, gave to St. Augustin's monastery, those tythes which his tenants had, that is, Adebold, the chamberlain, in the 3 vills of Knolton, Tickenhurst, and Ringleton, among others, and these he gave with the King's consent, who by his charter confirmed it; but these tythes were afterwards taken away from the monastery, by William de Albeni, the lord of the fee of those lands (w).

The great and small tythes of the manor of Ringleton, and the ville of Buckland, in this parish, were granted by K. James I, in fee, at the yearly rent of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to Thomas Blychenden, esq; The total number of acres belonging to the manor of Ringleton being 226, and those in the ville of Beckland 86 acres. THE MANOR OF POLTON, as it is usually called, is situated in the north-west part of this parish, next to Asb; its original name was Poltmans, being so called from a family who resided at it, their mansion here being castellated and surrounded with a moat, and they continued lords of it down to Peter Poltman, who was seized of it in the reign of K. Richard II, in the 15th year of which he passed it away, by fine, to Langley, of Knolton, in whom the possession of it remained till K. Henry VI.'s reign, when it was alienated to sir John Whyte, of Canterbury, knt. who died seized of it in the 9th year of K. Edward IV, and by his will directed it to be sold for charitable uses (y), in pursuance of which, his son Thomas Whyte, conveyed it to Richard Boteler, of Heronden, in Eastry, who died possessed of it in 1477, and in his descendants it stayed till the beginning of K. James I.'s reign, when William Boteler sold it to Benskin, from whom it descended down to Vincent Benskin, who possessed it in the 22d year of K. Charles II. (z) and was succeeded in it by James Benskin, of Asb, Cl. who became his heir and left a son John (a), whose heirs sold it to Mr. William Barne, of London, whose nephew of the same name succeeded him in it, and was owner of it in the beginning of K. George I.'s reign; after which it became the property of Lieutenant-Colonel Christopher Kien, who died seized of it in 1744 (b), leaving his wife Jane surviving, who possessed it at her death in 1762 without issue (c); she devised it by her will to Evert George Cousemaker, esq; who died next year, upon which his wife Mary, daughter of Gervas Hayward, of Sandwich, gent. became entitled to it, and carried her interest in it to

PRESENT STATE OF WOODNESBOROUGH.

This parish is large, being two miles and an half from north to south, and upwards of a mile and an half from east to west. The church stands nearly in the center of it, on high ground. At a small distance from the church is Woodnesborough hill, both of which are sea marks. This hill is a very high mount, seemingly thrown up by art, and consisting of a sandy earth, it has been thought by some to have been the place, on which the idol Woden (from whom this place is supposed to have taken its name) was worshipped in the time of the Saxons; by others to be the burial place of Vortimer, the Saxon King, who died in 457 (f), whilst others suppose this mount was raised over those who fell in the battle fought between Coolred, King of Mercia, and Ina, King of the West Saxons, in the year 715, at Woodnesbeorb, according to the Saxon Chronicle, which name Dr. Plot supposes to be Woodnesborough.

At a small distance northward from hence, at the bottom of a short steep hill, lies the village called Woodnesborough street, and sometimes Cold Friday-street (g), containing 34 houses. The vicarage house is situated in the middle of it, on

(e) The house of Poltman is a large square building, seemingly of the reign of K. James I, probably erected by the Benskins; Colonel Kien modernized it in part, and although in a low situation, being moated round, it exhibits a respectable appearance.

(f) Vortimer, as our historians tell us, at his death, desired to be buried near the place where the Saxons used to land, being persuaded that his bones would deter them from any attempt in future. Though authors differ much on the place of his burial, yet this mount at Woodnesborough is as probable, or more so, perhaps, than any other, for it was near to, and was cast up so high as to be plainly seen from, the Portus Rutupinus, which at that time was the general landing place of the Saxon fleets. Some years ago there were found upon the top of it sundry sepulchral remains, viz. a glass vessel (engraved by the Rev. Mr. Douglas, in his Næmia;) a fibula, (engraved by Mr. Boys, in his collections for Sandwich;) the head of a spear, and some fragments of Roman vessels. Much of the earth or sand has been lately removed round the sides of it, but nothing further has been found.

(g) It cannot but occur to the reader, how much this parish abounds with Saxon names, beside the name of the north side, being a new handsome building; almost contiguous to it is a handsome slated house, belonging to the Full family, now made use of as a poor house; through this street the road leads to Sandwich. About a quarter of a mile westward of the street stands the parsonage house, late the seat of Oliver Stephens, esq; deceased, as will be further noticed below. Besides the manors and estates in this parish, particularly described above, in the west and north-west part of it are several hamlets, as Somerfield (b), Barnsole, part of which is in the parish of Staple, Coombe (i), with New-street, Great and Little Flemings (k), Ringlemere (l), and the farm of Christians Court.

In the north-east part of the parish, the road from Eastry, by the parsonage of Woodnesborough north westward, divides; that westward, which in ancient deeds is called Lovekys-street, going towards Asb-street; the other north-eastward, through the hamlet of Marshborough, formerly called Marshborough, alias Stipins (m), to Each End (n) and Sandwich, the two windmills close to the entrance of which are within the bounds of this parish.

This parish contains 12 houses, and about 3000 acres, the whole rents of it being about 337*l.* yearly value. It is very bare of coppice wood; the Old Wood, so called, in Ringleton, being the only one in it. The soil of this parish is very rich and fertile, equal to those the most so in this neighbourhood, particularly as to the plantations of hops, which Wodens borough; the above street is certainly derived from the Saxon words, Co'a, and Friga, which latter was the name of a Goddess, worshipped by the Saxons, and her day Friye deag, from whence our day of Friday is derived; other places in this parish claim, surely, their original from the same language; such as Coombe, Poldre, Den Court, Grove, Marshburg, Bockland, Ringmere, Flemings, Hamwold, Sumerfeld, Beornsole, &c.

(b) This hamlet contains eight houses, the upper road, leading from Barnsole though it, divides the parishes of Woodnesborough and Staple.

(i) Coombe, with three cottages in New street, contains nine houses. In K. Edward III.'s reign it was in the possession of a family of the same name. Thomas, son of John at Coombe, was then possessed of it, against whom, in the 17th of that reign, an assize was brought by Roberge his mother, for a rent of 15*s.* and other tenements in Wodnesberge, Folkestane, and Essebe, as being tenements in gavelkind, and assigned to her as her dower; and she recovered judgment for them accordingly. See Robinson's gavelkind, p. 162.

(k) Flemings hamlet consists of five houses, among which is the estate of Great Flemings, on the north side of the road leading from Ringmere to Staple, about 80 acres of land, of the yearly value of 70*l.* It has been long in the possession of the family of Gibbs, and is now the property of William Gibbs Deale, who resides in it. Little Flemings, is an estate on the south side of the road, containing about 100 acres of land, of the yearly value of 117*l.* it now belongs, three 3d parts to Henry Matson, of Sandwich, esq; and the other 3d part to John Wrake, who resides in it.

have much increased within these few years past. The middle of the parish is high ground, in general a flat open country of arable common fields. West and south-westward the lands are more inclosed with hedges. North and north-westward of the parsonage, towards Sandwich, they are low and wet, consisting of a large level of marsh land, the nearness of which makes the other parts of this parish rather unhealthy, which is not otherwise very pleasant in any part of it. There was a fair held here yearly, on Holy Thursday, but it has been for some time disused.

K. Henry VIII, in his 36th year, granted to John Master, lands in this parish, called Boxley Lees, alias le Harpe, containing 60 acres of marsh land, held in capite, and then in the tenure of Vincent Engbam (o).

In Ringleton field, in this parish, there was found about the year 1514, a fine gold coin, weighing about 12 shillings, with a loop of the same metal to hang it by; on one side was the figure of a young man in armour, a helmet on his head, and a spear over his right shoulder; on the reverse, the figure of Victory with a sword in her hand, the point downwards (p).

CHARITIES.

Thomas Appleton, of Eastry, yeoman, by his will, proved in 1593, gave to the relief of the poor of this parish 5*l.* to be paid to the churchwardens yearly, to be distributed by them to the use of the poor people, inhabitants here, 14 of four houses; in it is a farm of 60 acres, rent 70*l.* belonging to Mr. William Philpot, attorney and town-clerk, of Sandwich, and his sisters.

(m) This hamlet contains 23 houses, among which is a very principal farm, called Marshborough farm, containing 168 acres, of the annual value of 154*l.* on which is a handsome house. In K. James I.'s reign it belonged to sr John Preude, of Canterbury, knt. who died in 1627, and devised it to his son Edward Preude, esq; from whose descendants it passed by sale into the family of Gillow, in which it has ever since continued, Thomas Gillo of St. Nicholas, in Tbanet, esq; being the present owner of it. This estate pays quit-rent to the several manors of Knolton, the Rectory of Woodnesborough, and Grove.

(n) Each, Upper Each, called antiently Upriche, and Each End, antiently called Netheriche, were both formerly accounted manors, and are mentioned as such in the marriage settlement of Henry Whyte, esq; in the beginning of Q. Elizabeth's reign. After the Whyte's, these manors passed in like manner as Grove in this parish, to the James's.—Upper Each or Upriche, now contains 116 acres. It has for many years belonged to the family of Abbot, of Ramsgate, and is now the property of John Abbot, of Canterbury, esq. It pays quit-rent to both the manors of Knolton, and Grove. Each End or Netheriche, contains 80 acres, and belongs, one moiety to the heirs or devisees of the late Earl of Strafford, and the other moiety to John Matson, of Sandwich, esq. It pays quitrent to the manors of Knolton, and Gosball.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

Woodnesborough is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, consists of a nave, two isles, having a square tower steeple at the west end, with a modern wooden turret and vane at the top of it, in which hang five bells, made in 1676 (q).

The church of Woodnesborough was given, in the reign of K. Henry I, by a religious woman, one Ascelina de Wodensberg, to the priory of Ledes, soon after the foundation of it; to which deed was witness Robert de Crevequer, founder of the priory, Elias his son, and others; which gift was confirmed by the said Robert, who by his charter, released to the priory all his right and Against the wall, under the canopy, two brass plates, which have been removed to this place, from two grave-stones in the chancel; on the first, in black letter: "Here lieth for John Parcar, late vicar of this church, which died the v. dai of May, a^o dni m^o v^o xij^o ̄ 5 h Soul god have meci;" on the second, Latin verses to the memory of Nichs Spencer, esq; obiit 1593. Archbishop William Corboil, who came to the see of Canterbury, three years after the foundation of Ledes priory, at the instance and petition of Ascelina above-mentioned, who resigned this church into his hands for this purpose, granted and appropriated it to the Prior and Convent, for the finding of necessary cloaths for the canons there for ever (r); and a vicarage was accordingly endowed in it.

There was a controversy between the Prior and Convent of Ledes, and Adam, Vicar of this church, in the year 1267, anno 14 Henry II, concerning the great tythes arising from the crofts and curtilages within this parish, which was referred to the Prior of Rockester, who was the Pope's delegate for this purpose (rr), who determined that the Prior and Convent of Ledes,

There were formerly painted in the windows of this church, these arms—Or, a chief indented azure, for John de Sandwich—Argent, 5 bars azure, 8 martlets sable, for Valence—Gules, 3 garbs or, azure, a fret argent, a chief or, for St. Leger—Argent, 3 leaves in sinister bend, their points downward proper—On a canton azure, 3 crescents or, for Grove—Ermine, 3 lozenges, for Hull—Argent, 3 escallops in chief or, in base a crescent gules, for Helpestone, usually called Hilparton, Bailiff of Sandwich, in 1299.—A shield being Helpestone's badge, viz.—Gules, a stag's head caboshed or, pierced through on each side above the ears with two arrows in fess, and another arrow in base, piercing its mouth, the arrows or, feathered argent; on each of the arrows in fess, a bugle horn stringed appendant, argent.—On a fess engrailed, 3 cinquefoils between 3 garbs, for John Hill, of Nassall, in the co. of Stafford, who lies buried in this church.—A fess engrailed, 3 lions rampant in chief on the fess, a crescent for difference, for Spencer, customer, of Sandwich.—Quarterly, 4 coats; first, on a chevron, 3 quarterfoils; second, per pale, ermine and argent; third, a cross between 4 pomegranates slipped; fourth, 3 bars wavy, for Michael Heyre, Vicar here in 1520.

which still continues part of the possessions of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester, has been from time to time demised by them, on a beneficial lease. It was formerly held by the family of Appleton, who resided at the parsonage. John Appleton died possessed of the lease of it in 1566, as did Thomas Appleton in 1593; soon after which the Blechynden's, a branch of those of Aldington, became possessed of it, and Thomas Blechynden, esq; died possessed of it in 1661, and was buried in this church; his heirs afterwards passed away their interest in it to John Cason, esq; who resided here, and died in 1718. He left by Mary Brown his wife, one son John, and two daughters; which John Cason, esq; the son, succeeded his father in his interest in this parsonage, but dying without issue in 1755, Sarah his youngest sister, married to William Docksey, of Shelston, in Derbyshire, esq; became in her right entitled to it, and died in 1760, as did Sarah his wife in 1774 (v), and she devised the lease of it to Anne, the daughter of Matthew Bookey, Cl. Vicar of St. Laurence, in Thanet (w), then the wife of Oliver Stephens, esq; who in her right became entitled to it, and resided at the parsonage. He died in 1795, leaving her

The lessee was the immediate tenant, who was bound to repair the premises, and the chancel of the parish church. The right and patronage of presentation to the vicarage was reserved to the Dean and Chapter and their successors. WORD, WRITTEN formerly Wortbe, is the next parish eastward from Woodnesborough, which latter is the original Saxon name, the letter d in that language being stricken through, making it the same sound as th'o.

There are three boroughs in this parish, viz. Felderland, Word-street, and Hackling; the boroughs for the two former of which are appointed at Eastry Court, being within the jurisdiction of that manor; for the latter at Adisham, which manor claims over a part of this borough.

The principal manor in this parish is that of written in Saxon, Hlyden, which was given by Offa, King of Mercia, in the year 774, at the request of Archbishop Jambert, to the church of Christ, in Canterbury, L. S. A. as the charter expresses it, meaning, with the same franchises and liberties that the manor of Adisham had before been given to it (p). After which, this manor continued with the priory of Christ Church, and K. Edward I, in his 7th year, granted to it the liberty and franchise of wreck of the sea, apud le Lyde, which I suppose to be this

(o) Verstegan, in his explanation of antient English words, says, Wearth or Werd, signifies a place situate between two rivers on the nook of land where two waters, passing by two sides thereof, do enter the one into the other; and further he says: it is also sometimes taken for an isle, or peninsula, not in the sea but in fresh waters; this answers well to the village of Wortbe, which is on the ridge of a point of land running eastward upon Lydden Valley, and had formerly the sea or rather the waters of the mouth of the River Stour on each side of it, to the north and south. Lewis, Earl of Rockingham, and 2dly to Francis, Earl of Guildford, to whom on her death in 1766, she devised this estate. He died possessed of it in 1790, and his grandson, the Right Hon. George Augustus, Earl of Guildford, is the present possessor of it (y).

In the year 1565, there was a suit in the star chamber, respecting a road from Sandown gate, in Sandwich, to the castle in the Downes, which was referred to the Archbishop and sir Richard Sackville; who awarded, that there should be a highway 16 feet broad over Lyd Court grounds.

so called from the sand downs over which it principally extends, is a manor, which lies partly in this parish, and partly in that of St. Clement's, in Sandwich, within the jurisdiction of which corporation the latter part of it is. This manor was antiently the estate of the Perots, who held the same, as the private deeds of this name and family shew, as high at the reign of K. Henry III. Thomas de Perot died possessed of it in the 4th year of that reign (z), at which time he had those privileges and franchises, the same as other manors of that time; Henry Perot, the last of this name, at the beginning of K. Edward III.'s reign, was succeeded by John de Sandhurst, who left an only daughter and heir Christian, who married Wm. de Langley, in whose descendants it continued down to Edward Langley, of Knolton, esq; who died without issue, having married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Peyton, of the co. of Cambridge, esq; whom he left surviving and in the possession of it, and she afterwards remarried sir Edward Ringeley, knt. who became intitled to it in her right (a).

Upon her death this manor became the property of her brother sir Robert Peyton, of Iselham, (y) This estate comprehends all that tract of land, partly sandy, partly marshy, and the whole nearly pasturage, lying on the south side of Sandwich Haven, bounded on the east by the sea shore, and on the west by the ditch, along which the foot-way to Deal leads, and which is the eastern boundary of Lyde Court Inngrounds. It extends southward, almost to the half-way house to Deal, and a little way there into the parish of Sholden. It is assessed to the parish of Word at 432l.

PRESENT STATE OF WORD.

THE parish of Word lies very flat and low, and is very unhealthy; it is in shape very long and narrow, being near three miles from east to west, and not more than one mile from north to south. The village called Word-street, containing 29 houses, having the church close to it, is situated nearly in the middle of the parish; at the southern extremity of which, is the hamlet of Hackling, containing five houses, the principal estate in which, called Hackling farm, belongs to Mrs. Eleanor Dare, of Felderland (b). At the western extremity of the parish is the borough and hamlet of Felderland, or Fenderland, partly in Word, and partly in Eastry, formerly esteemed a manor, now belonging to the Right Honorable George Clavering, Earl Cowper (c); adjoining to which eastward, but in the same borough, is the farm of Upton, situated about a quarter of a mile westward of the church, the estate of which for 3250l. to William Dare, esq; and he on his death in 1770, gave it to his wife Eleanor for life; remainder to his sisters Mary, Susan, and Elizabeth.

(c) This estate formerly belonged to the Manwoods, afterwards to the Harveys, of Combe, and sir Daniel Harvey's heirs sold it to the ancestor of Earl Cowper. In an act passed anno 9 George II. for the settlement of the estates of Wm. Earl Cowper, in appears, that he was possessed of Felderland farm, containing 163 acres in Word and Eastry, and 32 acres in Word, Woodnesborough, and St. Mary, Sandwich, let at 180l. per ann. and of Upton farm, in Words, containing 120 acres, let at 120l. per ann. which premises, inter alia, were settled by it on Lady Cowper and her issue, in lieu of other premises elsewhere.

Sir Henry Oxenden, bart. is possessed of a farm in this hamlet, with 80 acres of land, assessed at 90l. per annum, which in 1693 belonged to sir James Oxenden, before the estate of John Gasen, gent. who purchased it of Stephen Browne.

likewise belongs to the Right Honourable Earl Cowper (d).

At a small distance further the marshes begin, wherein is a parcel of land called Wortb, or Worde Minnis, and belongs to bis Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury (e), the present lessee being Mr. Thomas Rammel, of Eastry (f). Here are two streams, called the south and north streams, which direct their course through these marshes north-westward towards Sandwich; the latter of these was formerly the famous water of Gestling, thro' which the sea once flowed, and was noted much for being the water in which felons were punished by arowning, and their bodies carried by the current of it into the sea (g). The marshes here are called Lydden valley, (from the manor of Lydde Court, in this parish, above described, called formerly Hlyden;) which is under the direction of the commissioners of sewers for the eastern parts of the county of Kent; and to which the north stream is the common sewer. The marshes continue beyond this stream about half a mile northward, where the sand downs begin.

These sand downs are a long bank of sand, covered with green sward of very unequal surface, and edge the sea shore for five miles and upwards from Pepperness, which is the south-east point of Sandwich bay, as far as Deal. It is about a quarter of a mile broad, except about the castle, which is, from its situation, called Sandowne castle (b), where it ends with the beach, but a

(e) The Minnis now pays, as a composition to the vicar for all small tythes, the yearly sum of 6*l.* 8*d.*

(f) Word Minnis is a parcel of marsh-land, containing 260 acres, assessed at 194*l.* per ann. It was antiently called in deeds La Menesse, alias Wortb Menesse, and appears by the clause roll of 11 Henry III, m. 7 & 10, to have then belonged to the priory of St. Martin, in Dover. (See Tan. Mon. p. 209.) At the dissolution, anno 27 Henry VIII, it came into the King's hands, and was two years afterwards granted in exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury, part of whose possessions it now remains, being demised by him on a beneficial lease for 21 years, at the yearly rent of 6*l.* In the leiger book of St. Martin's priory, in Dover, is a terrier of Wortb Menesse, made by 12 Jurats of the hundred of Corniloe, fol 164 (b), 165 (a). Mss. Lambeth.

This lease was held in 1708, by Margaret and Jeffery Boys, jointly; in 1710, George Farewell, of Boughton Blean, esq; executor to Mrs. Boys, sold the lease to Thomas Fuller, esq; of the heirs of whose son Thomas it was purchased in 1774 by Mr. Rammel, the present lessee.

(g) The Mayor and Barons of Sandwich had licence anno 15 Edward II, to stop this water, called Gestling. See an account of it under the hundred of Corniloe, p. 120, above.

(b) This castle is situated about half a mile from the north end of the town of Deal; it was built with Deal castle, and several others, by K. Henry VIII, in the year 1539, for the defence of this coast, each being built with four round lunetts of very thick stone arched work, with many large port holes; in the middle is a great round tower, with a large cistern for water on the top of it; underneath is an arched cavern, bomb proof; the whole is encompassed with a fossée, over which is a draw-bridge. It is under the government of the Lord Warden, who appoints the Captain and other officers of it, by the Act of 32d of K. Henry VIII, cap. 48. This castle has lately had some little repair made to it, which, however, has made it but barely habitable.

little way within the shore, about the middle of it is a cut, called the Old Haven, which runs flanting from the sea along these downs, near but not quite into the river Stour, about three quarters of a mile eastward below Sandwich.

This parish contains about 50 houses. The lands in it are of about the annual value of 3000*l.* The soil is very rich and fertile, and may properly be called the garden of this part of Kent, and is the most productive for wheat, of any perhaps within the county. There are no woodlands in it. There is no fair, nor any parochial charities.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

WORD is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Sandwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a small mean building, having a low pointed wooden turret at the west end (k), in which are two bells.

The establishment and pay of the garrison in 1682, was a Captain, Lieutenant, two porters, and eight gunners, and amounted to the sum of 138*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* yearly money. See the award made in relation to a road over the Downes from Sandwich to this castle in 1565, above, p. 244.

(i) This estate is assessed at 70*l.* per annum.

(k) It consists of a nave, two isles, and a chancel, the north isle extending only about half way towards the west end. In the south wall of the chancel is an arched tomb, on which probably was once the figure of some person, who was the founder, or at least a good benefactor towards the building. In the nave is a memorial for Mr. Charles Matson, of Upton farm, obiit 1791, et. 39. In the south isle are memorials for Mrs. Jane Philpott, widow of Mr. William Philpott, obiit 1744, et. 47; Mr. Ralph Philpot, late of Woodnesborough, son of William Philpott, of Eastry, by Mary his wife, obiit 1768, et. 49; William Philpott, of Eastry, gent. obiit 1742, et. 52; Mary, wife of Mr. William Philpott, obiit 1720, et. 25; Elizabeth, relict of Ralph Philpott, and daughter of John and Elizabeth Denne, of Patricborne, in Kent, yeoman, obiit 1754, et. 93, having survived her husband 50 years; Ralph Philpott, of Word, obiit 1672, et. 70; Katherine, only wife of the said Ralph Philpott, obiit 1650.

The church of Word or Worth, has ever been esteemed as a chapel to the mother church of Eastry, and continues so at this time, being accounted as a part of the same appropriation, a further account of which may be seen in the description of that church above, p. 228. The Vicar of Eastry is indued to the vicarage of the church of Eastry, with the chapels of Skrinkling and Word annexed to it (l).

It is included with the church of Eastry in the valuation of it in the King's books (m).

The rectorial or great tythes of this parish, as part of the rectory of Eastry, are demised on a beneficial lease by the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, in Canterbury; the Countess Dowager of Guildford having, by the late Earl's will, the present interest in this lease (n).

The lessee of the parsonage is bound by the lease, to the repair of the chancel of this church.

within the jurisdiction of the Justices of its own corporation.

Sandwich had in ancient time several members appertaining to it (p), called the antient Members of the port of Sandwich; these were Fordwich, Reculver, Sarre, Stonar, and Deal; but in the later charters, the members mentioned are Fordwich incorporated, and the non-incorporated members of Deal, Walmer, Ramsgate, Stonar, Sarre, all in this county, and Brightlingsea, in the county of Suffex; but of late years, Deal, Walmer, and Stonar have been taken from it; Deal, by having been in 1699 incorporated with the charter of a separate jurisdiction, in the bounds of which Walmer is included (q); and Stonar having been, by a late decision of the Court of King's Bench 1773, adjudged to be within the jurisdiction of the county at large.

At first, this port and its members furnished to the general quota of shipping five ships, in each ship 21 men, with one boy, called a gromet, but afterwards, as occasion required; some alterations were made in the proportions and allotments furnished by the several ports; in particular Sandwich consented to the increase of five ships, and afterwards, with its members furnished ten ships and an half, to make its quota proportionable to the other ports.

The first origin of this port was owing to the decay of that of Richborough, as will be further noticed below. It was at first called Lundenwic, from its being the entrance to the port of London, for so it was, on the sea coast. Those who took shipping from France, to that city, landing here, and taking shipping again from hence; and this name it retained until the supplanting of the Saxons by the Danes, when it acquired from its sandy situation a new name, being from thence forward called Sandwic, in old Latin, Sabulovicum, that is, the sandy town, and in process of time, by the change of language, Sandwich, the name it retains at present (r).

Where this town now stands, is supposed, in miles from the shore; and so south, to the north head of the Goodwin sand, and thence in a supposed direct line, along the said Goodwin sand bearing south, till it falls opposite to Sandowne castle, bearing from the said castle to the said Goodwin sand, east and by south, and about five miles from the shore, being bounded all along with the said Goodwin sand; and so from the said bounds and limits south-west and by west, up the river or haven of Sandwich, to the key, formerly called Baldock's Key, now, 1794, the Upper Key, at the mouth of the Gessling.

(p) An account of the Cinque ports, their origin and use, has already been given in several of the former parts of this history, to which the reader will refer.

the time of the Romans, and before the decay of the haven, or Portus Rutupinus, to have been covered with that water, which formed the bay of it, which was so large, that it is said to have extended far beyond this place, on the one side almost to Ramsgate cliffs, and on the other near five miles in width, over the whole of that flat of land, on which Stonar and Sandwich too, were afterwards built, and extending from thence up to the estuary, which then flowed up between the Ile of Thanet and the main land of this county (s).

During the time of the Saxons, the haven and port of Richborough, the most frequented of any in this part of Britain, began to decay, and swarve up, the sea by degrees entirely deserting it at this place, but still leaving sufficient to form a large and commodious one at Sandwich, which in process of time, became in like manner, the usual resort for shipping, and arose a flourishing harbour in its stead; from which time the Saxon fleets, as well as those of the Danes, are said by the historians of those times, to sail for the port of Sandwich, and there to lie at different times, and no further mention is made of that of Richborough, which being thus destroyed, Sandwich became the port of general resort (t); which, as well as the building of this town, seems to have taken place, however, some while after the establishment of the Saxons in Britain, and the first time that is found of the name of Sandwich being mentioned and occurring as a port, is in the life of St. Wilfred, Abp. of York, written by Eddius Stephanus (u); in which it is said; he and his company, prospere in portum Sandwich, atque suaviter pervenerunt, happily and pleasantly arrived in the harbour of Sandwich, which happened about the year 665, or 666, somewhat more than 200 years after the arrival of the Saxons in Britain. During the time of the Danes infesting this kingdom, several of their principal transactions happened at this place, particularly in the year 851, when K. Ethelstan gave them battle at

Sea sand, flints rounded by the attrition of the waters, (usually in these parts called boulders,) shingle, or small stones mixed with broken shells, entire sea shells, and other marks of the sea shore, occur a few feet below the surface, in St. Mary's parish, and the other low parts of Sandwich, all which sufficiently point out the early state of this place. The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

Sandwich, and took nine of their ships (v). In the next spring, the Danes coming into the mouth of the Thames, landed in Kent and pillaged this place (w). Sweyn, K. of Denmark, and Olaus, K. of Norway, in 993, came to Sandwich with 93 ships, and having plundered it and the coast of Kent, returned with their booty (x). K. Sweyn, in 1006, sailing for England, arrived at Sandwich with his fleet, and immediately laid waste the neighbouring country with fire and sword (y). K. Ethelred II. equipped a numerous fleet in 1007, the largest and best England had ever seen, the rendezvous of which was at Sandwich (z). In the spring of the year 1009, the Danes set sail in two fleets for England, one of which arrived in East Anglia, under Turkill, and the other, under Heming and Anleff, came into Sandwich haven. These leaders joining their forces in Kent, plundered the country, and then returned home (a). In the year 1011, the Danes, leaving their winter quarters about London, came to Sandwich with a great army and fleet, on account of the commodiousness of the harbour, and the vicinity of it to Canterbury, which they afterwards besieged and plundered. Sweyn, K. of Denmark, in the year 1013, arrived at Sandwich with a numerous fleet, and a resolution to make a conquest of England, and sailed from hence northward towards the Humber and Trent, threatening the whole kingdom with ruin and desolation (b). K. Canute having settled his affairs in Denmark, returned next year, anno 1015, to England, and arrived with a numerous fleet and army at Sandwich, the port of which, the author of Q. Emma's life styles the most noted of all the English ports; his words are, expectabili ordine, flatu secundo, Sandwich qui est omnium Anglorum portuum famosissimus appulsi. Where he sent on shore all the English hostages, after depriving them of their hands, ears and noses; and upon his return he landed here with a numerous body of forces (c). In the year 1039 Hardicanute coming over to England to claim the crown, arrived with a fleet of 40 ships, about Midsummer, at Sandwich, where he landed, and was received with great demonstrations of joy, both by the English and Danes (d). In the reign of K. Edw.

the Confessor, anno 1046, some Danish pirates putting to sea with 25 ships, arrived unexpectedly at Sandwich, and having plundered it and the neighbouring country, carried off their booty, not without a great slaughter of the inhabitants (e). Lastly, in the year 1048, a fleet of Danish pirates landed here and miserably spoiled this town (f).

FROM THE TIME of the origin of the town of Sandwich, the property of it was vested in the several Kings who reigned over this country, and continued so till K. Ethelred, in the year 979, gave it, as the lands of his inheritance, to the church of Christ in Canterbury, to the use of the Monks serving God there, free from all secular service and fiscal tribute, except the repelling invasions, and the repairing of bridges and castles (g). After which K. Canute, having obtained the kingdom, finished the building of this town, and having all parts and places in the realm at his disposal, as coming to the possession of it by conquest, by his charter in the year 1023, gave to the above-mentioned church the crown, which he took from his head, and placed with his own hands on the altar of it, and (having no doubt some regard to the Monk's right and title to this place) gave, or rather restored for the support of the same church, and to the sustenance of the Monks of it (b), the port of Sandwich, and all the profits of the water of it on both sides of the stream, whomsoever the grounds belonged to, from Peperness to Mearkesfleete; that is to say, that so far upon the land, as a small hatchet, which the English called Taper-eak, could be thrown from a ship floating on it at high water, the dues of the ship should be taken by the servants of the church, and that no one at any time should have any custom in the port, excepting the Monks; and that the small ships and the passage across the port should likewise be theirs, and the toll of every ship, whosesoever it might be, and whencesoever it might come to the said port, and to Sandwich, and if there should be any thing on the high sea, without the port, which a man at the lowest ebb could reach, with what the English called a spreet, it should belong to the Monks; and whatever was found in this part of the mid-sea, and was brought to Sandwich, whatsoever it should be, one half of it the monks should have, and the other half should belong to the finders of it. To which charter were witnesses, Athelnoth, Archbishop of Canterbury; Alfric, Archbishop of York; Elfwine, Bishop of Winchester; Brightwold, Bishop of Cornwall; Ebelric, Bishop of Dorchester, and many others (i).

Soon after this, the town of Sandwich increased greatly in size and inhabitants, and on account of the commodity and use of its haven, and the service done by the shipping belonging to it, was of such estimation, as to be made one of the principal Cinque Ports; and in K. Edward the Confessor's days, it contained 307 houses, and was an hundred within itself; and it continued increasing, as appears by the description of it, in the survey of Domesday, taken in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, anno 1080, in which it is thus entered, under the title of the lands of the Archbishop.

Edward gave the same to the Holy Trinity, it payed to the King 15 pounds. At the time of K. Edward's death it was not put to ferme. When the Archbishop received it, it payed 40 pounds of ferme, and 40 thousand herrings to the food of the monks. In the year in which this description was made. Which is: In Estrei Hundred, in Sandwiche, the Archbishop has 32 houses, with plats of land belonging to this manor, (viz. Golleberge) and they pay 42 shillings and 8 pence, and Adeluold has 1 yoke, which is worth 10 shillings (k).

These houses, with all the liberties which the Bishop of Baieux had in Sandwiche, had been given by him to Christ Church in Canterbury, and confirmed to it in the year 1075, by his brother the Conqueror (l).

Afterwards K. Henry II. granted, that the Monks should enjoy fully, all those liberties and customs in Sandwiche, which they had enjoyed in the time of K. Henry his grandfather, as was acknowledged in pursuance of his precept, by the oaths of 12 men of this place, viz. that the Monks should have the port and toil, and all maritime customs in the same port of Sandwiche, on both sides of the water, that is, from Eadburgate unto Merksfete, and the small boat to ferry across the port, and that no one should have any right there, except the Monks and their servants (m).

The town of Sandwiche, by these continued privileges, and the advantages it derived from the great resort to the port, increased much in wealth and number of inhabitants; and notwithstanding Lewis, the French King's eldest son, in the year 1217, anno 2 Henry III, came hither with 600 ships, and having landed, burnt great part of the town, yet the damage seems soon to have been recompensed by the favors bestowed on it by the several Kings, in confi-deration of the services it had continually afforded, in the shipping of this port, to the nation. The first example of royal favor, being shewn by the last mentioned King, was in his 11th year, who not only confirmed the customs before granted, but added the further grant of a market to this town and port (n); and in his 13th year granted the custom of taking two-pence for each cask of wine, received into the port of Sandwich (o).

After which, the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, in the 18th year of K. Edward I, gave up to his Queen Eleanor, all their rights, possessions, and privileges here, excepting their houses and keys, and a free passage in the haven, in the small boat, called the were boat (p), and free liberty for themselves and their tenants to buy and sell toll free; and this they gave in exchange for 60 librates of land, which should be in some other convenient place in Kent (q); the lands so given in exchange, were the manors of Terstane and West Farleigh, with the advowsons of the churches of Westcliffe and Westerbam (r); which gift and exchange the King confirmed that year (s); and as a favor to the town, he placed the staple for wool in it for some time (t).

The exception and reservation above-mentioned to the Prior and Convent, was afterwards found to be so very prejudicial, as well as inconvenient to the crown, that K. Edward III, in his 38th year, gave them the manor of Borle, in the co. of Essex, in exchange for the customs and rents, together with all their rights, privileges, and possessions, in this town and port (u). After which, K. Richard II, in his first year, removed the staple for wool from Queenborough, where it had been for some time, hither (v); and in his eighth year he gave orders for the fortifying and inclosing of this town; but it does not appear that any thing material was done in consequence of it; and the townsmen so far, afterwards, favoured the King, that in the 21st year of his reign, they lent him 100 marcs to supply his necessities (w).

During the whole of this period from the time of the conquest, this port continued the general rendezvous of the Royal fleets, and was as constantly visited by the several monarchs, who embarked here, and frequently returned again hither from France (x); the consequence of which was, that the town became so flourishing, that it had increased to between 8 and 900 houses inhabited, divided into three parishes; and there were of good and able mariners, belonging to the navy of it, above the number of 1500; so that when there was occasion at any time, the mayors of it, on the receipt of the King's letters, furnished, at the town's charges, to the seas, 15 sail of armed ships of war, which were of such continued annoyance to the French, that they in return made it a constant object of their revenge. In the 16th year of K. Henry VI, they landed here and plundered the greatest part of the inhabitants, which occasioned an increase of the fortifications of the town, by extending the wall of it towards the south, and a fort was afterwards ordered to be built on the new wall for ordnance; but before these intentions were effected to any purpose, the French again landed here in the 35th year of that reign, and plundered the town; but this not answering the whole of their purpose, Charles VIII, K. of France, determined to destroy it entirely, which he was assured could be the more easily effected, as the place was not then sufficiently fortified with bulwarks, walls, or ditches; for which purpose, in the same year, he sent the Marshal de Breze, Seneschal of Normandy, hither, who landed with 4000 men near Sandwich, in the night, and after a long and bloody conflict gained possession of the town, and having wasted it with fire and sword, he slew the greatest part of the inhabitants (y); and to add to these misfortunes it was again ransacked by the Earl of Warwick, in the same reign (z).

To preserve the town from such disasters in future, therefore, K. Edward IV. new walled, ditched, and fortified it with bulwarks, and gave besides, for the support of the same, to be paid during his life, the sum of 100*l.* yearly out of the custom-house here (a); which, together with the industry and efforts of the several merchants, who frequented this haven, the goodness of which, in any storm or contrary wind, when they were in danger from the breakers, or the Goodwin sands, afforded them a safe retreat; in a very short time restored it again to a flourishing state, inasmuch, that before the end of that reign, the clear yearly receipt of the customs here to that King, amounted to above the sum of 16 or 17,000*l.* and the town had 95 ships belonging to it, and above 1500 failors (b).

But this sunshine of prosperity lasted no long time afterwards, for in K. Henry VII.'s time, the river Stour, or as it was at this place anciently called, the Wansume, continued to decay so fast, as to leave on each side at low water, a considerable quantity of salts, which induced Cardinal Abp. Moreton, who had most part of the adjoining lands belonging to his Bishopric, for his own private advantage, to inclose and wall them in, near and about Sarre; which example was followed from time to time, by several owners of the lands adjoining, by which means the water was deprived of its usual course, and the haven felt the loss of it by a hasty decay.

Leland, who wrote in the reign of K. Henry VIII, gives the following description of Sandwich, as it was in his time (c). "Sandwich, on the farther side of the river of Sture, is neatly welle walled, where the town stonddeth most

(b) Before this, in 1452, anno 31 Henry VI, just before the misfortunes above-mentioned happened to it from the French, it appears to have been a very considerable place for trade; for that year it was enacted in Parliament, that Edmund, Duke of Somerset, late Captain of Calais, should be paid 21,648*l.* 1*cs.* out of the customs of the staple wares, which were carried out of the port of Sandwich; and but a few years after the King ordered 20,000*l.* more, to be paid out of the customs here and at Southampton. Cotton's Records, p. 650, 659.

There is mention made in the Tower Records, of the reign of K. Henry III, of the office of Chamberlain of Sandwich. This, the same as of London, was seemingly a great officer of the Crown for the receipt of customs, particularly of wines, in both those ports; and it appears from the persons of eminence who were appointed to it, that it was in early times of no small consequence.

The sinking of this great ship of Pope Paul IV. in the very mouth of the haven, by which the waters had not their free course as before, from the sand and mud gathering round about it (d), together with the innings of the lands on each side the stream, as has been mentioned above, had such a fatal effect towards the decay of the haven, that in the time of K. Edward VI. it was in a manner destroyed and lost, and the navy and mariners dwindled to almost nothing, and the houses then inhabited in this town did not exceed 200, the inhabitants of which were greatly impoverished; the yearly customs of the town, by reason of the insufficiency of the haven, were so deficient, that there was scarcely enough arising from it to satisfy the Customer his fee; all which was represented in a petition to the Lord Protector, Duke of Somerset, in the second year of the above reign, who granted a commission under the great seal, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and several noblemen and gentlemen of this county, to examine the state of the haven, and make a return of it; in consequence of which, a new cut was begun by one John Rogers, which, however was soon left in an unfinished state (e); upon which, by the command of Q. Elizabeth, in her second year, the Privy Council issued another commission for the like purpose, directed to the Lord Warden, and other principal gentry of this county, who, among other things, in their return to it, represented, that the old haven of Sandwich grew so crooked, and into such a flat bay, every day worse and worse, so that in a short space there would be no haven at all; therefore they adjudged, that the perfecting the new cut would not only prevent that destruction, but would be a means for the ships lying in it, to go in and out, at all seasons, and with all winds, which then they could not, and would bring such ships in deep water from them, directly into the road of the Downs; that the chief decay of the old haven was by stopping the northmouth and other inlets, as well as by the turning away, or altering the antient sewers of several of the vallies, which had, till within a few years before, sewed their waters through the haven.

That the perfecting this new cut, (which would be the only remedy for making a good haven, and would besides cause all the marsh lands lying in the vallies, and then under water, to issue the better, and be kept dry at all times,) would be in the times of war with France, a good and commodious harbour for all the Queen's ships, and that, a threefold commodity in the customs, as appeared by the records of antient times; and further, that if the cut was not perfected, the utter ruin and decay of this town would ensue, insomuch that the whole relief of it rested in a good haven, as well for the maintenance of merchants, as of fishermen, who would there repair; and great inconvenience would arise to the Queen, who had on all that side of the narrow seas, no haven fit for the harbour of her ships, the want of which was greatly discommodious, besides the awe and fear which the enemy would have, if such a haven were. This representation was made on the report of Henrique Jacobson, of Amsterdam, a man much experienced in great waterworks, who estimated the charge of this cut at 10,000l. But there was another report made to the Privy Council, by one Adrian Andriison, who represented, that the cut began by Rogers, would serve no great purpose, if it was perfected, which would cost as much, or more, than to make a new cut; that there was a more apt place for a cut more southward, where the ground was four feet lower, and therefore it would be of less charge and greater effect, that it would cost about 14,000l. that the marshes thereabouts would be much drier than they were then, and not drowned by occasion of that cut, that there was no other place so fit for an haven thereabouts, as this would be when perfected, which could not swarve or decay by sand, or any other inconvenience, but continue good, and daily become better and deeper by the abundance of the back waters, and that the old haven, which was grown to great flatness, narrowness, and crookedness, differing from its old issue two miles, should be wholly stopt up.

(e) There are evident traces of what was done towards making this canal still remaining, on the grounds between

Whether these different reports were the occasion that no further progress was made towards this work, and the restoration of this haven, or the very great expence it was estimated at, and the great difficulty of raising so large a sum, which the Queen at that time could no ways spare, but so it was, that nothing further was done in it.

The haven being thus abandoned by the Queen, and becoming almost useless, excepting to vessels of the small burthen above-mentioned, the town itself would before long have become impoverished and fallen wholly to decay, had it not been most singularly preserved, and raised again, in some measure, to wealth and prosperity, occasioned by the persecution for religion in Brabant and Flanders, which communicated to all the Protestant parts of Europe, the paper, silk, woollen, and other valuable manufactures of Flanders and France, almost peculiar at that time to those countries, and till then, in vain attempted elsewhere; the manufacturers of them came in bodies up to London, and afterwards chose their situations with great judgment, distributing themselves, with the Queen's licence, through England, so as not to interfere too much with one another. The workers in sayes, baize, and flannel, fixed themselves here, at Sandwich, at the mouth of a haven, by which they might have an easy communication with the metropolis, and other parts of this kingdom, and afforded them likewise an easy export to the Continent. The silk workers settled up higher, upon the banks of the same river, at Canterbury, and the workers in thread settled themselves upon the river Medway, at Maidstone.

These manufacturers applied to the Queen, for her protection and licence to settle in this kingdom; those who manufactured the sayes, baize, and flannel, as as been mentioned above, chose Sandwich for the place of their residence, and by that means prevented the impending impoverishment and decay of this town; for which purpose the Queen, in her third year, caused letters patent to be passed under her great seal, directed to the Mayor, &c. of this town, to give liberty to such of them, as should be approved of by the Archbishop, and Bishop of London, to inhabit within it, for the purpose of exercising the above manufactures, which had not been used before in England, or for fishing in the seas, not exceeding the number of 25 householders, accompting to every household not above 12 persons, and there to exercise their trade, and have as many servants as were necessary for carrying them on, so that they did not exceed the number above-mentioned, without any pay, hindrance, or molestation whatsoever; these immediately repaired to Sandwich, to the number, men, and women, and children, of 406 persons; of which, eight only were masters in the trade. A body of gardeners likewise discovered the nature of the soil about Sandwich to be exceedingly favourable to the growth of all esculent plants, and fixed themselves here, to the great advantage of this town, by the increase of inhabitants, the employment of the poor, and the money which circulated; the landholders likewise had the great advantage of their rents being considerably increased, and the money paid by the town and neighbourhood for vegetables, instead of being sent from hence for the purchase of them, remained within the bounds of it. The vegetables grew here in great perfection, but much of which were conveyed at an easy expence, by water carriage, to London, and from thence dispersed over different parts of the kingdom.

These strangers, by their industry and prudent conduct, notwithstanding the obstructions they met with, from the jealousy of the native tradesmen, and the avarice of the corporation, very soon rose to a flourishing condition.

The state of this town, in the 8th year of this reign, anno 1565, appears by the return, made by the Queen's command, of the several maritime places in this county; which was, that there were then in this town 420 households, of which 291 were English, and 129 Walloons, and 7 persons were in want of habitations, namely, three merchants, one scrivener, two surgeons, and one master of fence. That there were at that time employed at Sandwich, in the coasting trade, and in the fisheries, nine crayers, from

He cited accordingly, the Ministers of the Dutch churches at Maidstone and Sandwich, to appear at his Consistory Court, at Canterbury, and before himself,

The strangers here, in a few years, became much more numerous, insomuch, that in the year 1582, there were 351 Dutch settlers in Sandwich, who exercised 59 different trades or occupations; and though the haven still further decayed, yet the trade, populousness, and wealth of the town increased by their means (ee).

In this state Sandwich continued till the next reign of K. James I, when the customs here amounted to 2,926l. per annum; but by that Prince's setting up the company of merchant adventurers, and appropriating to them the trade to Germany, the Low Countries, &c. this place soon fell to decay again, and though the descendants of the Dutch and Walloon manufacturers still remained here, they not long afterwards entirely discontinued those manufactures, they had originally carried forward, and mixed among the rest of the inhabitants, in the exercise of the various occupations used in the town; and thus Sandwich, though it has since increased in the number of its houses and inhabitants, yet having lost its manufactures, the principal part of its trade, it was deprived likewise of that wealth and repute it had derived from them, and in process of time has dwindled down to the same obscurity as other country towns.

THE CIVIL JURISDICTION.

THE TOWN of Sandwich was first incorporated by K. Edward III, by the name of Mayor, Jurats and Commonalty of the town and port of Sandwich, before which they were privileged by the name of barons, as they were at that time, with all such liberties as they had had granted to them by K. Edward the Confessor, or at any time afterwards; and by this incorporation this town continued to be governed, till King Charles II, in his 36th year, granted to it a new charter, which not having been enrolled in chancery, an information, in the nature of a Quo warranto, was exhibited against the corporation; upon which it was agreed to surrender the charter into the King's hands, and a new one was immediately afterwards granted; but this last, as well as another charter granted by K. James II, and forced on the corporation, being made subser-at Lambeth, to answer certain interrogatories proposed to them. The congregations were much alarmed at his proceedings, and deputed one of their Ministers and Lay Elders to supplicate his favor, but he was inexorable. They, however, contrived to delay the matter, till the Scots war came on, and then the persecution ceased.—See a relation of the three foreign churches in Kent, written by John Bulteel, Minister of the Walloon congregation, at Canterbury, 4to. 1645.

vient to his own purposes, were afterwards annulled by that King, by a proclamation in his 4th and last year, which was made to restore all corporations to their antient charters, rights, and privileges; since which, this corporation has acted under its former charter, granted in the 36th year of K. Charles II. By this charter it is made to consist of a Mayor and twelve Jurats, who are ex officio, Justices of Peace. The Mayor, or in his absence, his deputy, is Coroner, within all the liberties of the town and port, and he is the returning officer at the election of barons to serve in Parliament. All the municipal elections, decrees and ordinances, are made by the whole corporate body, assembled in the Guildball, at a Common Assembly, convened by the sound of the common horn, which is of brass and of great antiquity; there are two regular and fixed Common Assemblies every year, one on the first Monday after the feast of St. Andrew, for the choice of Mayor, and the other, on the following Thursday, for the election of officers; occasional meetings of the Corporation are held at the pleasure of the Mayor. The Court of general Sessions and Gaol Delivery, at which all freemen are called to attend, was formerly held quarterly, but now only half yearly. A Court of Record is always held at the Petty Sessions, which is a monthly adjournment of the General Sessions (f). Courts of Conscience and of Piepowder were formerly held in this town, but they have been long disused.

The Mayor is chosen annually, by the Mayor Jurats, and Commonalty, at a Common Assembly, in the Guildball (g); he carries a black Wand in his hand, as a badge of his office, the same as the Mayor of Fordwich, a member of this port, probably for some delinquency com-

(f) The Court of Record is, by the charter, appointed to be held on a Thursday, weekly.

(g) The election used to be made in St. Clement's church, till the year 1683, when K. Charles II, by a letter under his sign manual, commanded the meeting for that purpose, to be held, and the election made, in some other place, since which it has been constantly made in the Guildball. In 1690, however, the freemen attempted to re-establish the antient custom of it in St. Clement's church, but without effect.

(b) In the year 1454, anno 33 Henry VI, there was an institution made of a Common Council, assistant to the Mayor and Jurats, consisting of 70 persons, who, with their consent, were to make all manner of elections, and all scots and lots; but in 1599, it was agreed at a Common Assembly, to reduce them to 36; and afterwards by letters from the Lord Warden and Privy Council, they were increased to 48; but in the year 1603, on account of their strange proceedings, they were, by order of the Privy Council, and Lord Warden, reduced to 24, as at present; which order was confirmed by a decree of the Mayor, &c.

(i) A High Steward is appointed by the charter distinct from the Recorder.

(k) In 1503, anno 19 Henry VII, the King granted

mitted by the Mayor of this place; for all the other ports, and their members corporate, bear white ones.

There are at present 12 Jurats, exclusive of the Mayor, who are chosen out of the Common Councilmen (b), by the whole body corporate. There is a Steward or Recorder (i); usually a Barrister at Law, who is appointed at a Court of Record, and a Town Clerk appointed for life, a Deputy Recorder to hold his office, during the pleasure of the Recorder; the Mayor, Deputy Mayor, Jurats, Recorder, and Deputy Recorder, are Justices of the Peace. There is a Land and Water Treasurer, two Serjeants at Mace, with other inferior officers, necessary for carrying forward the business of the Corporation, which last-mentioned officers are elected annually. There is a fair, for drapery, haberdashery, shoes, hardware, &c. held on December the 4th, being Old St. Clement's Day (k), and continues two market days (l); and a market, which is weekly held on Wednesdays and Saturdays. It has the grant of pleading, and of being impleaded, and of having a Common Seal, a power of purchasing and holding lands and tenements, not exceeding 200l. per annum, with a non obstante to the statute of Mortmain. It has the privilege of one large and one smaller silver maces, and other immunities and liberties, the same as the other Corporations, within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports (m).

The arms of the town and port of Sandwich, are those of the Cinque Ports, viz. Per pale, gules and azure, 3 demi lions passant-guardant or, conjoined in pale, to as many bulks of ships, argent.

A Court of Requests, for the recovery of small debts in Sandwich, and the neighbouring parishes, was established here by Act of Parliahis patent, for the holding of two marts or fairs in this town, one from the 5th of June to the 4th of July, the other from the 8th of February to the 9th of March

(l) It was formerly held on November 23d, for three days only. By the charter there were granted two fairs, or marts, yearly, on April 1st, and October 1st, for buying and selling all sorts of cattle, each to continue for two days, and all the profits arising from the same.

(m) The Common Seal of Sandwich is of brass, in two parts, on the obverse is, an antique ship with one mast, the sail furled, and a man at each yard arm; on the forecable one flag; on the poop two flags, displayed in opposite directions; a cock boat on the main deck; a man before the mast holding 2 estoils; another man forward holding an ax. The inscription, Sigillum Consilii Baronum de Sandwich.—On the Counter Seal, a plant of trefoil in leaf and bloom, over all, a lion passant-guardant, crowned. Inscription, Qui Servare regem Celi solet indico regem.

The Seal of Mayoralty is of silver, and has on it the ports arms, and this inscription in small black character, Sigillum officii maioralis ville Sandwici.

ment in 1786; all fines and forfeitures, not appropriated by the Act, belong to the Corporation.

THE LIBERTIES of the Corporation were perambulated by fir Stephen de Pencheſter, Warden of the Cinque Ports, at the latter end of K. Henry III.'s reign, who came hither, and was attended for this purpose, by the Mayor and Commonalty, collected together by the found of the common horn. They were as follows:

FIRST beginning at the ſtone croſs at the weſt end of the town, near the cauſeway or common road between Sandwich and Eſch, which croſs is within the liberty, and from thence going along cloſe by the river ſide to Northmouth, every where by the line of highwater mark at ſpringtide; and then returning along the other margin of the river, on the oppoſite ſide, thro' Sarre and Boxley in Thanet, to the ſhore, at the paſſage directly over againſt the croſs of Henneberg; and from that croſs ſtraight on the oppoſite ſide to the ſea, and thence along the ſea ſhore to Stonore, including the whole town of Stonore, and the marſhes within Henneberg, which are within the precinct of the liberty aforeſaid; and on the other ſide of the river croſſing over to Peperneſſe, and thence to a ſtream that runs into the river, called the Gefling, by the Tbief Downs, where perſons condemned within the liberty are buried alive; and ſo going on along that ſtream to a marſh called Holberg, belonging to the Lord of Poldre; and from thence by a ditch, between that marſh and another marſh belonging to the heirs of John Edward, which leads towards Hoveling; and ſo along by the ſame ditch, which is between Holberg and Hoveling marſh.

It is to be noticed that Holberg is without the liberty, and Hoveling marſh, from thence by the Delf to Hoveling bridge, where the foot-path leads from Sandwich to Word, and from that bridge cloſe along the running ſtream, which is within the liberty, towards Sandwich, to the end of the field, which belonged to John Darundell, along the highway from Sandwich to Eaſtry, between the ſaid land and the walls of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital; then paſſing over the Delf, and proceeding along the ſaid way towards Eaſtry, to where the road divides to Dover and Eaſtry, and where there formerly ſtood a wooden croſs; returning again by the ſame road towards the town, to the ditch of the garden of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, and there leaving the hoſpital on the right hand, and at the end of the ditch proceeding along the lane, where they go in proceſſion on the Vigil of Holy Thursday, leaving the whole of Puttockſdowne on the right, to the ſtone croſs, called Serles Croſs; and from thence towards the town by the highway to the ditch of Harp marſh, keeping the ſaid marſh and Weſt marſh, both which belong to the Abbat of Boxley, and are within the liberty, on the right; and ſo returning along the ditch of the ſaid marſh to the ſtone croſs, on the weſt of the town, where the perambulation began. See Boys's Coll. for Sandwich, p. 535.

It may not be improper to add here, the obſervation made on bodies corporate, by the learned and ingenious Mr. Madox, at the end of his Firma Burgi, as it may be in ſome meaſure applicable to this Corporation, among others, in ſeveral of the circumſtances mentioned above. He ſays, there were ſeveral advantages, which a corporate town had above a town not incorporated; the incorporation fitted the townſmen for a ſtricter union amongſt themſelves, for a more orderly and ſteady government, and for a more advantageous courſe of commerce; but ſometimes they made an ill uſe of thoſe advantages; their privileges and their proſperity did now and then diſpoſe them to be inſolent, and in particular to domineer over their weaker neighbours. It is true, the cities and towns of England (like as other perſons and aggregate bodies of men) were ſubject to viciffitude, ſometimes they were in proſperity, at other times in decay. When they were in proſperity, their fee ferm, and other preſtations ſeemed light; when in decay heavy. But when the King of England, in antient times, charged his towns, or other demefnes with any duty or preſtation, it was his conſtant manner to act by the rule of juſtice, equity, and honor, and in general, as oft as the circumſtances of their caſe required, by relief or merciful treatment, they uſed to find the King a benign and gracious patron; in fine, the gracious indulgence of the Kings of England, to their cities, towns, and boroughs, ſhould be a powerful motive to engage them from time to time, to a loyal and dutiful behavior towards the King, their patron and benefactor.

THE PRESENT STATE OF SANDWICH.

THE TOWN, which was firſt built, as it ſhould ſeem, on a point of land, left by the retiring waters of the Portus Rutupinus, now extends along the Southern ſhore of the river Stour, which from hence to the ſea is called Sandwich haven; the town communicates with Stonar and the Iſle of Thanet, by means of a bridge, which draws up for the benefit of maſted ſhips paſſing through it, having been firſt built by Act of Parliament in 1755, and again lately rebuilt with great improvments, being veſted in the Mayor and Corporation, who receive the toll collected for the paſſage over it.

sides of it, this town cannot possibly be healthy, or even a desirable place of habitation (o). It is in shape, an oblong square; the houses are old fashioned and ill built, and the streets, which are in general but narrow and ill-convenient lanes, little adapted either for carriages or even horses; an exception to this, however, is High-street, which is of good breadth, and much better built. It was formerly divided into eight wards, for the purpose of defence, in each of which were two constables; but from the year 1437, there have been twelve wards or districts, over each of which a Jurat presides, and nominates his constable and deputy constable. There are three parishes in Sandwich, and it is said there were formerly four churches in it, though now but three, St. James's church, which stood in the western part of the town having been desecrated in K. Edward VI.'s reign. The present three churches are, St. Mary's church, in Strand-street, in the north-west part of the town; St. Peter's church, in the centre of the town; and St. Clement's church, in the eastern part of it, all which will be more particularly mentioned below; and there are besides, three licenced places of worship for the Dissenters (p).

At the entrance of the town from Canterbury, is the Grammar School. In the centre of the town, near St. Peter's church, is the Market or Butchery, and near the south part of it, the cattle and fish Markets, and close to them the Guild, or Town-hall, which was built in the year 1579, in the mayoralty of Edward Wood, the initials of whose name, with the date, remain over the door (q). There is an establishment of the Customs here, (the Custom-house being near the Keys, at the end of the bridge,) under the management of a Collector, Deputy Comptroller, Super-

(o) Sandwich is five miles from Deal, over the Sandowns, by the horse road, and about seven miles by the coach road, through Ham and Fingleham; twelve miles from Dover and Canterbury; six miles from Ramsgate, and nine miles from Margate.

(p) The Dissenters were formerly very numerous in Sandwich, but their number is now much diminished. The Presbyterians have a meeting-house in the corn market; their register begins in 1690; it is of baptisms only, for they have no burial ground in Sandwich. The Baptists have a licenced place of worship, in the same market, and the Methodists have one in Luckboat-street.

(q) The old Court-hall stood on the ground contiguous to the gaol, which was purchased a few years ago by the parishioners of St. Peter's, for the enlargement of their church-yard.

(r) In the year 1642, a petition was made to Parliament to fortify the town, which was adjudged by the Earl of Warwick and others, to be a matter of great importance, and next year the town made a petition for leave to expend 330*l.* among themselves in repairing and fortifying it.

(s) Two of these were formerly called St. Mary's gate, and Ive's gate. Sandowne gate was built, and the bridge visor, and other officers. Much of the fortified walls still remain, seemingly built in K. Edw. IV.'s reign, especially on the north and west sides, on the other sides it is defended only by a rampart and ditch (r).

There were, till of late years, five gates, viz. Canterbury gate, taken down in 1784, Woodnesborough gate, Sandowne gate, Fisher's gate, and Newgate (s); and mention is made in ancient writings of David's gate, over against which was a place, called the Barbican; and Fryer's gate, which was at one end of the corn market, leading down to the Friery of the Carmelites; but these seem to be interior gates, in the inner parts of the town.

In 1787, an Act passed for new paving, cleanfing, lighting, watching, and otherwise improving and ornamenting this town, which has since been carried into execution, and will no doubt, as far as is possible, remedy many of those disagreeable inconveniencies, which before subsisted in it.

The town is not well supplied with good water; the springs lie high, and fill the wells with very indifferent water; but there is every where, at the depth of from 40 to 58 feet, a stratum of flint, which when once penetrated by the borer, yields a plentiful supply of fine water; but as the land drains are not kept out of the wells by steaming, the inhabitants have not that advantage they would otherwise have from them. The other supplies are from the haven and the delf, which is an artificial stream or canal, raised in some parts above the level of the grounds, through which it runs, and was made in K. Edward I.'s reign, for the purpose of furnishing the inhabitants of Sandwich with water (t). In the year 1621, a licence was granted to John Gafon, of London, esq. to erect repaired, at the charge of sir Henry Furnise, bart. one of the Barons in Parliament for this town, in 1706.

(t) It begins at a place, called the Roaring Gutter, and running through the town, discharges itself into the haven, near Canterbury gate, being cleaned throughout its whole length, at the expence of the Corporation.

The stream from which it leads, rises in Eastry brooks, near the village of Eastry, and running through Ham marshes, it skirts Worth Minnis on the south side, and after some way discharges its superfluous water occasionally by the Roaring Gutter, into the north stream, or Gestling, and probably by that passage it formerly was united with the north stream, till it was diverted the other way for the use of Sandwich. Edward I, in his letters patent, in his 13th year, mentions a licence before granted to the Barons of Sandwich, for the digging of a trench over the lands lying between Gestling and Stonefleet, and from Stonefleet to Sandwich, to the intent, that the passage of the water, called Northbrooke, which was at Gestling, should be diverted, so that it might run to Sandwich, for the perpetual commodity of the town, and his Barons thereof; and accordingly he assigned Solomon de Rochester, and Roger de Norwode, to enquire, by the oaths of honest and lawful men of the country, in what place water works, and to convey water in pipes into the town, and the several streets of it; for which purpose, there were granted to him, two acres of salts, over against the Old Crane, without the walls, at the south-east end of the salts towards the haven, to hold in fee farm for ever, at the yearly rent of 20s. He erected accordingly a watermill, but died before the works were completed, and the design fell to the ground (u).

In K. Edward the Confessor's time, there were in Sandwich 307 inhabited houses; at the time of the taking of the survey of Domesday, in the Conqueror's reign 383; about the time of K. Richard II, it had increased to more than 800 houses; after which, from the misfortunes it met with, it became so diminished of inhabitants and impoverished, that in K. Edward VI.'s time, the houses did not exceed 200; in Q. Elizabeth's reign it seems to have somewhat increased, for in the 8th year of it, the town contained 420 households, and there were some persons wanting habitations; all which has been more particularly taken notice of above. In the year 1689, the persons assessed to the poll tax, were in number 1447. In the year 1776, the town contained within the walls 562 houses, and 2213 inhabitants; that is not quite four to a house, and at present they are much the same number.

The soil about Sandwich, to the eastward, is a deep sandy loam, and the land there was, by the Dutch settlers, wholly appropriated to the growth of esculent plants, legumes, seeds, and other produce of the kitchen garden; these were the earliest gardens, for the supply of public markets, of any in the kingdom, and Canterbury and Dover markets, are still in a good measure supplied from them, where the garden stuff and seeds, carried from hence, bear the preference of any others, especially the carrots, and are distinguished by the name of Sandwich carrots, &c. notwithstanding which, only some part of the grounds, formerly applied to the use of gardening, remain, so at present, the greater portion of them being in tillage for corn. The lands to the southward, consist of a deep, rich mould, which are highly fertilized by manure from the town.

PRESENT STATE OF THE HAVEN.

THE HAVEN of Sandwich, some account of which has been given above, in the early history this trench, and over whose lands, and to the least damage of the landholders, it might be most fitly made; and that the same trench and the turning of the water should be so done, that the owners of those lands, over which it was to pass, might be satisfied for the hurt they should receive thereby, before the work was begun. After this I find a patent, anno 15 Edward II, granting to the Mayor and Barons of Sandwich, a licence to stop the water, called Gesling, no doubt for the purpose of diverting this water, for the use of the town of Sandwich. Leland, in his hist.

of this place, begins at the town, and gives name to the river Stour from hence to the mouth of it at Peperness.

The efforts of the Corporation and inhabitants of this town, as well as their applications to the crown, for the preservation of the haven, have been from time to time, both strenuous and very frequent. In the first year of K. Richard III, the Corporation and Men of Sandwich made suit to the King for a new Haven; anno 5 Henry VII, application was made to the King for the wele of the haven; in the year 1493, anno 9 Henry VII, enquiry was ordered by the Mayor, &c. to be made, what every person would give towards the repair of the haven, of which a survey should be made; and likewise a mole for the making and helping of it, to be set on work by the Hollanders, who were coming for that intent; in the 33d year of K. Henry VIII, anno 1541, suit was made to the King for the amendment of the haven (v); in 1547, a supplication was made to the Lord Protector, Duke of Somerset, and the King's Council, for the amendment of the haven; in the first year of Q. Elizabeth, a suit was made to the Queen for the like purpose, and the town agreed to raise 1000 marks towards the expence; and next year, a fresh suit was made to her for the same purpose. The Queen being at Sandwich in 1573, being the 16th year of her reign, the Mayor, on her departure made a supplication to her for the haven, which she graciously accepted, and promised herself to read. In the year 1615, several persons were appointed by the Mayor, &c. to solicit the Lord Warden, that the old Haven might not be dammed up by the work of such, as desired to inn any part of the salts adjoining to it, and to move him for the proceeding and setting forward of the new Haven; but in a representation, which they made to him two years afterwards, they alledged, that the town was embayed, and remote from the course of trade; and in the year 1635, a suit was ordered to be made to the King for a new Haven, from the Downs, near Sandown castle.

In Q. Anne's reign, anno 1705, the Queen sent down Commissioners, to make a survey for a new Haven, who delivered a plan, report, and estimate, for a new Harbour, from Sandwich into the Downs, accompanied with a certificate of the flag officers, and many of the Commanders of the ships of the Royal Navy, who gave it as their opinion, that such a harbour might be of general advantage to the public; but nothing further was then done towards it. This occasioned petitions to be presented to the House of Commons in 1736, praying for a new Harbour near the Downs; accordingly, a plan and survey of the Downs, and coasts adjoining, were undertaken by Mr. Labelye, who in 1738, published his scheme for sheltering ships from the Downs, by a navigable Canal and Basin, in the very direction of the old Cut, mentioned above, and which, by sluices, were to join the river Stour; but nothing further was done in this business, of making a new Harbour, till the year 1744, when an Address was ordered by the House of Commons, to be presented to the King, that he would send proper and skilful persons to Sandwich, to view the haven and examine whether a better and more commodious harbour might not be made from the town of Sandwich into the Downs, near Sandown castle, fit for the reception and security of large merchant ships and men of war, and to survey the ground and shore, and the river Stour likewise, necessary for the scouring and cleansing the said harbour, when made; and to make an estimate, to be laid before the House; which having been accordingly done next year, and many witnesses examined, it was then resolved, by the Committee of the House, that a safe and commodious harbour might be made as above-mentioned, and be of great use and advantage to the naval power of Great Britain, by preserving ships in distress, speedily refitting them for sea, and by saving the lives of many of the King's subjects; and in the time of war, more particularly be a ready means of bridling Dunkirk, of guarding the mouth of the river, and protecting the country from invasion and insults; all which was agreed to by the House, and the King was accordingly addressed, to direct an estimate to be prepared, and laid before the House, of the expence in purchasing lands necessary to the making of this harbour, yard, and other works thereto belonging, and the expence of fortifying the same; which estimate amounted to 389,168*l.* exclusive of the grounds to be purchased; and there can be no loss to judge why this great work, supposed to be undertaken by Government, was suspended, when it is considered, that it was at a time when the kingdom was engaged in an expensive war both with France and Spain.

Immediately after the taking the above steps towards making this harbour, there was a petition presented to the House by divers merchants, commanders of ships, and others, in opposition to the above plan, that a more convenient harbour might be made, at or near Ramsgate, capable of containing a greater number of merchantmen, and ships of war of 60 or 70 guns, on account of the advantageous situation of the place and setting of the tides, where no back water would be wanted, and there would be a saving to the public of several hundred thousand pounds, &c.

In 1749 another petition was presented to the House by the merchants of London, owners and masters of ships, in favour too, of the harbour at Ramsgate; and a petition likewise of the Mayor, Jurats, &c. of Sandwich, setting forth, that if piers were extended into the sea at Ramsgate, it would in a short time swerve up the mouth of Sandwich Haven, ruin the trade of the town, and by stopping the course of the river Stour into the sea, would drown the lands between Sandwich and Canterbury, and praying relief, &c. Upon which there were divers examinations in regard to both petitions, and upon the whole, it was resolved, that the merchants of London had fully proved the allegations of their petition, and a Bill was ordered to be brought in for enlarging and maintaining the Harbour of Ramsgate; and for cleansing, amending, and preserving the Haven of Sandwich, as above-mentioned; which bill received the Royal assent in 1749, anno 22 George II. (w). By this Act, to quiet the opposition made by Sandwich, a yearly sum of 200*l.* was granted out of the profits and dues of Ramsgate harbour, towards the latter purpose, which sum is now blended among the rest of the revenues of the Corporation (x); but notwithstanding this provision, and every other support given for the preservation of this haven, it is at present but of small account, and by its still further apparent decay every year, seems hastening to its total ruin.

The exports at this haven are now confined to the produce of the neighbouring country for (x) This Act, as well as another in 1765, anno 5 Geo. III, were both repealed by a subsequent act in 1792, anno 32 Geo. III, passed for the further maintenance and improvement of Ramsgate harbour, in which act is continued the like provision, for the cleansing, amending, and preserving of this haven of Sandwich, and a further power vested in the Justices of Sandwich, with respect to the punishment of persons, who may remove the buoys, mooring posts, beacons, &c. or take ballast from the channel sides or shores of the haven, without the licence of the Mayor and Jurats, or the major part of them, under their hands, &c. &c.

a few miles round, and the imports mostly to shop goods, and other necessary articles for the town and the adjoining country; for which purpose there are several boys, which sail to and from London, though there are a few ships of larger size, which at times make voyages as far as Wales, Scotland, Sweden, Norway, and the Baltic (y).

REMARKABLE OCCURENCES.

The transactions of the Saxons and Danes, at Sandwich Haven and Town, have been already mentioned above; besides which the following remarkable occurrences are recorded by our historians. K. Edward the Confessor resided at Sandwich a considerable time in the year 1049. In the year 1052 Earl Goodwin and his sons rendezvoused here with their fleet, and landed their men; the same year K. Edward fitted out a fleet here against Goodwin and his sons; afterwards Goodwin and Harold took all the ships they could find in Romney, Hythe, and Folkestone, and landing here and at Dover, they took many prisoners out of both these places, and then sailing through Sandwich Harbour, out at Northmouth, towards London, some of their fleet spoiled Shepey, and wholly burnt Milton, then called the King's Town (yy). Archbishop Thomas Becket, after his flight from Northampton, embarked in a small fishing boat at Sandwich, Nov. 10, anno 1164, and landed the same evening near Gravelines, after having been concealed for eight days at Eastry, near this port, a manor then belonging to the priory of Christ Church in Canterbury; he returned again to England, and landed at Sandwich, on or about the first of December, in the year 1170, where the common people received him with much joy (z).

K. Richard I, after his imprisonment by Leopald, Duke of Austria, landed here on March 20, and proceeded from hence on foot to Canterbury, to return thanks to God and St. Thomas for his deliverance (a). Stace, usually called the Monk, being at Sandwich with many Frenchmen, in 600 ships and 80 coggs, was killed there on St. Bartholomew's day (b). In 1217, ao. 2 Henry III, Lewis, the French King's eldest son, came here with 600 sail of ships and burned great part of the town (c). K. Edward I, on March 14, in his 26th year, coming from Flanders, landed in the Port of Sandwich (d). K. Edward II. and III. were frequently here to embark for France, and returned to this port again particularly K. Edward II; landed here on the Monday next before the feast of St. Margaret, in his 7th year, on his return from Gascony, and he landed here again that year on his return from Boloyn (e); and K. Edward III. embarked here in his 16th year, and again in his 17th year, on October the 4th or 5th, for France, with a considerable fleet and army. He brought his war engines from the Tower to Sandwich, but not being able to procure shipping to transport both his troops and engines, he left the last behind, and appointed Commissioners to press as many ships in all the ports of the kingdom, as would be necessary to carry back the engines to the Tower (f). The same King, three years afterwards, being his 19th year, was at Sandwich with his Queen Philippa, on Sunday, July 3, having stayed here from the 18th of June, at which place Robert de Sadyngton, the Chancellor, delivered to the King in the Queen's apartment, the Great Seal, in the presence of Bartholomew de Burghersh, John D'Arcy le Fitz and others, and received from the King, at the same time, another Seal, to be used during his absence. The same Sunday the King sailed from hence, with his Nobles and attendants, about nine o'clock, in a frigate called the Swallow, and proceeded to sea with his fleet; and the King returned to Sandwich again, with his train of Nobles, on the 30th of the same month (g). In the year 1347, anno 22 of his reign, the same King, after the surrender of Calais, and the subsequent truce, embarked with his Queen, the Prince of Wales, and many other noble persons, and after a stormy passage, landed at Sandwich, on October 12 (h). The same King, who usually took shipping from Sandwich, sailed from hence with many of his chief nobility, in the 24th year of his reign, anno 1349, in pursuit of a fleet of Spanish pirates, 24 of whose ships he took with great slaughter from the Spaniards (i).

John, King of France, after the battle of Poitiers, embarked with his son Philip, and his Conqueror the Prince of Wales, at Bordeaux, about four miles and a quarter, and to the mouth of the haven at low-water, spring tide, about two miles more.

(y) Mr. Boys says, that the depth of the water at the mouth of the harbour, at ordinary spring tides, is about 14 or 15 feet, and sometimes, when the wind blows strong from the north-west, which makes the highest tides along this coast, the water has risen there to the height of 20 feet. The perpendicular rise of the water at Sandwich bridge, at common spring tides, is about 8 feet, and the whole depth of water is then about 14 feet.

The measured distance from Fordwich bridge to Sandwich bridge, by the course of the river, is upwards of 15 miles, and from thence to high-water mark upon the sea shore, on April 24, anno 32 Edward III, and they landed at Sandwich all together (k).

K. Edward III, returning from his victories in France, landed here on October 12, in his 21st year (l). He embarked here in October, in his 22d year; and again on October 28, in his 33d year, and landed at Calais. He was at Sandwich several times in his 34th year. He embarked here on August 31, in his 46th year (m); and in his 47th year he collected a large army, by summoning all men to come ready armed to Sandwich, among other places; he assembled likewise a fleet of 400 sail, and embarked with the Prince of Wales at this place, on August 31, but after being six weeks at sea, he was forced to return to England, in the beginning of October (n). In the 9th year of K. Richard II, the French intending to invade England, made a wall of timber, which was 20 feet high and 3000 paces long, and at the distance of every twelve feet was a tower, large enough to hold twelve men, and ten feet higher than the wall, to protect them from the English archers. A part of the materials for this wooden fortification, with machines for throwing stones, were put on board two large vessels, which, with the artist who made the wall, were taken by the English; and the whole was brought to Sandwich, and there set up, when it did good service to defend this town and harbour, against the French themselves (o).

K. Henry V, on Sept. 4, in his 4th year, came here to embark for Calais, and whilst he waited here for that purpose, took up his abode at the priory of the Carmelites, or White Friars, in Sandwich (p). The Earls of March, Salisbury, and Warwick, landed at Sandwich, with 1500 of their followers, on July 2, 1460, being the last year of K. Henry VI; after which, the Earl of Warwick, being then Governor of Calais, sent sir John Denkam, with some ships and soldiers hither, who entered the haven, and got into the town in the night, where they took the Lord Rivers and his son prisoners in their beds, and afterwards made himself master of the King's ships in the haven, and carried them with him to Ireland (q); and in the same year, 500 of the King's soldiers waiting here to be shipped for Calais, were seized by the Earl of Warwick's men, and Montford their Captain was killed (r). K. Edward IV. was at Sandwich, at Whitfun-eve, in his 10th year (s); and in the 16th year of his reign, in the month of June, he came to Sandwich, where he embarked with one of the finest armies that ever sailed from Britain to the Continent, the navy of the ports having assembled in the Downs, to do their service at sea, and soon after landed at Calais (t). The followers of the bastard Fauconberg, to the number of 8 or 900, says Baker, in his Chronicle, strongly fortified themselves in the castle of Sandwich, in the year 1471, anno 12 Edward IV, but upon the King's approach to attack them, they submitted and delivered up the castle and the ships in the haven, to the number of thirteen (u).

K. Henry VIII came to Sandwich in 1533, anno 25th of his reign, and he was here again four years afterwards. In the year 1573 Q. Elizabeth visited this town, on the 31st of Aug. great preparations having been made for her reception; she stayed here three nights, during which time she was presented with a gold cup of 100l. value, and a silver cup gilt and cover, near a cubit high, and was entertained in the school house by the Mayors and the Jurat's wives, with 160 dishes (v).

In 1580, April the 6th, anno 22 Elizabeth, about six o'clock in the evening, an earthquake was felt in this town and neighbourhood, to the great terror of the inhabitants; it did but little harm in this town, excepting to the churches of St. Peter and St. Mary, in which latter; it shook and rent asunder four of the arches; the ships in the sea, and likewise those that were at the key and within the haven felt it; a little before nine o'clock the same night, it began again, but lasted but a very short space, and again a little before eleven o'clock; with the like shortness, and a small noise it was likewise heard about four o'clock the next morning, but no shaking of the earth, and within half an hour afterwards, a like noise with a little shaking; and on the second day of May following, about two o'clock in the morning, there happened another earthquake, which came with a great noise and shaking, almost as terrible as that on the 7th of April, before-mentioned, but it did little, if any damage in this town.

The Duke of Anjou lay at Sandwich on Feb. 6, in the year 1582, and embarked from hence the next day, about nine o'clock in the morning, in the Discovery, with the Earl of Leicester and the Lord Howard, on his way to meet the Prince of Orange at Flushing (w).

In 1597, the plague raged at Sandwich, as it did again in the year 1635, which continued with great violence for the greatest part of the two next years (x). In 1640 the young Prince of Orange passed through Sandwich, and was received and conducted through the town with much respect and ceremony. The plague again raged in Sandwich in 1643 (y). Oliver Cromwell, the Lord Protector, was at Sandwich in 1651. In 1660, the King, the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, and the Earl of Sandwich, came to this town, and were accompanied by the Mayor and Jurats to Sandown castle, on their way to Deal. In the year 1670, Queen Katherine came to Sandwich, on May 4th, with a great train, and there was a royal banquet provided for her and her attendants, when the Queen not quitting her coach, went forward to Deal. A dreadful storm happened on Nov. 27, 1703, in the morning; the damage done by which, in the town of Sandwich, was estimated at 3000l.

THE CINQUE PORTS, as well as their two ancient towns of Rye and Winchelsea, have each of them the privilege of returning Members, usually styled Barons, to Parliament. The first returns that are found for any of them, are in the 42d year of K. Edward III.'s reign.

The election of the Barons of Parliament was formerly made in Sandwich, by the Mayor, Jurats, and resident Freemen; four of the Jurats, or principal inhabitants were put in election, and the two, who had the greatest number of votes, were returned by the Mayor; but by the last determination of the House of Commons, the election now is in the Mayor, Jurats, and Freemen, as well non-resident, as those inhabiting within the port, who do not receive alms (y).

The resident Freemen, as appeared by the Poll at the latter end of the year 1790, were 492, non-resident 320, in all 812; the number that voted at the general election, in that year, was 586.

TITLES.

Edward, son of Sir Sydney Montague, youngest son of Sir Edward Montagu, of Boughton, in the co. of Northampton, knt. an account of whose ancestors has already been given in the former part of this work (z), was by K. Charles II, in his 12th year, for his signal service, in delivering up to him the English fleet, of which he had the command, in the time of the usurpation; having by his singular prudence, so wrought on the seamen, that they concurred peaceably in it; by patent, dated July 12, 1660, created Baron Montagu, of St. Neots, Viscount Hinchinbroke, and Earl of Sandwich. He died at sea, on May 28, 1672, having married Jemima, daughter of John, Lord Crewe, of Steine, by whom he had issue six sons and four daughters (a). He was succeeded by his eldest son, never acknowledged in Sandwich, and it was expressly put an end to by the Act of the second of William and Mary. Each Baron to Parliament was allowed 2s. a day for his wages, with a few variations, namely, in 1544 the allowance was only 18d. a day, and from 1576 to the latter part of Q. Elizabeth's reign, it was 4s. about which time it seems to have ceased entirely in Sandwich.

(z) See vol. i. of this History, p. 41, 471.

(a) Of the sons, Edward was his successor; Sidney married Anne, daughter and heir of Sir Francis Wortley, and changed his name to Wortley; he had two sons, Francis, who died before him, and Edward, who became his heir, and married Lady Mary Pierpoint, daughter of Evelyn, Duke of Kingston, by whom he had a son Edward, who died without issue in 1776; and a daughter Mary, married to John, Earl of Bute; Oliver, the third son, died unmarried; Charles, the fifth son, married and had issue; and James, the sixth son, died unmarried. Of the daughters, Jemima married to Sir Philip Carteret; Paulina died unmarried;

AS EARLY as K. Henry II.'s reign, there was an eminent and respectable family named De Sandwich, who no doubt took their name from this place; who were employed in the highest offices of honour and trust, and in this county in particular were possessed of manors and lands of considerable value; many of them were of knightly degree, and as appears by the records and histories of those times, continued to flourish in this county from the above reign to the end of that of K. Richard II.; after which, most probably, they were become extinct.

Among other high offices which they bore, I find mention, that Mr. Simon de Sandwich was Constable of Dover Castle, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, in the reign of *K. The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

John de Sandwich married Agnes, one of the four daughters and coheirs of sir Hamon de Crevequer, Lord of Folkestone, who, in right of his wife, became possessed of the barony of Folkestone. By her he left an only daughter and heir Julian, who married sir John de Segrave, and in her right he became possessed of that barony. Sir Thomas de Sandwich was Knight of the Shire for the co. of Kent, in the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 15th years of K. Edward II. Thomas de Sandwich had a commission to treat of the marriage between the Duke of Brabant and Margaret, the King's daughter, anno 7 Edward I. One of this name was appointed to conduct certain Cardinals into England, anno 10 Edward II. Sir Thomas de Sandwich being attendant on the Prince of Wales, in the King's service in Gascony, had the King's Letters of Protection anno 30 Edward III; and sir John de Sandwich was Constable of the Tower in the 31st year of that reign. During these reigns, from their eminence and the property they possessed, they appear to have been witnesses to the grants of lands and other benefactions, to several religious houses in this part of Kent; and several of these deeds are without date and very antient.

This family bore for their arms—Or, a chief indented azure, as such they were painted on the tomb of sir Simon de Sandwich, in St. Peter's church in Sandwich; they were likewise painted in the windows of Woodnesborough church, and they were carved on the roof of the cloysters, of Canterbury Cathedral. Sir Ralph de Sandwich, Custos of London in K. Edward I.'s reign, is said to have borne a fleur de lis in the field; sir Nicholas de Sandwich bore the same, with a mullet argent, for difference.

In the above reigns, and almost to the time of the dissolution of monasteries, there were many of this name among the clergy, both secular and regular; but as these in general, on their entering into the profession of a religious, quitted their own surname, and took on them that of the place of their birth, it is probable, excepting one, they had no connection with the above-mentioned family.

The one excepted was Henry de Sandwich, elected Bishop of London anno 1262, who died in 1273, and was buried in his own cathedral, where he had a monument erected to his memory (i); of the others I have found mentioned that of this name; Henry de Sandwich was Prior of Bilsington anno 1293; Elias de Sandwich was Prior of St. Gregories, Canterbury anno 1294; Nicholas de Sandwich was Rector of St. Mi- chael's, Crooked-lane, London, in 1304; Nicholas de Sandwich was Prior of Christ Church in Canterbury, in 1244, and dying in 1289, was buried in his own cathedral; Hamon de Sandwich was Prebendary of the church of Hereford in 1318; Nicholas de Sandwich was Rector and Lord of Otham, in this county, in 1356; John de Sandwich was Prior of the Carmelites in Sandwich in 1403; and William de Sandwich was Canon of Christ Church in Canterbury, and Warden of Canterbury College in Oxford, and died in 1545; John de Sandwich was Supprior of St. Augustine's Monastery in Canterbury, at its dissolution; and Stephen de Sandwich was Archdeacon of Essex, in 1252; and Walter de Sandwich, Prebendary of Lincoln in 1542. Besides these, there were many others, too numerous to mention here (k).

There were SEVERAL FAMILIES of gentility who resided in Sandwich at different times, whose descents are recorded in the Heraldic visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619; as Finch, descended of the same stock as those of Eastwell, and bore the same arms, and were ancestors to those of Coldred, and other places in this neighbourhood; Gilbert, whose descendants removed to Westbere, under which a further account of them may be seen.

Huffam, alias Hougham, who were of Ash, and were ancestors of the Houghams, now of St. Paul's, in Canterbury, of whom more may be seen under those parishes.

Mennes, who resided here for several descents, and bore for their arms—Gules, a chevron vairy, azure and or, 3 leopards faces of the last.

Thomson, who were ancestors of the Thomsons, now of Kenfield, in Peabam, where an account of them may be seen.

Trippe, whose descendants removed to Wingham, where further mention is made of them.

The following Coats of Arms have been borne by the several names following, which have at times been resident here, viz.

Abington—Argent, on a bend gules cotized, 3 eagles displayed or, an escutcheon sable.

Alday—Ermine, on a chief sable 2 griffins segreant argent.

Annot—Argent, a chevron gules, in chief 2 acorns of the field.

Bake—Azure, 3 talbots or.

Studley—On a fess vert, 3 stags heads caboshed or; and Wood—Sable, on a chevron or 3 martlets sable, between 3 oak trees proper.

In the British Museum, Mss. No. 2230, are several Kentish pedigrees, continued from the Heraldic visitation anno 1619, to the year 1663; among which are those of Manwood, Iden, Alday, Peke, Wood, Finch, and Mennes; all of Sandwich.

BOTANY.

The following scarce plants have been observed in this place and its neighbourhood.

Rhamnoides fructifera foliis salicis, baccis leviter flavescens, fallow thorn, or sea buckthorn; found on the sands near Sandwich and its neighbourhood (l).

Salix purnila foliis utrinque, candidantibus & lanuginosis; observed near Sandown castle (m).

Convolvulus, soldanella; found on the sand downs near Sandwich (n).

Cynoglossum foliis virent, the lesser green leaved bounds tongue; found near Sandwich (o).

Ranunculus flammeus major, great spear wort; found in the old Haven near Sandwich (p).

Myagrum, gold pleasure; found near Sandwich, plentifully among the flax (q).

Dryopteris nigra; on the walls of a house near the haven.

Trichomanes, asplenium, English black maiden hair, on the walls of a house near the same.

THE PRIORY.

Henry Cowfield, a German, in the year 1272; being the last year of K. Henry III.'s reign, founded a priory in the town of Sandwich, for the order of friars called Carmelites, and afterwards, from the habit they wore, White Friars (r); but his endowment of it was so small, that Raynold, or more properly William, Lord Clinton, who was a much larger benefactor to it in the 20th year of K. Edward I., was

They all lie buried in St. Peter's church, in Sandwich, in the north wall, with antient portraitures of stone over them, which were overthrown in K. Henry VIII.'s time.

(u) The epitaphs of John Sandwich, Prior, Thomas Legatt, Thomas Hadlow, anno 1410; William Beckley, Prior anno 1438; and Dennis Plumcooper, anno 1481, Friars of this house, are recited in Weever, p. 263.

William Beckley above-mentioned, was born at Sandwich, was first a Friar here, and then Prior; Leland says, he was D. D. of Cambridge; he was the writer of several Tracts. See Stevens's Monast. p. 271. John Trapham was Prior of afterwards reputed the sole founder of it (s); and it had afterwards several other benefactors towards the re-edifying of it, as Thomas Craythorne, esq; sir John Peniell, knt. and William Eve, gent. (t). The church and buildings of these Carmelites were in general large and stately, their churches were much so; this at Sandwich had the privilege of sanctuary; there were buried in it several principal inhabitants of the town, besides the members of the priory (u); after which, I find no further mention of it, till the suppression of it, which happened soon after the 27th year of K. Henry VIII., (v) when it came into the King's hands, where it remained till the 32d year of his reign, when he granted it, by the description of the scite of the priory, called le Whitefryers, near Sandwich, with the church bells, and all messuages in the aforesaid town of Sandwich, to Thomas Arderne, of Faversham, gent. to hold of the King in capite (w).

After which I have met with no subsequent possessors of this estate, till the year 1614, anno 13 James I., when it passed by sale from George, Samuel, and John Crisp, to Nicholas Richardson, who that year settled it on his daughter Elizabeth, upon her marriage with Edmund Parboe. Wm. Richardson, Edmund Parboe, and Elizabeth his wife, three years afterwards conveyed it to Nicholas Swinford; but in 1641, Richard Wilde, and Alice his wife, and Moses Potter, passed it away to Samuel Morton the younger, who, together with Robert Morton, in 1649, conveyed it to John Gibbon, to the use of the latter; but in 1654, John Prettiman, jun. esq; and Margaret his wife, (only daughter and heir of sir Matthew Mennes, K. B.) and William Long, alienated it to Elizabeth Parboe, sole daughter and heir of Edmund Parboe, she afterwards married Captain John Boys, and entitled him to this estate; they

The scite of the priory, anno 31 Henry VIII., with the buildings, orchards, &c. belonging to it, were let to Thomas Patche, at the yearly rent of 12s. The rest of their possessions at that time, consisting of gardens, small pieces of meadow, and pastures and rents of assize, in or near Sandwich, the rents of which were only a few shillings each, amounted in the whole to only 2l. 2s. 7d. per annum, as appears by the Auditor's Roll, in the Augtn. office.

Verrier*, of Sandwich, gent. and he in 1703, settled it to certain uses (x), under which it became the property of Thomas Alkin, of Canterbury, gent. and Susannah his wife, from whom it descended at his death to his son Thomas Verrier Alkin, Cl. on whose death the inheritance of it became vested in his only son and heir, now an infant (y), who is at this time entitled to it.

HOSPITALS.

ST. JOHN'S HOSPITAL.

There is no account of the first foundation of this Hospital; the oldest grant met with relating to it, is dated anno 16 Edward I, 1287, and it is there called Domus Dei & Sancti Johannis de Sandwicho. Since the year 1293, it has been described in the evidences, by the name likewise of Hospitale. It is situated on the north-west side of the corn market, and consists of one large old building, containing a hall, and several rooms, both above and below stairs, for the Brothers and Sisters. Behind this principal building is a range of single rooms, called the Harbinge, in which travellers were formerly lodged and entertained.

This hospital was very early under the government of the Mayor and Barons of Sandwich, as appears by an instrument, dated in 1385, in which the Brothers and Sisters demise one of their tenements, with the permission of the Mayor and Barons; since which time, all their leases have been made in the name of the (x) He died in 1710, and left issue by Martha his wife, four sons, John, James, Benjamin, and Thomas, to which three latter he left, equally to be divided between them, in tail, inter alia, his messuage, wherein he then dwelt, with the buildings, garden, yards, and four acres of pasture and hop-ground, in St. Peter's, in Sandwich, thereto belonging and adjoining, called the Carmelite Friars. His four daughters were, Martha, Anne, Elizabeth, and Sarah.

(y) The Friery is situated on the south-west side of the town of Sandwich, between the rampart of it and Newstreet; by the foundations that are remaining level with the ground, the buildings must have been of considerable extent, and the house, gardens, and meadows, occupied an area of somewhat more than five acres.

This estate is now in the occupation of Mr. Joseph Stewart, at the yearly rent of 27l. Boys's Coll. p. 175 & seq. It pays an annual fee farm to the crown of 5s. 6d.

(z) In the antient Customal of Sandwich, it is said, that the Mayor and Jurats had the government of this Hospital, called St. John's House, in which were Brothers and Sisters, and other poor and infirm persons receiving alms. The daily allowance of every Brother and Sister, is a mess of porridge, a farthing loaf, and a farthing for beer, if the Master, Brothers, and Sisters, with the consent of the Mayor and Jurats, Patrons and Governors; but although the patronage appears to have been by these evidences, in the Mayor and Jurats jointly, yet for the sake of harmony, the Mayor for the time being, fills up all the vacancies that happen during his mayoralty. Like most others of early foundation, it was intended for the accommodation of travellers and strangers, as well as for the support of fixed residents; in it there were separate rooms for men and women, in which they were refreshed with diet and provided with comfortable lodging (z).

In an antient register belonging to it, beginning in the year 1392; the first list in it consists of nine Brothers and six Sisters, but the number afterwards appears to have been regularly twelve, till the year 1737, when the Hospital being in debt, and the revenue much reduced by the bad state of the buildings, the Mayor and Jurats found it expedient to apply the corrodies of such places as became vacant to the discharge of the debts and the repair of the estate, till the number of Brothers and Sisters was reduced to six; and an order was made to limit the fraternity in future to that number; and that two at the least should be men, and as many at least women; which rule, however, has not been strictly observed, the present six being all women.

This Hospital was returned by the Commissioners, under the Act of 37 Henry VIII, to be of the clear yearly value of 5l. 1s. 3d. by the words of this Act, as well as that of the first of K. Edward VI. for the suppression of Hospitals, chantries, and such other religious foundations; this Hospital was involved in much trouble, and was preserved from destruction, only by the spirited conduct of the Patrons (a). The revenues of it were always small, arising from the bene-income will admit of it; there was a room allotted to each, kept in repair at the common cost; they received benefactions in legacies, and in presents from mariners at their return from sea; some of the Brothers attended the churches in Sandwich every Sunday with a dish, soliciting money to buy their dinner on that day. In the herring season and at other times, they sent one of the Brothers in a boat, to beg fish from the vessels in the haven, which was divided among them; another Brother went through the county soliciting charity, by which he gained sometimes 10s. sometimes a marc clear; another went about in harvest, with a cart, collecting wheat and other corn, which was made into bread and divided among them; and at Christmas, another was sent with a sack, to the houses of the better sort of people in the town and neighbourhood to beg bread, which was equally divided among them; poor and infirm persons applying, were to be taken in, and supplied with raiment, and if they died in it, to be buried at the cost of the House; and that the Mayor and Jurats were to be visitors of the House whenever they thought proper.

factions of various persons, consisting of tenements and small quit-rents; it received, however, a valuable addition in a benefaction of 200l. given in 1763, by the will of John Dekewer, esq. of Hackney (b), to the Mayor and Jurats, in trust, for the Brothers and Sisters; which money has been since invested in the public funds.

The present revenue of it, consisting of the interest of the above legacy, and several houses and tenements, and quitrents, is now of the annual value of 47l. 12s. 10d. the clear yearly value of which, (the charging of repairs and collecting being deducted,) is 38l. 2s. 10d. on an average, which make the annual income of each Brother and Sister about six guineas (c).

The Seal of this hospital is of lead, and is kept in the Corporation chest; it is oval, and has on it the figure of a fleur de lis, with this inscription in letters of an antient form, s' COE HOSPITAL' S'CI IOH'IS IN SANDWICO; that is, the Common Seal of the Hospital of St. John in Sandwich.

ST. THOMAS'S, alias ELLIS'S HOSPITAL.

THIS Hospital was founded in honour of St. Thomas (Becket,) martyr, about the year 1392, anno 16 Richard II, by Thomas Ellis, of this town, draper (d), who endowed it with a manor farm, called Denne Court in Woodnesborough, consisting of a messuage and 132 acres of land (e), which he that year conveyed to certain feoffees (f), who with the King's licence, assigned the premises to 12 poor persons therein named, and their successors in this hospital, for their use and maintenance; after which, Henry Greenshield, of Sandwich, gent. in the last year of K. Edward IV. (g) made an addition to this charity by giving to it by his will, 22 acres of land in

Mayor and Jurats were the founders, and maintained the same, and provided for twelve poor people there; but the Archbishop, and the Commissioners under him, must have been strangely and designedly misinformed, as this Hospital had an estate, consisting at that time, as at present, of both houses and quit-rents, and though it had from the beginning, dependence on the benevolence of the Mayor and Jurats, in common with other charitable persons of the town and neighbourhood, yet they were never officially, in any sense, reputed either the founders or supporters of it.

(b) He was a native of Sandwich, and a descendant of one of the original Dutch settlers in this town; he inherited a very large fortune, and in his will was a liberal benefactor not only to this hospital, but to the poor of St. Mary's parish in Sandwich.

(c) At the bottom of a wooden dish, which was probably used formerly either to collect alms for the hospital, or oblations for the dead, is a round silver plate, gilt, on which is rudely engraved the figure of a woman, with a purse in one hand and a staff in the other, with this inscription round her, Pro anima Cristine Pikefysch, who was admitted a sister of this hospital anno 6 Henry V. and most likely gave this dish for the above use.

Woodnesborough likewise, which with the former, now goes altogether under the name of Denne Court; and it appears by the several rentals of it to the present time, that there were afterwards several other benefactions of rents, lands and houses made to it.

The Commissioners under the statute of 37 Henry VIII. made a return of this hospital by the name of Elys's Hospital, and that it was of the clear yearly value of 10l. os. 4½d. beyond reprises; and Archbishop Parker in the year 1562, certified it to the Privy Council by the same name to be of the yearly value of 12l. and to consist of 12 Brothers and 4 Sisters, placed there for term of life, and relieved by alms and the revenue of the Hospital, which was of the patronage of the Mayor and Jurats, and that it was very charitably ordered and surveyed by the Mayor. But the Mayor and Jurats certainly never were Governors of this foundation, unless by usurpation, or by a renewal of the feoffment to some of them as private persons, whatever concern they might have had in it before the inquiry, taken at Deal in 1636; but as Mayor and Jurats, it is evident that they have had nothing to do with it since it has from the time of its foundation been vested in feoffees, the feoffment having been renewed from time to time. The feoffees are generally of the town, or the adjoining country, who when reduced to three, ought to create a fresh trust, and enlarge their number to nine, in conformity to certain rules established by the feoffees in 1725; by which regulations this Hospital has ever since been governed, the vacancies being supplied by the feoffees in rotation.

The number of poor persons placed in it is twelve, according to the original institution,

The account of this hospital is mostly taken from Boys's Collections, p. 119 & seq.

(d) Thomas Ellis or Elys was a wealthy draper of Sandwich, and is mentioned in Rymer's Fœd. vol. vii, p. 178, as having lent 40l. to K. Richard II. in his first year, to supply his necessities. He served in Parliament for Sandwich in the 43d year of K. Edward III, and in the first year of K. Richard II, and was Mayor there in the years 1370 and 1382. His name occurs among the witnesses to a number of deeds, between the years 1356 and 1389. He was buried with his wife in the north isle of St. Peter's church.

He bore for his arms—Or, on a cross sable, 5 crescents argent.

(e) See an account of this estate above, under Woodnesborough. This estate was then holden of Anne, Queen Consort, as of the Honour of Ledes, by the service of one quarter of a knight's fee, and the rent of 1s. 6d. to the manor of Queen Court in Ospringe.

that is, eight men and four women, all single, by the name of the Brothers and Sisters of St. Thomas (Elly's) Hospital. They are to be aged about 50, and parishioners and inhabitants within one of the respective parishes of the Town and Port of Sandwich (b).

The present feoffees are now reduced to two only, viz. sr Henry Oxenden, of Brome, bart. and John Lynch, L.L. D. Archdeacon of Canterbury (i).

This hospital is situated in a retired situation, between New Street and the Corn Market, a passage through the middle of it divides the house into two parts; on the south side is the hall open to the roof, beyond which are the women's apartments, two above and two below; the men's rooms are on the north side, four above and four below.

The income of it is very considerable, consisting of the manor farm of Denne Court above-mentioned, and sundry other small pieces of land, houses, tenements, and quitrents, almost all of them in this town, amounting to the yearly sum of 162l. 11s. the reprises, out of which, being quitrents for their estates, are 6l. 7s. 4d.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.

THIS HOSPITAL is situated just without the town of Sandwich, on the south side of it on the angle, where the two roads join, coming from Eastry and Woodnesborough; notwithstanding tradition gives a much earlier period to the foundation of this hospital (k), yet it appears (b) See the Rules and Orders for the good government of this Hospital, and disposing of the revenues of it, printed in Boys's Collections, p. 161.

(i) See a list of the feoffees from the foundation of this Hospital, in Boys's Collections, p. 167.

The principal modern benefactor to this Hospital has been John Michell, of Richmond in Surry, esq; who was for almost 20 years successively returned in Parliament for Sandwich. Upon the death of John Thurbarne, esq; sergeant at law, he took upon himself the care of the money belonging to this hospital, which being subscribed into the South Sea Company, with the consent of the other trustees, in that fatal year 1720, came out again with a deficiency of near half the principal, amounting to about 200l. which loss he voluntarily sustained, and by his benevolence made good again to the brothers and sisters. He used his care and diligence, with the consent of the other trustees, towards the renewing and settling the present trust, erected in the year 1725, and in composing the Orders and Rules for the good Government of the Hospital, and the well disposing of the revenues of it.

(k) The evidences remaining in the hospital, seem to indicate that the institution commenced many years before the above time. Tradition and some Mss. give the first foundation to Thomas Crawthorne and Maud his wife, in the year 1190; and further, that their bodies were interred in the priory of the Carmelites in Sandwich; but if so, they must have been removed there afterwards, for that priory was not founded till more than fourscore years after the above period.

by a bull of Pope Innocent IV. in his second year, anno 1244, that it was then begun to be founded by sr Henry de Sandwich, knt. in honor of St. Bartholomew, for the support of the weak and infirm, and endowed by him for that purpose, so that the Brothers and Sisters should live in it under some order of discipline, and be maintained at table, and should wear a uniform habit (l); which bull, on his petition, was addressed to the Archbishop, as diocesan of the place, with an injunction to him to issue his letters for that purpose (m).

In the Customal of Sandwich there is mention made of three Priests, employed by the Brothers and Sisters to officiate in their chapel for the souls of Bertrine de Crawthorne, William Bucharde (n), and sr Henry Sandwich, knt. who were probably all three benefactors to this hospital, in the order of time therein mentioned.

Such as were most liberal in their donations to hospitals, and other religious foundations, acquired the name of first, second, and third founder, in order of time as they made additions to the foundation, and thus several of the family of Sandwich, from their respective benefactions to this hospital, were successively entitled the founders of it, and were from the first, the undoubted patrons of it, till sr Nicholas de Sandwich assigned the patronage of it to the Mayor and Barons of Sandwich, who from that time became Governors of it; but great inconveniencies arising from the confusion in the Common Assemblies, where the business of the (l) Leland, in his Itin. vol. vii, p. 125, says, "There was an hospital (meaning this of St. Bartholomew) without the town, first ordained for mariners diseased and hurt;" but on what authority he does not mention; however, there is a great probability from the situation, that the original intention of it was, that the Brothers and Sisters placed in it, should accomodate pilgrims and travellers, by furnishing them with lodgings, provisions, and other necessaries on their journeys; and there has been till very lately within its walls, a building appropriated to the use of vagrants, wherein they were supplied with straw, and supported in illness by the Brothers and Sisters.

(m) The copy remaining of this bull, is apparently incorrect; the tower has been searched for the original, but it could not be found.

(n) William Bucharde, son of Simon, Clerk, for the health of his soul, of Sarvine, and Suanilde his wife, and all his ancestors and successors, gave in pure and perpetual alms to God and St. Mary, and the Brothers and Sisters of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew in Sandwich, for the maintenance of one chaplain, there ministering daily, in celebrating for the faithful, &c. five marcs of yearly rent, as issuing out of divers lands, tenements, and likewise certain lands in Sandwich, as is therein mentioned. Witnesses, sr Henry de Sandwich, sr Simon his son. Boys's Coll. p. 24.

It appears by the wills in Prerog. Office, Canterbury, that there was a house, at Ejeb, near Sandwich, to which the members of this hospital, being lepers, were sent to remain during their infirmity.

hospital was decided, it was agreed, to leave the appointments in it, to the Mayor and Jurats only; and afterwards again, for the like reason, to the Mayor only, who continues regularly to fill up such vacancies in it during his Mayoralty.

The business of this hospital seems to have been regulated formerly, for the most part, in the Court Hall of Sandwich, and the Orders of the Governors were registered in the books of the corporation, till about the year 1710; since which, it has been regularly visited twice a year by the Mayor and Jurats, who are styled Patrons, Governors and Visitors of it, and the entries are made in books provided separately for the purpose. One of the Visitations is held on St. Bartholomew's day, when the Governors and Fraternity assemble in the chapel, and after divine service, proceed to the election of a Master, for the ensuing year; the Governors then view the buildings, and direct the necessary repairs.

The other Meeting, is on the Thursday preceding the annual choice of Mayor, when the Governors assemble at the Hospital, to admit the master's account for the past year, and to see that their former orders and directions have been properly attended to; an enquiry is then made into the conduct of the people of it, when the delinquents are reprimanded, or fined as the case requires (o).

It does not appear that this Hospital was actually incorporated by any Royal Patent, and made thereby capable of gifts and grants in succession, till K. Henry VIII. in his 27th year, by his letters patent, confirmed the dispensation which Archbp. Cranmer had made to it, though it seems to have been virtually so, by K. Edw. III.'s grant to it, of the profits of the Ferry, between this town and Stonar, a further mention of which will be made below, and an exemplification of it by K. Henry VIII; but the only public instrument of foundation, was the Bull above-mentioned, of Pope Innocent IV. (p)

The above-mentioned dispensation of Archbp. Cranmer, was applied for and obtained by the Hospital, in pursuance of the Act of the 25th

(o) The following account of the ancient visitation of this Hospital on the feast of St. Bartholomew, before the Reformation, is related in the Customal of Sandwich. Every year on that feast, the Mayor and Commonalty visited the Hospital in solemn procession, the laity of Sandwich leading the way, some with instruments of music, others to the number of sevenscore and more bearing wax lights, provided for the occasion by the Corporation, which lights were to be left in the chapel of the Hospital, as an offering for the use of it throughout the year. After these followed the clergy of Sandwich, in their proper habits, chanting hymns and carrying tapers; the Rector of St. Peter's, or some other clergyman appointed by the Mayor, celebrating high mass, with solemnity and decorum; some of the better sort of the Commonalty, as sir Nicholas de Sandwich and year of K. Henry VIII (q); it authorized the Master, and Brethren, and their successors, to hold the Hospital, with all their then possessions, rights, &c. and future acquisitions, in as free and ample a manner as their predecessors had enjoyed their estates and privileges, reserving to the Mayor of Sandwich, all his right and interest in the premises.

In the Parliament of the 37th year of K. Henry VIII, it was enacted, that the King at his will and pleasure, during his life, might empower his Commissioners to enter into, and seize to the King's use, among other things, any hospital, and the lands, &c. belonging to it, and that after such entry made, the same should be velted in the King, under the controul of the Court of Augmentation; a commission was accordingly awarded to the Archbp. and others, who entered and seized into the King's hands this Hospital with its possessions, which was certified and delivered over to the above-mentioned Court, but there was no suppression, dissolution, or grant of this Hospital during that reign. In 1561 Abp. Parker commissioned Steph. Nevinson, LL. D. Commissary of the diocese, and others, to visit the three hospitals in Sandwich; and the next year, at the requisition of the Queen, he gave into the Exchequer, a certificate of all the schools and hospitals in his diocese. The return of this hospital ran thus: It is of the first foundation of one sir John Sandwich, knt. and now of the foundation of the Mayor and Commonalty of the town of Sandwich; that there was placed by the said Mayor, from time to time, the number of twelve Brothers and four Sisters, who are relieved only from the revenues of it, amounting to the yearly value, by estimation, of 40l. that the Hospital was charitably used to God's glory, and surveyed from time to time by the Mayor of Sandwich, and was kept in good order. After this the Hospital remained quiet, till 1619, when there was an enquiry instituted from the Augmentation Office, why this Hospital should be concealed from the crown, and what right the Mayor, &c. of Sandwich, had to it; others, provided their own tapers and offered them there.

There was usually a great resort of people at this place, at the fair, held on the eve of St. Luke, and the Mayor commonly attended.

(p) This was solicited by sir Henry de Sandwich, in consequence of a constitution of the Bishop of Salisbury in 1217, which was made a Provincial Constitution by Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, about the year 1236.

(q) This Act was made for the exoneration of all exactions, &c. to the See of Rome, enacting that no persons thenceforth should apply to the Pope for licences, dispensations, &c. but to the Archbishop of Canterbury, only, and empowering the Archbishop to issue such instruments, to be confirmed, if required, under the Great Seal, and enrolled in Chancery.

and K. James I. in 1620, under pretence of the Statutes of 37 Henry VIII, and the 1st of K. Edward VI, at the suit of James, Viscount Doncaster, granted this Hospital and the lands belonging to it, to ſir John Townſend and other patentees, in fee farm, to hold in free ſocage, as of the manor of East Greenwich, at the yearly rent of 26s. 8d. But the corporation being well adviſed, diſputed the matter, and upon a bearing, the Hospital was found to be a lay foundation, and not within the meaning of the ſtatutes above-mentioned, upon which the patentees gave up their ſuit; in 1636, a venire facias was iſſued for the Mayor and Jurats to appear before the Commissioners, on a commiſſion on the ſtatute for charitable uſes, to ſhew by what right they took on them the government of the hospitals in Sandwich. The records of the corporation do not furniſh the reſult of this enquiry, but the Hospital of St. Thomas has not been ſince then under the government of the Mayor and Jurats, whiſt this hospital and that of St. John, has continued under their ſuperintendance to this day.

If the founders left any rules for the government of this Hospital, they are loſt (r); but the total number of Brothers and Sisters ſeems to have been always ſixteen (s). Formerly there was a limited number of each ſex, namely, twelve men and four women; but at this time the men and women are preſented indifferently, as the vacancies happen.

The ſcite of this hospital is ſurrounded by a fence, which incloſes the farm houſe, barns,

(r) The original evidences of this hospital are moſtly loſt; a fair copy, however, of them remains, written by John Searles, or Serle, Town Clerk, about the middle of the 15th century, and afterwards a Brother of this hospital. Antient deeds and evidences in this town and neighbourhood, are becoming more ſcarce every day, ſince a gentleman of the law, now reſiding here, and bearing an office in this Corporation, and otherwiſe a man of ſenſe and abilities, has avowed it his conſtant praſtice to deſtroy, as of no uſe and only creating difficulties, all the antient deeds and evidences of the eſtates, the titles of which paſs through his hands, which he has done for ſeveral years paſt.

(s) The Cuſtomal of Sandwich, ſays, that the number might be further increaſed, if the Mayor and Jurats ſhould think proper.

(t) The other, or 16th tenement, was converted into a farm houſe for the reſidence of the occupier of the lands belonging to the Hospital, when they were firſt hired out, and the perſon who is preſented to that vacancy, to which this houſe would otherwiſe belong, is permitted to reſide in Sandwich, with an allowance from the Hospital in money, in lieu of it.

(u) The Cuſtomal of Sandwich gives a pretty full account of this Hospital, as it exiſted at the beginning of the 14th century, and a good idea of the domeſtic œconomy of this fraternity may be formed from thence, as it exiſted at that time. It appears by it, that though the Brothers and Sisters had ſeparate rooms or chambers, they had not then different ſtables, and other outhouſes, a chapel, and 15 ſmall, but commodious houſes, with gardens for the Brothers and Sisters (t). The whole of the ſcite is extraparochial (u).

The Chapel is ſituated at a ſmall diſtance from the houſe; it is a large and handſome edifice, in which and in the cemetery belonging to it, there were buried not only many of the Brothers and Sisters, but others of the town; there is in it an altar monument, covered with a ſlab of Suffex marble, on which lies the effigies of a man, completely caſed in his coat of mail, with a ſmooth breaſt piece over his hawberk; there is a triangular ſhield over the body, and a broad ſword lying along his left thigh. It is undoubtedly meant for ſir Henry de Sandwich, but the whole ſeems to be a cenotaph, deſigned to commemorate him as the founder of this hospital. An inſcription on a rail over the figure points out this ſpot, as the burial place of ſir Henry de Sandwich, and ſir Nicholas his ſon; but upon a ſtrict examination of the ſuppoſed tomb, a few years ago, when under repair, and of the ground beneath, ſo far as was ſearched, there was neither coffin, nor any other mark of ſepulture found (v).

When the Reformation took place, and maſſes and commemorations for the dead were aboliſhed, the Chaplains officiating in this chapel were of courſe diſmiſſed, as being of no further uſe in it (w); and it does not appear, that any regular proviſion has been made ſince, for the maintenance of a Minifter to perform divine ſervice in it, for the uſe of the Hospital. In 1605, divine ſervice was ordered by the Governors, as at preſent; the whole was one connected building, with a public hall, bakehouſe and kitchen, the foundations of which may be traced at this day.

(v) It appears by the evidences of the hospital, that in 1208 there were altars in this chapel dedicated to St. Phillip and St. James, and to St. Margaret. Boys's Coll. p. 33.

(w) It appears by the Cuſtomal of Sandwich, that in antient times, there were to be three prieſts, to officiate conſtantly in this chapel, with a ſtipend of 5 marcs apiece; one of theſe prieſts was to pray for the ſouls of Bertrina de Crawthorne, his anceſtors and poſterity, as appears by a deed of feoffment; another for the ſouls of Wm. Bowcharde, his anceſtors and ſucceſſors; and the third for the ſouls of ſir Henry Sandwich, and others.

That the Mayor, with the Jurats, viſited theſe Prieſts, to inquire into their conduct, diſplacing ſuch as miſbehaved, without the interference of any ordinary; they were choiſen, inſtituted, and ſworn by the Mayor and Jurats, who inſpected the veſtments, books, veſſels, and every thing elſe belonging to the chapel, and delivered the whole, with an inventory to the chaplain, for the time being, who was to take care of, and be accountable for them. The other two prieſts were likewiſe to be attentive to the church furniture. The Chaplain confeſſed the Brothers, Sisters, and ſervants of the hospital, and adminiſtered the Sacraments, for which he received all the offerings made by the ſaid Brothers and Sisters.

vernors to be performed in the chapel every day, and a penalty inflicted for absence on every Brother and Sister, each of whom were to pay ten shillings a year to the reader for his performance in it. In 1616 the corporation allowed 10l. to a minister, for expounding the Scriptures in this chapel every Sunday; in 1630 one of the Brothers was directed to say prayers every morning, bury the dead, &c. according to former use and custom; and it was ordered at the same time, that the Hospital should provide a minister to preach three or four times throughout the year, and administer the sacraments, according to former custom; in 1636, a clergyman in orders was admitted a Brother, and it was agreed that he should perform all ministerial duty belonging to the Hospital, during his continuance as such; for many years since there was service performed in this chapel only once a year, on St. Bartholomew's day, but now a monthly sermon is preached there by one of the Ministers of Sandwich, upon the most liberal terms.

The benefactions to this hospital have been numerous and ample, as the present terrier and rental of it shews; its present revenue consists of one large farm of 285 acres of land, arable and pasture (x), several pieces of land and tenements in Sandwich, and some quitrents; and likewise a clear annual rent charge of 62l. paid out of the tolls arising for the passage over the new bridge, between Sandwich and Stonar (y); this altogether amounts to the annual sum of 357l. 11s. 6d. out of which are payable fundry quitrents and other charges, to the amount of 22l. 3s. 6d, so that the clear yearly income is only 335l. 8s. od. (z). The Seal of this hospital is a small oval, representing St. Bartholomew sitting under a canopy; inscription, S. Sancti Bartholemei.

(y) K. Edward III. in his 23d year, granted by writ of Privy Seal, to the Brethren of this Hospital, all the profits arising from the ferry over the haven, between Sandwich and Stonar, in support of the alms of the Hospital for ever, so that the profits be collected and expended, by the direction and advice of the Mayor of Sandwich, and the Master of the Hospital; an exemplification of which grant was obtained in the 16th year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign. The profits of this ferry continued part of the revenues of this hospital, till on pretence of the passage in the ferry boat being subject to many inconveniences, an Act of Parliament was obtained in 1755, for building a bridge across the haven, in lieu of the ferry boat, between Sandwich and Stonar, in which Act there is a clause, which secures to this hospital, from the revenue of the bridge, the annual sum of 62l. being

Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, having promoted a subscription in 1563, among the principal inhabitants of this town, for the purpose of erecting a building for a free school, upon a promise to endow it with lands of sufficient value to support the building and maintain a master, solicited Archbishop Parker for his approbation of his design, who afterwards became highly instrumental in bringing forward this foundation, by giving his countenance to it, and procuring, through Secretary Cecil's interest, the Queen's licence for this purpose.

This licence was issued on October 1, in the above year, in which Roger Manwood, of Hackington, esq; mentioned above, was empowered to erect a free school in Sandwich, by the name of the Free School of Roger Manwood in Sandwich; and the Queen granted, that the Mayor and Jurats of Sandwich, and their successors, should be Governors of the school, and be one body incorporate in deed and name, by the title of Governors of the Free School of Roger Manwood in Sandwich; that they might sue and implead by that name in all courts; might purchase estates in fee to the value of 40l. a year, and have a Common Seal; and she further gave him special licence, to give and grant to the said Governors, the particular estates, recited in the deed of feoffment, (afterwards made to them,) with other liberties usual in grants of that sort (a).

The subscriptions by this time, towards the building of the school house, amounted to the sum of 286l. and upwards; and on the second of November following, Mr. Manwood obtained from the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, a grant in fee farm of a piece of ground, inclosed with a stone wall, sometime called St. Thomas's House in Sandwich, near Canterbury gate, together with a piece of salts over against it, to the use of him, his heirs; and assigns, for ever, at the yearly rent of twenty pence (b); both which pieces of land, on Feb. 20, 1566, together with ninety acres of meadow, pasture, and woodland, in St. Stephen's, alias Hackington, and the last and greatest rent which had been made of the ferry, to be paid quarterly, without any deduction or abatement whatsoever, with other clauses for the performance and security of this rent charge, for the benefit of the hospital.

(z) The Brothers and Sisters receive their pensions quarterly; the above clear income would allow to each member nearly 21l. yearly, but the repairs being very heavy on the hospital at present, they do not receive more than about 17l. each, to which must be added the value of the house and garden, the carriage of coals and sand; wood and stubble from the farm, and the exemption from all assessments and taxes; which makes the whole benefit from the Hospital, at a fair estimation, about four, or perhaps five and twenty pounds a year.

Northgate, near Canterbury, Mr. Manwood enfeoffed to the Mayor and Jurats of Sandwich, by the name of the Governors of his Free Grammar School, and to their successors for ever, for the perpetual support and maintenance of it (c); and they accordingly obtained possession of these estates, by livery and seisin, in March following. On the above piece of ground, called St. Thomas's House, the building for this school was afterwards erected, and the school established, and it continues as such at this time.

Joane Trapps, of London, widow, by her will in 1568, gave to the Rector and Scholars of Lincoln College in Oxford, 52 acres of land at Whitstable, in this county, towards the finding of four scholars for ever in that college, two to be placed and nominated from this school, by the Rector, &c. and two by the Governors of it, and so by like turn and course of election and nomination for ever; which land, on July 30, 1568, Roger Manwood, Sergeant at Law, and Richard Heywood, esq., executors of the will, conveyed over to the Rector and Scholars above-mentioned, for this purpose; and the Executors covenanted, that these lands should yield to the Rector, &c. a clear yearly rent of 11l. 6s. 8d. of which sum, the Rector, &c. agreed to pay yearly to the four scholars 10l. 13s. 4d. towards the exhibitions, and charges of finding the Scholars, to be called the Scholars of Robert Trapps, of London, Goldsmith, and Joane his wife; the remaining 13s. 4d. to the use of the Rector, &c. and the Governors of the School agreed, that after the death of the said Roger Manwood, upon every avoidance of the Schoolmaster's place, they would within twenty days give notice to him of it, and if within a like space of time afterwards, the Rector, &c. should deliver in writing, under their Common Seal, to the Mayor of Sandwich, or to the usher at the school-house, the names of two persons, Fellows of the said college, duly qualified, they the Governors should make choice of one of them within twenty days, or in default thereof, the nomination of such master should be in the Archbishop of Canterbury, the fee being full, otherwise in the Dean of Canterbury for the time being (d).

Thomas Manwood, gent. by will proved in 1570, gave to the Governors of his brother Roger's free Grammar School in Sandwich, as much of his lands and tenements as should amount to the clear yearly rent of 10l. for the maintenance and sustentation of the School for ever; that is to say, for an usher, when cause should require, or for other necessary matters of maintenance of the School, in such form as should be thought meet to the Governors; in conformity to which, Roger Manwood, the surviving Executor, in 1572, conveyed to the Governors certain premises in Sandwich, of that clear yearly value.

Sir Roger Manwood, knt. above-mentioned, then Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, as surviving Executor of the will of Joane Trapps, widow, in the year 1581, in pursuance of the said will, conveyed to the Master and Fellows of Gonville and Caius College in Cambridge, a farm called Bodkins, in Swalecliffe in this county, together with fifty-seven acres and upwards, in that parish, &c. which premises were of the clear yearly value of 11l. 6s. 8d. in consideration of which, the master agreed to pay annually to four Scholars of their College 10l. 13s. 4d. four marks to each; the Scholars to be nominated by the Governors of this School, and by the Master alternately, and to be called the Scholars of Robert Trapps, of London, Goldsmith, and Joane his wife; the remaining sum of 13s. 4d. to be paid to the Master to the use and behoof of the College (e). Sir Roger Manwood, during his life, took the rents of the estates, which he had enfeoffed to the Governors of his School, paying the master's salary regularly, till his death in 1592; after which, sir Peter Manwood, heir and executor of sir Roger, received the rents, and paid the master's salary, till a few years before his death; after which sir John Manwood, his son and heir, or others claiming under him, took the rents of the estates to their own use, but made no payment to the master; upon which the Governors in 1633, sued out a Commission of charitable uses, and an inquisition was taken and return made, upon which it was awarded, that the Governors should enter into the several estates, and hold and enjoy them for ever, according to the deed of feoffment and grant of sir Roger Manwood made of them to the Mayor and Jurats, who should pay to the schoolmaster all arrears of salary, and 40l. for damages, and a writ of execution followed for this purpose (f); but exceptions being put into the Court of Chancery against this award, affirming that sir Roger Manwood intended to the school only 20l. a year for the master, and that before the making of the feoffment to the Mayor and Jurats, he made a lease of the lands mentioned therein for 500 years, reserving only the yearly rent of 20l. to be paid to the Mayor and Jurats and their successors, for the maintenance of the master, which lease was afterwards, in 1571, lawfully assigned back again to sir Roger Manwood, his executors and assigns, who by will disposed of all his leases in Kent to his heirs, for the time being, who should have his house at St. Stephen's.

In June 1635, the matter was argued before the Lord Keeper, who confirmed the award of the Commissioners, as to the arrearages of the stipend and the 40 pounds damages; and in favor to fir John Manwood, and the others, directed, that the same should be paid by him and them, to the Mayor and Jurats on behalf of the master by 30*l. per annum*, over and above the said salary of 20*l. per annum*; but the other part of the Commissioners decree, respecting the possession of 90 acres in Hackington and Northgate, was reversed; and it was decreed, that fir John Manwood should hold the lands, according to the lease made of them as above-mentioned.

The salary of 20*l. per annum* has been ever since paid with tolerable regularity by the proprietors of the estate, the present one being fir Edward Hales, of St. Stephen's, bart.

Edmund Parboe, esq; by will in 1640, besides many other legacies to the parishes, conduits, St. John's Hospital, and the Mayor and Jurats, in Sandwich, gave to the Mayor and Jurats of Sandwich, Governors of the Grammar School, an annuity of 10*l.* out of the premises in Sandwich therein mentioned, of which sum 4*l.* was to be to the master of the school, and 5*l.* to the Rector, Fellows, and Scholars of Lincoln College, Oxford, in augmentation, &c. of the scholars sent from Sandwich; and if none were sent, the money to remain in the Governors hands, to accumulate for such scholars as should be afterwards appointed; the remaining 20*s.* to the Mayor and Jurats, for wine at their ordinaries, when they should hold the same, at the inn called the Pelican, in Sandwich, out of which the annuity was directed to be paid; and in case of abuse, or misemployment of this benefaction by the Mayor, &c. he gave the same to his daughter Boys and her heirs for ever. It does not appear that the school was ever benefitted by this bequest, or how it happened that it was not so.

In 1685, the Mayor and Jurats, by deed of conveyance and fine levied, purchased of William Ellwood, of Sandwich, gent. Phineas Ellwood, of Oxford, M. D. a piece of land, whereon were two stables, a kitchen and a cove, situate in St. Mary's parish in Sandwich, to the use of them and their successors in trust, for the sole use and benefit of the master of the school for the time being.

Sir Roger Manwood drew up, in 1580, Rules and Ordinances, to be observed for the better government of this school, which are still existing, signed by him, and are still observed in the regulation and government of it (g); in which, among other rules, it is ordered, that the Master shall be chosen and elected by the Governors, viz. the Mayor and Jurats of Sandwich, out of Lincoln College, Oxford, and to be Master of Arts, if it might conveniently be, and allowed of by the ordinary, and that he and the Usher, who should be appointed by the master, and admitted by the Governors, should teach the grammar in the school. The master's salary to be 20*l.* and the addition made by his brother Tho. Manwood's will; the usher's salary to be 10*l.* The overplus of all the lands and tenements, after the above salaries were paid, and all other charges, reparations, and expences of them, and of the school-house, should be paid, to be equally divided between the master and usher. Of the scholars to be taught in the school, the children of the inhabitants of Sandwich to be freely taught, without any thing demanded, or taken, but of benevolence at the end of every quarter, towards buying of books for the common use of the scholars; the rest of the foreign scholars to be taught for such price, and rate, as should be limited by the Governors. And if there should not be so many grammar scholars as should furnish the school house, there should be a person, who could write well, who should teach the scholars reading and writing in the school, in the time of there being no usher therein, to be placed in it by the Mayor and Jurats, and to be paid out of the revenues of the School 4*l.* yearly, and such gains as by his diligent teaching he could honestly get. The master not to take to board, diet or lodge in his house, or rooms, more than twelve scholars, and the usher not above six, without leave given by the Governors.

The rest of the rules, which are many, concern mostly the internal government of the School, and directions for the teaching good behaviour, manners, delinquencies, and punishments of the scholars, and other minute particulars, too numerous to mention here.

There is a Common Seal, of silver, belonging to the Governors of this school, which is kept among the Corporation Seals of Sandwich (b).

THE CHARITY SCHOOL.

THE Charity School in this town has been supported a great number of years by casual contributions, and regular subscriptions begun about the year 1711, at which time the school seems to have commenced; the present establishment is thirty boys and thirty girls, under a master and mistress; the former are taught to read and write, and the latter employed in knitting and plain work; nine trustees are appointed every year, three from each parish, who, with the Mayor, examine the children, and direct all the affairs of the school.

The attention paid to this school, and the visible good effects of it, have brought it to no small degree of reputation and prosperity, which has lately been increased by a bequest of 100l. by Mr. Sprat, of Fort St. George, in the East Indies, the interest of which, by the will, is to be laid out for the scholars, at the discretion of the trustees of the school. This legacy has been invested in 3 per cent. consol. Bank Annuities, in the names of the Rev. John Conant, Captain Peter Rainier, and Daniel Rainier, esq; and yields a dividend of 4l. 8s. upon a principal of 146l. 15s. 8d. The subscriptions of late years have amounted to about 60l. and the collections

(k) He was esteemed by all, a high flown Socinian, and translated into English several Socinian books. He was a desperate zealot for the King's cause, and in 1648 suffered much for his loyalty by imprisonment first, and afterwards by expulsion. See Wood's Ath. facti. vol. i, p. 284.

(l) He was Rector of Goodnestone, near Faversham. The schoolmaster's stipend having been in arrears some years, he refused to take possession of the school, which probably, on that account, continued without a master till Mr. Wrentmore's appointment.

(m) He was Vicar of Woodnesborough.

(n) He lies buried in St. Mary's church in Sandwich; at sermons to about 7l. which, added to the dividend, have been sufficient to cloath, as well as instruct the children. The subscribers present to the vacancies in rotation, and the children when they leave the school, and have behaved well, are permitted to take with them their books and cloaths.

The master of this school teaches likewise six other boys, for the rents of an estate, given by the will of David Turner, of Sandwich, in 1665, to the Mayor and Jurats in trust, to be by them disposed of to such person as they should think fit to teach to write and read English, and to teach for the same, all such poor children as they should think fit to be taught for nothing, or to have their teaching given them. This estate so given, consisted of three messuages, or tenements, with their appurtenances, in the parishes of St. Clement and St. Peter in Sandwich; but of these the Mayor and Jurats are now in possession only of one house in St. Peter's, and another in St. Clement's parish, both together of the yearly rent of 3l. 16s.

CHARITIES.

James Master, of East Langdon, esq; by will, proved in 1631, ordered the tenant of an acre of ground, which he had in Sandwich, behind the vicarage of St. Clement's church, and abutting to the town ditch, for which he had 33s. 4d. by the year, should yearly, between Whitsuntide and Midsummer, when sea coal was best cheap, provide so many of them, at the best hand, as his rent should come unto, and lay them up, to be given among the poor of the three parishes, as the Mayor of the town then being, together with the overseers of the poor of the parish, should think to have most need; the coals to be given among them, some week before Christmas yearly, and this to continue for ever (q).

Land in St. Clement's parish, called St. George's Lees, lying in two pieces, containing in the whole three acres, now of the yearly rent of 7l. 10s. was given originally to that parish, for the maintenance of a lamp in St. Clement's church.

his brother John was Minister of St. Peter and St. Mary's in Sandwich; these were the Fratres Thomasi, mentioned by Battely in his Antiquitates Rutupinæ.

(o) He died at Sandwich in 1763, æt. 83, and was buried in St. Mary's church there, having been vicar of it for 57 years.

(p) He is Rector of St. Peter's in Sandwich, which he holds with the vicarage of Sellindge in this county.

(q) This seems to be the piece of ground called Mill Garden, containing about three quarters of an acre, now supposed to be given to the reparation of the church, and of the annual value of three pounds.

Sir

The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

Sir Henry Furnese, of Waldersbare, bart. who died in 1712, gave by his will to the Mayor and Jurats of Sandwich 500*l.* to be laid out in the purchase of a freehold estate, to be settled on them and their successors, in trust, to dispose of the rents, issues, and profits, with the advice of the Town Clerk and the Churchwardens for the time being, upon the 30th of May, yearly, being his birth-day, two fifths to the poor of St. Peter's, where he was born, and a moiety of the remaining three fifths to each of the other two parishes in Sandwich (r).

The rents, issues and profits, the charges being deducted, of a farm and lands at Marshborough in Woodnesborough, containing by estimation nine acres, given by the will of Mr. Peter Jarvis, merchant, of Leghorn, and a native of Sandwich, proved in 1715, in trust for the poor of the three parishes of Sandwich, to be paid in equal proportions to the churchwardens every year, on December 20, in the Guildball, and now of the yearly rent of 12*l.* (s).

John Sprat, of Fort St. George, in the East Indies, merchant, by his will in 1776, gave to each of the three parishes in Sandwich, one hundred pounds, to be placed out at interest, to be distributed to such poor objects of these parishes, either in bread, coals, cloaths, or money, as the parsons and churchwardens of the respective parishes might think proper, on the 25th of Nov. in each year (t).

A corner tenement abutting to Delph-street and the Fish-market, given to the parish of St. Peter, of the yearly rent of 6*l.* 19*s.*

A tenement next adjoining to the Fish-market, given to St. Peter's parish, and now of the yearly value of 5*l.*

A work shop abutting to Delph-street, given to the above parish, and now of the yearly value of 40*s.*

A piece of ground abutting to the same street, given to the above parish, and is of the yearly value of 1*l.* 14*s.*

(r) Accordingly, in 1727, the Mayor and Jurats purchased a barn and lands, containing about 19 acres, at Weddington in Ash, for 528*l.* These premises are now of the yearly rent of 24*l.* the extra sum of 28*l.* of the purchase money was given by Mr. Robert Furnese, son and heir of the testator.

(s) By the same will, dated in 1712, Mr. Jarvis gave likewise to the parishes, a messuage and eight acres of land in Easfry, together with a moiety of all his personal estates; but afterwards residing at Leghorn; and becoming a convert to the religion of that country, he made another will, dated at Leghorn in 1714, in which he cancelled all his benefactions to Sandwich. This will, however, being insufficient, through want of form, to revoke the first will, as to the devise of the real estate, that at Marshborough passed by the first will to the poor of Sandwich, and the estate at Easfry, which was freehold, went to the next heir.

A piece of ground, called Hog Church-yard, belongs to the same parish, now let at the yearly rent of 1*l.* 4*s.*

Two vaults under the church at the east end, are let to Mr. Daniel Rainier, wine merchant, at the yearly rent of 40*s.*

A small tenement at the south-east corner of the church, another at the south-west corner of the old church-yard. Two small adjoining tenements in King's-street, abutting to the church yard north-east. Another tenement in the same street, all belong to the above parish.

A tenement in the angle between Love-lane and King-street, is now made use of as the parish workhouse (u).

There are several quit-rents paid to the use of the parish of St. Peter, viz. 2*s.* by the hospital of St. Thomas, for a messuage in King-street; a quit-rent of 2*s.* by Thomas Full, for a projection into the church yard; a quit-rent of one shilling a year, for a stable on the Mill-wall, built on part of the ground given to the three parishes by Mr. Masters; and a quit-rent of 8*s.* 6*d.* a year from Elizabeth Buzar, for a passage called the Stone Style, formerly leading from the church-yard into King-street, now closed up and making a part of her tenement there.

Solomon Hougham, esq; of London, who was Sheriff of Kent in 1696, and died the next year, gave by his will, in trust, an annuity, or yearly rent charge of eleven pounds, out of Barton field, in the parish of St. Paul in Canterbury, to be paid on the 1st of June, every year for ever; the same to be paid upon every 24th day of the same month, to the churchwardens of St. Mary's parish in Sandwich, to be by them disposed of as follows: four shillings to be laid out in penny loaves every Sunday; and upon Christmas Day yearly 12 shillings, to be laid out also in penny loaves, to be distributed at church after sermon, or divine service, to such of the poorest of this parish, as the churchwardens should think fit; and in case of age and sickness, if any could not come, their portion of bread to be sent home to them.

(t) By direction of Lloyd Kenyon, esq; these legacies were placed in the public funds; that for St. Clement's parish was vested in the names of the Rev. Wheler Bunce, Daniel Ranier, and Capt. Peter Rainier; that for St. Peter's, in the names of the Rev. John Conant, and of the two latter; and that for St. Mary's, in the names of the three latter likewise; and deeds were accordingly executed, declaring the trust of each investment. The annual dividend to each parish is 4*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* upon the principal stock of 151*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* Old South Sea Annuities. Mr. Sprat was a native of Sandwich, and died at Madras in 1780.

(u) The first of these five tenements belonged to the three Chaplains of Elys's Chantry; the other four were given to the parish by the Corporation in 1606, at the reserved rent of 10*s.*

John Dekewer, of St. John's, Hackney, esq., who died in 1762, gave by his will to the Minister and churchwardens of St. Mary's in Sandwich, and their successors, 500*l.* to be laid out, within six months after his decease, in the public funds, or other government securities, in trust, to amend, repair, support, and preserve the family vault and tomb, and the iron work round the same, in St. Mary's church-yard; and once in every three years to paint the rails; and on every Sunday, after divine service in St. Mary's, in every week successively for ever, to give four shillings in bread to the poor of this parish; and to lay out the remainder of the dividends in coals, to be given to the poor of the parish at Christmas eve yearly, unless the same should happen on a Sunday, otherwise on the day before, at the discretion of the minister and churchwardens, &c. and for no other purpose or intent whatsoever.

Three small tenements and a chamber, lying together in Church-street, and in Vicarage-lane, formerly called St. Catherine's rents, belonging to the parish of St. Mary's.

Two small tenements on the east side of Bowling Alley.

A garden near the Beagrims, rented at 30*s.* a year, by Joseph Solley, esq.

A third part of the rent of a piece of ground on the Mill-wall, rented by the heirs of James Smith, at 3*s.* a year.

A tenement in Church-street, and a piece of ground behind it, rented by Henry Full, on a lease for 99 years, at the yearly rent of 6*d.*

A barn and land adjoining, and the passage and cartway through the said land, let to Laurence Stoddard for 99 years, at a reserved rent of 2*s.* The parish has not received the rent since 1730.

All which last mentioned premises belong to St. Mary's parish; besides which, the following quit-rents belong to the parish.

A quit-rent of 2*s.* a year, out of a barn belonging to Mr. Isaac Slaughter, at the corner of Church-street. A quit-rent of 4*s.* 8*d.* a year, out of a garden, opposite the Beagrims, used by Richard Solley, esq. A quit-rent of 8*d.* a year,

(v) It is said, but without much certainty, that on the very site of this church, there was, in antient times, a monastery, or nunnery, founded by Domneva, Queen and aunt to K. Egbert, in 640, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. This was the church, which was destroyed by the Danes, and rebuilt by Q. Emma, wife of K. Canute, and then again demolished by the French. See Kilb. Survey, p. 238.

(w) These plainly shew that the construction of this church, as to form and materials, was very much like that of the others; there were in the old building two isles and for a garden, at the corner of Church-street in St. Clement's parish, belonging to Mr. George Sayer. And a quit-rent of 3*s.* 4*d.* a year, for a house in High-street, St. Clement's, belonging to the heirs of Mr. Stephen Bradley, formerly the Pelican.

Thomas Fulnesby, of Deal, gent. in 1625, enfeoffed to trustees, four messuages near the Loopes, and overagainst the Beagrims, to make four dwellings of the premises, for four poor tradesmen of St. Mary's parish only, that have been born it it, and have long dwelt there; and in default of such tradesmen, then for such poor of the parish, as have been born, or long dwelt there, and the rents, &c. to be divided among them.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

SANDWICH is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of its own name.

There were formerly three parochial churches in this town, and a church or chapel likewise, supposed by some to have been parochial, dedicated to St. Jacob, which has been long since demolished; but the three former churches, being those of St. Mary, St. Peter, and St. Clement, still remain; an account of all which will be given separately below.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

THIS church stands in a low situation in Strand-street, on the northern part of the town. The original church, built in the time of the Saxons, is said to have been demolished by the Danes, and to have been afterwards rebuilt by Q. Emma (v), which building was burned down by the French, and it was not long afterwards again rebuilt; notwithstanding which, it appears to have become dilapidated and in a most ruinous state in the time of K. Henry VI. for in the 2d year of that reign, anno 1448, part of the steeple fell, in consequence of which it underwent a thorough repair; it however, fell down again on April 25, 1667, and brought down with it most of the church, the western wall, portions of the south isle and its chancel only remaining (w); and though the church itself was soon afterwards rebuilt, as at present (x), the nave; the latter was terminated by the high chancel, and the south isle by St. Laurence's chancel. There were antiently in this church, St. John's chancel, altar and chapel, St. Christopher's altar, St. James's altar and chapel, St. Laurence's chancel and altar, Jesus's altar and mass, and the morn mass altar, St. Catherine's chapel, and the chancel of St. Thomas, Archbishop and martyr, in which was the image of St. Margaret, virgin and martyr.

(x) It seems by the two dates 1671 and 1673, on the walls, to have been begun and finished in those years.

The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

yet it does not appear that any steeple was built till the year 1718, when the present low one was raised upon the south porch, and one bell put up in it (y).

In an antient bead-roll of this church, there is mention made of John and William Condry, the first beginners of the foundation of the chantry of that name in this church; of Thomas Loueryk and his wife, who founded the chapel of our Lady, at the east head of it; and of the three windows of the north side of the church; of Thomas Elys and Margaret his wife, and sir Tho. Rolling, Vicar of this church, of whose goods was made the west window of it; and gave further to the reparations of that window, a yearly rent of 13s. 4d. for ever, and made the vicarage of the parish more than it was before; of John Gyllyng and his wife, who made the north window and gave to the reparations of the church 20l. and 10s. yearly for ever; of Harry Cambridge, hermit; of Alexander Norman and his two wives, who made the south window, and the south porch of this church; of Thomas Chyn, and Thomas Barbor, and their wives, of whose goods was made the procession porch, &c. of Harry Darcy and Alys his wife, of whose goods

(y) Before this, there were five small bells, which about the year 1639, had been formed out of three larger ones; the above five bells were sold, for the faculty had been obtained in 1669, to sell the useless timber and the bells, towards the rebuilding of the church, as it is said, to the parish of Eleham in this county.

(z) Among others: Roger Manwood, of Sandwich, churchwarden in 1507, bought and gave to the repair of all the west windows of this church, within and without, an acre and a yard of pasture land in Worsh parish, to be vested in the churchwardens for ever, being of the yearly rent of three shillings. William Armenter in 1445, granted to the Wardens of St. Mary's, a yearly rent of 12d. out of a tenement abutting to St. Jacob's church-yard. Edward Wood, in 1578, enfeoffed sundry persons, in a piece of land, called St. Jacob's church-yard, for the repair and necessary uses of the parish church. John Stokes, brewer, in 1466, granted to the wardens of St. Mary, a tenement in St. Mary's lane. Roger Manwood, of Wenderton in Wingham, in 1613, released to the wardens of St. Mary's, his right to certain ground, on which an old ruinous tenement lately stood, near St. Jacob's church-yard, to hold to them for ever, according to the will of Roger Manwood, his late father. Walter le Draper, in 1312, gave rents in Sandwich, for the support of a lamp to burn before the image of the Holy Cross in this church. Robert Philipp and John Reade, in 1427, gave a rent out of a tenement, which had been before given in 1409, by Thomas Rollyn, Cl. for the maintenance of a lamp, in the middle of the high quire of this church. Thomas Marleburgh, of Sandwich, in 1463, gave rents for the maintenance of a lamp, in the high quire of this church; and the same year John Warre, of London, gave the like for the same purpose.

(a) In this church are numbers of monuments and inscriptions, all which are printed in Mr. Boys's Collections, p. 319, the whole too numerous to mention here; among others at the west end of the nave, are memorials of the Smiths and Verriers. In the south space, a memorial for were made six copelys of the south roof of the church. Besides these, there were divers other gifts made to this church, for its reparation, and for obits, and other religious services performed in it, as appears by the evidences belonging to it (z).

The inventory of the silver and jewels, belonging to the church before the Reformation, sufficiently shew the costliness of the utensils belonging to it, and the riches of it. The silver, according to the inventory made of them, amounting to 724 ounces; and the habits of the ministers to officiate in it, the linen and books, were answerable to the rest belonging to it.

The present church of St. Mary consists of a north isle, and the nave, at the end of which is the chancel, which has an ascent of three steps on each side; between which entrances are the mayor's seat and other pews. The altar piece, table, and rails, are of wainscot and very ornamental. The font is at the west end of the nave, it is a stone basin, having eight faces changed alternately with plain shields and roses, in quaterfoils; on the shaft are the letters CW. II. RS. DE. IC. POD. 1662 (a).

John Carder, gent. surgeon, and Mayor, formerly of this town, and for his two sons. He died in 1747, æt. 60. Memorials for the Petleys, and for the Whites. In the middle space, on an old stone, are the remains of a cross story, resting on a dog or lion, and the remains of an inscription with this date, 1. M. CCC. XXX. In the north isle, at the north-west corner of the church are 3 grave-stones, on a rise above the pavement, with inscriptions shewing, that underneath is a vault, in which lie many of the family of Hayward, formerly Mayors of this town; arms—Argent, on a pale sable, 3 crescents of the field. Memorials for the Browns, Sackets, Fellowes's, and Kelleys. In the chancel are memorials of Broucke, Kelt, and Dens; and a large stone, robbed of its brazen ornaments, which formerly commemorated the deaths of Roger Manwood and his family; the place where it lies was formerly St. Laurence chancel. In the chancel, against the north wall, is a monument of stone much defaced; on it are the figures of a man and woman kneeling, their hands uplifted in a praying posture, for Abraham Rutton, formerly Mayor, and Susan his wife, by whom he had seven sons and six daughters. He died in 1608; and for his descendant the Rev. John Rutton, obit 1763, æt. 85, Rector of this parish. Against the south wall, is a handsome monument of marble, with these arms—Argent, 5 chevrons sable, and per pale azure and gules, a lion rampant argent; and an inscription for several of the family of Hougham, viz. for Solomon Hougham, Mayor, obit 1658, æt. 59; Mary his wife, obit 1641; Richard Hougham, his eldest son, obit 1662; and Soloman Hougham, esq; his second son, merchant, of London, and Sheriff of Kent in 1606, who died unmarried in 1697, æt. 73; and for Solomon Hougham, his nephew, heir, and sole executor, who died in 1714, æt. 58. Against the same wall a tablet, for Mary, wife of Joseph Stewart, esq; obit 1775, æt. 41; arms—Argent, a lion rampant gules, over all, a bend raguled or. Over the south door, a marble monument for Richard Solly, gent. thrice Mayor, obit 1731, æt. 57; and Anna his wife, daughter of John Crickett, gent. by whom he had ten son,

The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

An Anchoress had her cell at the east end of this church, in the 20th year of K. Henry VIII.

At a small distance south-west of St. Mary's church, was a church or chapel, dedicated to St. Jacob, supposed by many to have been a parochial church; there is nothing left now to point out the situation of the building, the cemetery remains and is used occasionally as a burial place, for the use of St. Mary's parish (b). At the south-west corner was an hermitage, the residence of an hermit (c), whose duty it was to minister to strangers and the poor, to bury the dead, and pray for the people in the chapel, which was destroyed, as well as others of the like sort, in the beginning of K. Edward VI.'s reign (d). It appears that this church or chapel was under the management of the officers of St. Mary's parish, and that the building had been repaired in the years 1445 and 1478.

THE CHURCH of St. Mary is a vicarage, the patronage of which has ever been part of the possessions of the Archdeaconry of Canterbury, to whom the appropriation of the church likewise formerly belonged; it did so in the 8th year of K. Richard II. anno 1384, when on the taxation of the spiritualities and temporalities ecclesiastic, in this diocese, the church of St. Mary's, appropriated to the Archdeacon, was valued and three daughters; she died in 1736, æt. 54; and for Mary their daughter, wife of Mr. Stephen Long, obit 1725, æt. 28, &c. Arms—Azure, a chevron, party per pale, or and gules, between 3 foles naient, argent. At the west end of the nave is an altar tomb, with an inscription, shewing, that in a vault underneath, lie several of the Crickets; another altar tomb, with an inscription, for several of the Nowells; arms—3 covered cups. By the gallery stairs, on an altar tomb, an inscription for Thomas Danson, preacher, of this town, who died 1764; on a raised monument of brick, an inscription, for several of the name of Jordan; this stands close before, and hides the altar part of a monument, under an arch in the north wall, to the memory of Mr. William Loverick, knt. of Ash, and Dame Emma his wife, the daughter of Mr. John Septwans, of that parish, knt. who are said to have been the principal repairers, or builders of this church, after it had been burned by the French, and were buried in K. Henry IV.'s reign; on an adjoining tomb, an inscription for the Maundys. On the upper greeze of the font, is the fragment of a grave-stone, with these letters of an inscription, Hic requie Warson . . . ille 12 oc. . . 1613 obit . . . vixit ætat . . .

There are stones, pointing out the entrances into the vaults of Mr. Solly and Mr. Stewart, and there are inscriptions on board, commemorating the benefactions of John Dekewer, esq.; Solomon Hougham, gent. for Henry Furnese, bart. and Mr. Peter Jarvis.

Several names appear on the stones, on the outside of the east and north walls of the chancel. Sir Edward Ringely, knt. of Knolton, was buried in Jesus chapel in this church, on the left side of the altar. In the 35th of K. Henry VIII. William, Lord Clinton, is said to have been interred under a gilded arch in the south wall of this church, which arch was walled up in K. Edward VI.'s reign, but it was visible some time afterwards in the church-yard, perhaps it may at 8l. and the vicarage was valued at only 4l. and on account of the smallness of it, was not taxed to the tenth (e). The vicarage is valued in the King's books, in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, at 8l. 1s. (f); since which time, and it should seem during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the great tythes, or appropriate parsonage of this church, were given up by the Archdeacon to the vicarage, so that the Vicar has been since intitled to both great and small tythes within the bounds of this parish, which induced several of the incumbents to style themselves Rectors, but certainly wrong, for it is still a vicarage, the Vicars of which are entitled to the receipt and possession of the great tythes, by grant from the appropriator.

In 1588 here were 385 communicants, and it was valued at 40l. per ann. In 1640 here were the same number of communicants, and it was valued at 68l. It is now a discharged living, of the clear yearly value of 40l. It has been augmented by the Governors of Q. Anne's Bounty, the greater part of the money from which has been laid out in the purchase of marsh land in Woodnesborough. At present the Vicar receives the tythes of about 84 acres of land, viz. of 24 acres of arable in Blackfield, belonging to St. Bartholomew's Hospital; of 30 acres of marsh, be the same projection that now appears there, on the south side of the chancel. William Condie, who founded the chantry, afterwards called by his name, in this church, was likewise interred, together with his wife, in the south aisle of the old church, near the Lord Clinton's tomb; but there is nothing now to point out precisely the situation of their remains, nor those of Thomas Manwood, gent. who died in K. Henry VIII.'s time and was buried under the belfry. Stephen Perot was buried likewise in this church in 1570.

There are several altar tombs in the church-yard; one for John and William Carder, the former being a surgeon, obit 1686, æt. 64; the latter, son of the former, obit 1731, æt. 74; and another, for Mr. John Dekewer, of Sandwich, merchant; and Kath. his wife, sister of Mr. Fred. Dewink, of Dover, merchant; Mr. John Dekewer his son, and Abigail his wife; Rich. Dekewer, grandson of the last mentioned John, and son of John and Mary his wife, obit 1720, æt. 1 month; arms—Vert, on a cross engrailed or, 5 fleurs de lis sable; in the 1st and 4th quarters, a caltrop argent; in the 2d and 3d quarters, a lion rampant of the last.

(b) This church yard seems to have got into lay hands at the suppression, for in 1578, it was enclosed by Edward Wood, to certain persons, for the necessary repairs of the parish. The trust was renewed in 1604 and 1649.

(c) The last hermit in it was John Steward, in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, who was afterwards Vicar of St. Mary's church.

(d) Great part of this building was standing at the latter end of K. Edward VI.'s reign; there was in it a Brotherhood of St. Catherine, consisting of both Brothers and Sisters, which was benefitted by the will of John Wynchelsey, of Sandwich.

belonging to the Corporation of Sandwich; of 27 acres of arable on Boatman's bill; of 2 acres of arable adjoining to Blackfield; and of 2 acres of pasture, called the Harp, without Woodnefborough gate (g).

Besides the ordinary small tythes, the Vicar of this parish, as well as the incumbents of the two other parishes in Sandwich, collect from every house a certain sum, under the denomination of dues; this payment is said to be a composition for all the houses, gardens, barns, and stables, according to custom, since the 12th year of Q. Elizabeth; and the Vicar of St. Mary's receives besides, 6s. 8d. annually, under the denomination of tythe of the old Crane (b).

ST. PETER'S CHURCH.

St. Peter's church stands nearly in the centre of the town; it consisted formerly of three isles, and in that state was next in size to St. Clement's, which was the largest church in Sandwich; the steeple fell down on Sunday Oct. 13, 1661, and demolished the south isle (s), which has never been rebuilt (t). This church, as well as the other two, seems to have been formerly constructed entirely, or at least cased externally, with the stone of Normandy, well squared, and neatly put together. The east end of the chancel is a good specimen of the old work, and there are detached portions of the same sort of masonry in other parts of the building.

The present structure, which is evidently the refigned the same, on being presented to the rectory of Murston.

(r) And perpetual Curate of Goodnestone in Bridge Deanry. There is mention made in the register, of Mr. John Terrey, Minister in 1622; Mr. Caleb Jacob, Minister, buried in 1627; Mr. Sam. Pritchard, Minister, buried 1647, and of Mr. Dicus, Minister of this parish, buried at Elsted in Essex in 1649.

(s) There had been two sermons preached in it that day; it fell down about a quarter after eleven at night; had it fallen in the day time, the greatest part of the town and parish would probably have been killed and buried under the rubbish, but no one was hurt and few heard of it. The rubbish was 3 fathom deep in the middle of the church and the bells underneath it.

(t) In 1641 it was certified to the Lord Keeper by the Mayor, &c. that the steeple of St. Peter's church was in a very ruinous condition; that it was a principal sea mark, and that it was beyond the parishioners abilities to rebuild it; the estimate of the expence being 1500*l.* In 1682 the corporation contributed 30*l.* towards the repair of the church.

The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

work of different times, is composed of fragments of the older fabric, mixed with Kentish rag and sand stone, and flints from the shore. The south isle is said to have been built by sir John Grove, about the year 1447, and sir Simon de Sandwich, Warden of the Cinque Ports in K. Edward II.'s reign, both having given liberally towards the new building of the steeple.

(u) They cost 43ol. 12s. 6d. which expence was in great measure defrayed by the metal of the former 6 old bells.

(v) In this church there are the following monuments and inscriptions, among others too numerous to mention.— In the south isle, now in ruins, are the remains of a handsome tomb under an arch in the wall, in which was interred the body of sir John Grove, who flourished in K. Henry VI.'s reign, on which were his arms, now obliterated, viz. 3 leaves in bend, on a canton 3 crescents. There has been another arched monument in this wall, but all the ornamental parts are gone. In the north isle are several gravestones with memorials for the Jenkinsons, for Jeffreys, for the Oliviers, one for Lieut. Richard Woodruff, obiit 1765, et. 22; Lieut. John Woodruff, obiit 1767, et. 32.— On a large stone, coffin shaped, is a cross resting on a small dog or lion, and round the verge of the stone in gothic square characters cut in the stone . . . us: ke: parici . . . set: pur le alm. . . Adam: Stennar: pri . . . le: cors: pery: ici . . . (Vous ke par ici passet pur le alme Adam Stennar priet; le cors pery ici . . .) These letters were no doubt originally filled up with metal. Part of another stone, with similar characters on it, lies in the same space a little to the westward. On a brass plate in black letter is an inscription for Thomas Gilbert, gent. Searcher, of Kent, who married Katharine, daughter of Robert Fylmer, of East Sutton, in Kent, and had six sons and three daughters, of whom were living at his death, Thomas, Anne, Joane, Elizabeth. He died in 1597, et. 37. And on the same stone, John Probert, gent. obiit 1726, et. 53. Arms of Gilbert—Gules, a saltier or, on a chief ermine, 3 piles gules. In the nave are memorials for the Hunts, Jekens, Kelleys, Greenwoods, Lances, Robinsons, Fishers, Spencers, Kitcheral, Haffords and Bentley. In this chancel, round the verge of a stone, is this inscription, Barnalie Van Lent brewer and free denison borne in . . . leslande buried 15 Raze, 1584, aged 47—On a gravestone for Mr. Henry Furnese, obiit 1672, et. 43; Anne his wife, obiit 1696, et. 63. (They were the parents of sir Henry Furnese, bart.) Mr. John Blanch, merchant, obiit 1718, et. 63. Elizabeth his wife, daughter of the above Henry and Anne Furnese, obiit 1737, et. 70. A memorial for Mary first wife of Mr. John Solly, mercer, eldest sister of sir Henry Furnese, bart. obiit 1685; Martha, the 2d wife, daughter of Mr. Isaac Legay of county Suffex, gent. obiit 1716, and had eight sons and one daughter; Mr. John Solly, obiit 1747, et. 87. A memorial for Susanna Verrier, relief of Benjamin Verrier, gent. obiit 1754, et. 68, and for Amelia Milner, obiit 1776, et. 30.—Within the altar rails are memorials for many of the family of Verrier of this town. On a marble monument against the north wall of the church an inscription for the Oliviers. Opposite the above, on a mural monument with an inscription for Henry Wise, esq; obiit 1769, et. 62; Elizabeth his daughter, wife of Mr. William Boys, obiit 1761, et. 23; Mary his wife, obiit 1772, et. 62—Arms—Wife, sable, 3 chevrons sable.—An oval tablet of marble for Elizabeth, wife of John Rolfe, jun. gent. of New Romney, obiit 1780, et. 20; Elizabeth daughter of John Harvey, esq; and Judith his wife, obiit

The present steeple is a square tower, built with the old materials to the height of the roof of the church, and from thence to the battlements with bricks of the haven-mud. There are eight small, but musical bells, cast in 1779 (u), and a clock, which is the property of the corporation, who keep it in repair (v).

1778, et. 6. A marble mural monument against the south wall, near the door of the nave, for the Jekens and Youngs. A marble tablet underneath for Susannah Wyborn, formerly wife of the above named Mr. Thomas Young, but late of Mr. William Wyborn, brewer, of this town, obiit 1755, et. 76. On a stone affixed to the south wall of the nave, near the bottom of the wall, an inscription for Mr. Benjamin Fisher, obiit 1775; Katharine his wife, obiit 1779, et. 71. Against the inside of the north east pillar of the steeple on wood, an inscription for Robert Cock, obiit 1769, et. 74; he was taken by Vane the pirate in 1718, and was afterwards master of several vessels belonging to this town. On a marble tablet against the north wall of the nave, an inscription for the Jekens.

The gallery at the west end of the north isle was built by subscription, and is secured to the subscribers by a faculty.

There are stones in the church pointing out the licenced vaults of John Brown; the Jeken family; Mr. Richard Solly; William Henry Solly, esq; and Mr. Solomon Ferrier; next to the vault of Mr. Richard Solly is that of the Thurbarne family, a hatchment over it has 3 coats of arms, viz. Thurbarne, sable, a griffin passant, argent, impaling Cutts, Argent, a bend ingrailed sable. Thurbarne impaling Forster, gules, a fess between 3 arrows argent—and Thurbarne impaling, gules, a fess between 6 martlets, argent. In the south east angle of the north isle is a vault, now belonging to the heirs of Mr. Solomon Ferrier, but built originally for the family of Mennes, whose atchievment, helm, and crest are suspended over the place. The arms are—Gules, a chevron vair or and azure, between 3 leopards faces of the 2d In an escutcheon of pretence quarterly, 1st and 4th, the royal arms of Scotland, debriused with a baton, sable; 2d and 3d, a ship with sails furled within a double tressure, flory counterflory. In the wall of the north isle are three arches, under the easternmost, between the second and third windows, on an altar tomb are the mutilated figures of a man and woman lying at length in the dresses of the time, their heads supported by double pillows, a lion at his feet, a dog at hers; in the front of the tomb are narrow gothic arches. The tomb projects into the church-yard; the second arch is behind the pulpit; the tomb was exposed to view in digging a vault in 1770; its front is divided into 6 compartments, in each of the four middle ones is a shield, the first of which has three wheat faus, a crescent in the centre; the second a fess fustilly between 3 griffins heads; the third has 3 lions rampant, and the fourth is void; over this monument in stones in the wall, are two coats of arms, that on the right hand being fretty, a chief; and the other the ports arms, 3 demi lions, impaling 3 demi ships. Under the westernmost arch, which does not penetrate through the wall, is an handsome altar tomb of Caen stone, in the front of which are six small shields; there were arms in all of them, but the bearings and colours are nearly effaced, but it may be seen there were on the first 2 coats, baron and femme; on the 2d, gules, a fess between 3 . . . over ail a chevron voided; on the fourth a fess seemingly between 3 mullets, and on the 5th a chevron.

Dr. Harris says, in the north isle of this church were buried

The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

There is mention made in the wills of the Prerogative Office in Canterbury, of the image of St. Michael, and of St. Mary of Pity; of an altar of the blessed Virgin, and another of the Holy Trinity; of the fraternities of Corpus Christi; of St. John of Bridlington; of the Holy Cross of St. Peter, and of the Holy Trinity. In 1564, it was ordered by the Mayor, Jurats, &c. that the church of St. Peter should be appropriated to the use of the Flemmings, on account of the plague; that they might be all at one place.

The church-yard, which was much too small, has been considerably enlarged in 1776, and was consecrated by Archbishop Moore, at his primary visitation on July 9, 1786.

The church of St. Peter is a rectory, and was antiently of the alternate patronage of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine in Canterbury, and of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of Sandwich; but this was not without continual dispute made by the former, of the latter's right to it. At length this controversy was finally settled in the year 1227, anno 11th Henry II, when they mutually acknowledged each others right in future to the alternate presentation to it (w). After which, the Abbat and Convent continued in the possession of their interest in the patronage of this church, till the dissolution of their monastery in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when it came into the hands of the crown, where their alternate turn of presentation to this rectory has ever since continued, the King being at this time entitled to it. The other alternate right of presentation has continued in the buried Thomas Ellis, of Sandwich, esq; and Margaret his wife; sr Simon Sandwich, warden of the cinque ports temp. Edward. II. who was a great benefactor to the building of the steeple of this church. The Sandwich MS. quoted by Mr. Boys, says, that the former of these lies buried here, under a most antient monument, and that John Iwe, esq; a worshipful merchant likewise, and Maud his wife, lie buried under an arched sepulchre in the wall; and that here likewise were buried divers of the worshipful men of the Sandwich's knights. Through the wall that divides the chancel from the north isle has been an arched door opening obliquely into the chancel, but now closed up; and another in the opposite wall, running in a slanting direction from an inclosed chapel at the upper end of the south isle, between which and the small house appointed for the chaplains of Ellis's chantry, was a door of communication, which, as well as the arch, is still visible; but they are now shut up with masonry. This probably was the chapel, where these chantry priests performed divine offices. The south wall of the nave at the west end appears not to have suffered much from the fall of the steeple; the outlines of the three arches and their pillars are all visible, on the outside of the wall, and the openings above; similar openings appear in the wall, separating the nave from the north isle.

There are inscriptions on boards of the benefactions to the parish by sr Henry Furnese and Mr. Jarvis. The figure of sr John Grove has lately been removed by Mr.

Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of Sandwich, who are at present entitled to it (x).

It is valued in the King's Books at 8l. In 1640, here were communicants 825, and it was valued at 80l. It is now a discharged living, of about the clear yearly value of 50l. It pays five shillings to the Archdeacon for procurations, and 3s. 4d. to the Archbishop at his ordinary visitations.

The revenues of this rectory arise from dues, collected in like manner as in the other parishes in this town, from the houses in this parish, and from the tythe of land belonging to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, called Cowleez, containing about ten acres.

In 1776, there were in this parish 228 houses, and 958 inhabitants.

The oldest register begins in 1538, and ends in 1615; the one in use begins from that period.

in it; it is a large handsome structure, consisting of a nave and two isles; the steeple stands in the centre of the church, and is by far the oldest part of the fabric. It is square, and ornamented on each side with three ranges of pillars and circular arches; the lowest range has only six, the next seven, and the uppermost nine arches. It had formerly a spire and battlements, which were taken down between the years 1670 and 1673; it is built of Normandy stone; the other parts of the church are formed principally of bolders, (that is, flints worn away by friction on the shore,) mixed with sandstone, and some Caen stone, probably from the ruins of the original building. There is a high chancel, and two side ones at the east end. Here were stalls, fitted with seats, for some religious fraternity; and in this church were the chapels of St. James, St. Margaret the Virgin, and St. Thomas the Martyr, the chancel of St. George (n), and Green's chantry. The nave is separated from the isles by light airy pillars and pointed arches. The ceiling is of oak, in pannels between arched beams centered with angels holding shields, with ornaments of roses and foliage. The font is an antient octagonal basin, and shaft of stone; the eight sides are charged with shields and roses alternately. On the shields are; 1, the arms of France, 3 fleurs de lis quarterly, with those of England; 2, a merchant's mark; 3, the arms of the Cinque Ports; 4, the arms of Ellis. Above these squares, at the eight angles of the moulding, are grotesque faces, except at the dexter side of the first shield, where the ornament is a bird like a heron; and on the sinister side is a coronet with balls between spires, terminated with fleurs de lis. The first shield is suspended from the head of a human figure, with two long extended feathers, in the place of its arms and shoulders; the second hangs from a cask; the third from the flocks of an anchor; and the fourth from a hook; the whole of it is besides much decorated, and ornamented with different devices, leaves, flowers, fruits, satyrs faces, &c. There are five bells, not very tune-able, and consequently of little use, but to hasten the downfall of this venerable steeple in which they hang. They were cast in 1672 (o).

The church of St. Clement is a vicarage, the patronage of which has ever been part of the possessions of the Archdeacon of Canterbury, to whom the appropriation of the church likewise formerly belonged; it certainly did so in the reign of K. Edward III, when it was valued at eight marks per annum (p); after which, in the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, on a taxation of the spiritualities and temporalities ecclesiastic in this diocese, the church of St. Clement in Sandwich, appropriated to the Archdeacon, was valued at 106s. 8d.

The principal income of this vicarage formerly arose from the tythe of fish brought into the haven, and from the resort of fishermen and sailors to the town; but this resource diminishing in value, by the gradual decay of the haven, to increase the maintenance of the Vicar, Archbishop Parker, in conjunction with Archdeacon Gbeast, in the year 1570, augmented

In the north isle, for Broughton, the Elgars, and Kites. On a painted board against the north wall; an inscription for William Wyborne, gent. obiit 1764, æt. 86; William his son, obiit 1751, æt. 35; and for the Bradlys. In the chancel, on the south side of the altar, is a mural monument of marble, with the effigies of a woman kneeling at a desk, with hands joined and uplifted, in a praying posture, with an inscription for Frances Rampson, widow, who married afterwards fr Edward Rede, knight, obiit 1611; arms obliterated. At the south side of the east window, on an oval mural tablet of white marble, is an inscription for William Bunce, L.L.B. vicar of St. Clement's and rector of St. Peter's, in Sandwich, obiit 1766, æt. 53; Martha his widow, daughter of Stephen Odiarne, of Norbiarn, in county Suffex, gent. obiit 1783, æt. 68; arms—Bunce, azure, on a fess, between 3 loars passant argent, 3 eagles displayed sable, impaling Odiarne, sable, a chevron, between 3 covered cups, or. On gravestones, inscriptions for the Odiarnes, and Halsnod. In a steaned grave, "Under this stone are deposited the remains of William Bunce, cl. and Martha his wife." A memorial for John Martin, A.B. vicar of this church, who had 3 daughters, Elizabeth, Mary and Amicia, who lye buried by him. this vicarage with the tythes of hay and corn, before belonging to the appropriate parsonage of this church, reserving to the Archdeacon, in lieu of them, a yearly pension of 40s. (q); but this does not seem to have been so firmly made, as not to be subject to be disputed by the succeeding Archdeacon and his lessee, which occasioned a fresh agreement to be entered into between Archbishop Whitgift, Archdeacon Redman, and fr Roger Manwood, the Archdeacon's lessee, without whose consent, the former agreement seems to have been made; by which the Vicar and his successors had again settled on them these tenths of corn and hay within this parish, which then belonged to the Archdeacon, and had been leased out by him to the above-mentioned fr Roger Manwood; which tythes were now again, by this fresh agreement, granted in lease to the Vicar and his successors at the yearly rent of 7l. 6s. 8d. by way of recompence for the abatement in the fines paid at the renewals of the former leases.

In the choir, a gravestone for Valentine Norwood, gent. obiit 1690, æt. 51.—Between the choir and the south isle, for John Nelson, clerk of this parish for 52 years, obiit 1728. In the front of the gallery, in the south isle, painted on a board, are the arms of Oxenden and Burbett, and an inscription, shewing that fr George Oxenden, bart. and Josiah Burbett, esq; representatives in parliament of this town and port, gave the altar-piece and this gallery for the use of the church, in 1723.

Over the south door is painted on board, a memorial for Mr. Peter Jarvis, a native of this town, who lived and died a merchant at Legborn, and gave by will, all his estate at Marshborough, and elsewhere, to the poor of this town for ever.

Many antient stones, deprived of their ornaments of brass, are scattered over the pavement of this church. In it were buried John Lynch, in 1487, and Nicholas Burton, merchant, of Sandwich, in 1493; but there are no memorials of either of them remaining. The burial ground of this parish is unusually large, and, including the scite of the church, contains within a very trifle, an acre and three quarters of ground. The Dutch residents, in the last century, were allowed to perform divine service in this church, upon the payment of 40 shillings a year, and afterwards upon bearing a third part of all expences of repair.

The mayor of Sandwich was formerly chosen in this church, and continued so, till K. Charles II. in 1683, by letter under his sign manual, commanded the election in future to be held elsewhere.

(p) Kilb. Survey, p. 237.

(q) This pension of 40s. to the Archdeacon, was existing in K. Henry VIII.'s time, as appears by the valuation of it in the king's books; therefore the vicar seems to have been in possession of these tythes at that time; supposing the pension of 40s. mentioned above, to be paid to the Archdeacon or his lessee, as a rent for them.

The TOWN and PORT of SANDWICH.

Canterbury, is a return made of the state of this vicarage in 1615, by Peter Simon, vicar, the churchwardens, &c. viz. that the parsonage and vicarage had no glebe land, more than a little garden, together with the backside and stable adjoining thereto, belonging to the vicarage house, which paid three shillings yearly to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

That the tythe of wheat and barley, with other small tythe whatsoever, was as follows, viz. the Vicar by composition had from the Parson, tythe of wheat, barley, peas, beans, &c. and of his own endowment, hay, pasturage, wool, lambs; tythe of the Dutchmen's gardens, of all manner of herbs, roots, cabbages, and such like, for which, at his pleasure, the farmers of the grounds compounded with him; and in the town, the Vicar had composition for all the houses, gardens, barns, and stables, in this parish, according to custom, ever since the 12th year of Q. Elizabeth.

This vicarage is valued in the King's books at 13l. 16s. 10½d. and the yearly tenths at 1l. 7s. 8½d. (r) In 1588 here were communicants 468, and it was valued at 70l. In 1640 it was valued at 120l. and here were the same number of communicants. It is now of the clear yearly certified value of 77l. 10s. 4d. (s)

Besides the ordinary tythes, the Vicar of this church, as well as the incumbents of the other churches in this town, collects from every house within the parish, a certain sum, under the denomination of dues, which payment is said to be a composition for all the houses, gardens, barns, and stables, according to the custom established ever since the 12th year of Q. Elizabeth.

The lands within this parish amount to 433 acres, which are rated at the annual value of 461l. and the houses and buildings within it, at 721l.

In the year 1776, there were in it 166 houses and 634 inhabitants.

It appears that some part of the land at Stonar, was formerly bounded and taken into this parish.

(t) He was likewise rector of St. Peter's, in this town; and on December 22, 1580, he had a second induction to this vicarage, in which year he was presented to the rectory of Elmstone, and resigned the rectory of St. Peter's.

CHANTRIES and other RELIGIOUS FOUNDATIONS.

IN ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

THE oldest chantry in this town, of which there is any notice remaining, was founded about the beginning of the 14th century, in St. Mary's church, by John Condy and William his son (c); but it is not found to what Saint it was dedicated. The Priest of it was to celebrate daily mass every morning for the souls of the founders, their ancestors and successors; and the patronage of it was given by the founders to the Mayor and Commonalty of Sandwich. This chantry was suppressed, among others of the like sort, by the acts of the 32d of K. Henry VIII, and the 2d of K. Edward VI, and the revenues of it given to the King and his heirs (d).

BARTON'S CHANTRY

was founded in some chapel, in or near David's gate; it was suppressed in the second year of K. Edward VI, when a commission was granted for the sale of the chantry, as well as its revenues (e).

The three Incumbents of this chantry, John Hall, John Steward, and William Lotte, were surviving in 1553, and had each of them a pension of 6l. (f)

IN ST. CLEMENT'S CHURCH.

GREEN'S CHANTRY.

Jenkyn Green founded a chantry in this church and endowed it with lands (g). It was suppressed by the Act of the 2d of K. Edward VI, and the revenues of it were sold to the King's use. Thomas Clerc was Chantry Priest here in 1433.

John Watson, and Roger Powell, priests of it at the time of its suppression, were allowed pensions, one of 6l. and the other of 5l. per annum (h).

(c) The name of John Condy is among the witnesses to two deeds of St. John's Hospital, in 1293 and 1296. John Cundy was mayor in 1327, and bailiff in 1349. William Condy is a witness to other deeds in 1311, and so on till 1366. William Condie, merchant, and Margaret his wife, were buried in the south aisle of St. Mary's church, near to the Lord Clinton.

(d) There was a tenement belonging to this chantry, in or near St. Mary's Lane, and there were lands belonging to it somewhere by Barnsend.

(e) Mention is made in some deeds, of a tenement near Davy's gate, belonging to the priest of this chantry, and of a garden belonging to the chantry.

(f) Willis's Mitred Abbies, vol. ii, p. 104.

(g) Concerning four acres of this land, in Sandown, there was a dispute between St. Bartholomew's Hospital and the king's tenant of them, anno 4 Edward VI.

(h) The fees of this chantry were the same as were appointed for St. Thomas's Hospital, and both charities were dedicated to the same martyr patron. It is re-

THE CHANTRY OF ST. THOMAS, usually called ELLIS'S CHANTRY, was the principal establishment of this kind in Sandwich, being dedicated to St. Thomas the Martyr, and founded in this church by Thomas Elys, or Ellis, a wealthy merchant of this town, who enfeoffed Thomas Rollyng, Vicar of St. Mary's, and others (i), in two messuages, and 216 acres of land, and rent to the amount of 4l. in Eastry, Woodnesborough, Worth, Hinxbill, and Wynclenberg, for the endowment of it; and in 1392, upon payment of 60l. by the feoffees, the King granted to them a licence of mortmain, to assign these estates to three Priests, or Chaplains, to celebrate mass daily in this church, for the souls of the said Thomas Ellis, his parents, ancestors and benefactors, and to hold these premises to them and their successors for ever; accordingly the feoffees conveyed the estates, that same year, to the three chaplains, William Colyer, John Nelot, and Roger Segar, who were to fill up the vacancies within three months after they should happen; upon neglect of which, the patronage was to be vested in the Mayor and Jurats of Sandwich; and on their failure for another month, then in the Abbat of St. Augustine; and on his failure for another month, in the Archdeacon of Canterbury (k).

This foundation was confirmed by a bull of Pope Boniface IX, dated at Rome, anno 1404.

One of the Priests of this chantry was bound to instruct the youth of Sandwich to read, and the place where he taught, was called St. Peter's School (l); the want of such a school in this town, after this fell to the ground on the suppression of the chantry, was so severely felt, there being none other, that it induced the principal inhabitants to endeavour to set forward another school of the like sort, which, by the care and liberality, chiefly of sir Roger Manwood, they markable that these two capital endowments, of Thomas Ellis, were made in the course of five months.

(i) Willis's Mitred Abbies, vol. ii, p. 104.

(k) Kilb. Surv. p. 239.

(l) The priests were to have a house for their residence; they were to hold no other benefice, nor exercise any office by which their duty might be interrupted. They were under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and were bound to residence in the same, as perpetual vicars on their curacy. On Sundays and festivals, they were to attend divine service, during the chants and singing of the psalms, and to say their own masses at seasonable times, so as not to interfere with the duty of the minister in the parish church. They were to have a new suit of vestments every other year at least; and were to find five wax tapers, of five pounds weight, for the altar of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in St. Peter's church; to be lighted only during the chant of Salve Regina; and to be renewed every year, before the feast of the purification; to the performance of which, they were bound by oath. This chantry was suppressed by the act of the 2d year of K. Edward VI, and with the revenues of it, was surrendered into the King's hands, for the use of him and his heirs for ever.

There was a house of lepers in Sandwich, called the Maldry, as appears by several wills in the Prerogative office, Canterbury; and there is a small piece of land on the north side of the cause-way leading to Each-end, now called the Maldry, probably part of the estate belonging to this house.

The priory of Boxley, in this county, had sundry houses, &c. and a garden at Motsole, in Sandwich, which came into the King's hands at the dissolution of the priory in K. Henry VIII.'s reign, and were afterwards granted by him, in his 36th year, to John Master, of Langdon, esq; (m)

The ISLAND of THANET.

THE ISLAND of Thanet is situated at the north-east part of the county of Kent, being separated from the rest of it by the river Stour on the southern, and by the water called the Netbergong, on the western side of it.

It is said by most writers to be the same as was called by the Britons, Inis Ruim (n), or Ruocim; that is, the Island of Richborough; though Richborough itself, having antiently been an island, may reasonably be supposed to have been rather so called. Julius Solinus is the first of the Roman writers, who mentions it by the name of Athanaon and Thanaton (o). The Saxons afterwards called it Tenesb, and Tenetlonde (p), which name it still bears, though by change of language and length of time, it has been softened to that of Thanet, as it is called at present.

The water, which antiently separated this island from the county, was a large estuary on the south and west part of it, which ran up the country as far as Chatham and Ashford, and had its two openings, or mouths, to the sea; the one at the north mouth, or Genlade (q), betwixt Reculver and this island, and the other by Ebbsfleet in the eastern part of it. This estuary, beyond the bounds of this island, seems to have stopped before the time of the Romans, and the river Stour to have been the only water left in the valleys, through which it flowed; and even between this island and the county, and when

(o) So called from the death of snakes, when brought into it; no such having ever been able to live in it.

(p) A name, supposed by some, to be taken from the British word Tan, i. e. fire; from whence the Saxons very probably took their word Tene, and called this island Tenet, on account of the several beacons, or fires, lighted on the high lands of it, to give notice of the approach of the Danes, and other pirates; to whose ravages it was, from its situation, very much exposed; but Lambard, in his Peramb. p. 94, conjectures that it was named from the Saxon or old English word Thanet; which signifies moist or watry; a name well suited to its situation, surrounded by the watry element.

(q) This name of Genlade was afterwards, by corruption of language, sounded Yenlade, and then again, Yezlet or Inlet.

The ISLAND of THANET.

Solinus wrote, it seems to have decreased, for he says, it was separated from it æstuario tenui, by a narrow estuary (r).

But notwithstanding this, so long as the sea continued flowing at the Genlade, at the north mouth on the east of Reculver, there was still a considerable force of water, which being increased by the river Stour, ran down towards Ebbsfleet and Sandwich, in a rapid stream, and served to scour and cleanse the channel, particularly the mouth of it, of those sands which were then beginning to gather in it.

At that time, instead of sailing round the North Foreland, as at present, the ordinary passage from the Continent of France to London was through this estuary, on the south or inner side of this island, and back again through the same, the two openings bearing the plural name of Portus Rutupinæ, and likewise Rutupiæ. Thus we find, according to Ammianus Marcellinus, the continuator of Tacitus (s), that Lupicinus, a Roman commander, being dispatched into Britain, to repulse the inroads of the Scots and Picts, sailed from Bologne in France to the Rutupiæ, and from thence to London, taking his course, as it should seem, by the above passage on the inner side of this island, as the shortest, and then usual course to the mouth of the Tbames. After which, this water continuing to decrease it acquired from thence the name of the River Wantsume, in Latin, Vantsumus, by which name Venerable Bede calls it, in his Ecclesiastical History, where he says, it divides this island from the continent, being about three furlongs, or a quarter of a mile broad, and passable over only at two places, both its heads extending into the sea (t).

In the year 1052, Earl Harold's fleet having plundered the eastern coast of Kent, sailed along the Wantsume round this island, and went out at the Genlade, or north mouth, towards London;

(r) Cap. 35. (s) Lib. xx, cap. 1.

(t) Lib. i, cap. 25. There is an antient map of this island, engraved in Dugdale's Monasticon, in Battely's Antiq. Rutupinæ, and in Lewis's Hist. of Thanet, copied from one which once belonged to the Abbey of St. Augustine, and now in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge. It represents the island with the several churches, monasteries, beacons, the curfus Cervi, or St. Mildred's Lynch, with many other curious particulars then existing in it. The island is surrounded by the water, across which at Sarre, is the figure of a ferry boat, with a man rowing over in it a woman religious, with her head dress up, from Sarre, and a man with a cross on his sleeve, supporting himself with a staff, wading through the water up to his knees, and carrying a monk on his back from the opposite land to the boat.

In Battely's Antiq. Rutupinæ there are several maps and plans of this island, and of the state of the water on the interior side of it, from its most antient state almost to the present time, well worth the attention of the curious.

(u) John Twine, who lived at the latter end of K. Henry VIII. and in Q. Elizabeth's reign, assures us, in his and the Saxon Chronicle relates, that Earl Godwin, out of revenge for his being outlawed, ravaged the English coast, and plundered the sea towns, among which was Sandwich; sailing forward from thence to the north mouth, and from thence towards London; and even so late as the latter end of the 15th century, the Wantsume continued navigable, not only for lesser boats, but for greater barks and merchant ships, which sailed backward and forward betwixt this island and the continent (u).

During this period, the landholders took advantage of this failure of the waters round this island, and of the salts left by it, which contributed still more to the lessening of the stream and weakening its force, so that about K. Henry VII.'s time, that part of the Wantsume, which ran by Sarre towards the Genlade, or north mouth, and where the Stour intermixed with it, ceased to be a continued stream, and flood gates being erected across it, dispersed itself among the lands for the conveniency of watering the cattle on them, and at other times of sewing the adjoining lands (v). This is now called the Nebergong, over which where the antient ferry was at Sarre, a bridge was soon afterwards built for the conveniency of passengers to and from the island (w).

As to the other part of the Wantsume, which ran eastward, though the innings of the salts by the landholders lessened the force of the tide, and of the Stour's waters mixing with it, which occasioned the sands to increase at the mouth of the harbour by Ebbsfleet, where it was at length entirely choaked up (x), so that a wall was made there, to prevent the sea at high-water overflowing the lands, on which is now the road to Sandwich; yet the remains of the Wantsume, and the stream of the river Stour mixed with it, served still, especially after great rains, to preserve the harbour of Sandwich from entire little tract de Rebus Albionis, that near his time Tenet was of an island made a peninsula; since there were then living eight men of good credit, who said they had seen not only lesser boats, but also greater barks and merchants vessels often sail backward and forward between this island and the continent.

(v) Lewis's Hist. Thanet, p. 9. See a full account of this part of the Wantsume, which flowed northward from Sarre bridge, in the first vol. of this history, p. cxxxii.

(w) Anno 1 Henry VII. an act passed for the inhabitants of the Isle of Thanet to build a bridge at a place called Sarre Ferry.

(x) Ebbsfleet, just at the mouth of the Richborough Port, was a little creek or bay, where vessels used to harbour, and where was the usual landing-place in this island from the ocean. This being so frequented a place, was often made use of both by friends and enemies. Here did Hengist and Horfa land, the commanders of the Saxon troops, sent for by the British Prince Vortigern; and here St. Augustine, with his followers, first landed. Here too, the Danish pirates landed, being tempted by the abbey lately built ruin, and to scour it from those sands which otherwise would have entirely stopped it up (y). This stream is still of sufficient depth for the passage of lighters and barges, between Fordwich and Sandwich, laden with coals, deals, and such like sort of heavy carriage.

THE ISLAND of Thanet is surrounded by the sea on the northern and eastern sides, along which the chalk cliffs extend, from a little westward of Gore-end on the south, round the eastern side to Cliff-end, about a mile and an half south-west beyond Ramsgate (z). It is bounded on the south by the river Stour, and on the west by the water called the Nethergong. It is in shape a long oval, being about nine miles long from east to west, and about five miles broad from north to south. It is divided into the two manors of Minster and Monkton, which are separated by a bank, or lynch, which goes quite across the island, and is commonly called St. Mildred's Lynch, as will be further mentioned below. It is computed to contain nearly 41 square miles, and little less than about 27,000 acres of land, including Stonar (a).

The general face of the country, (excepting the marsh land towards the south,) is high land, exceedingly beautiful; consisting in general of fertile corn lands, intermixed with those sown with saintfoin, clover, and vetches, mostly open and uninclosed, with gentle hill and dale, built at Minstre, in which they supposed there were great riches. See Lewis's Thanet, p. 9.

(y) Dr. Packe, in his explanation to his chorographical chart, describes the progressive state of the waters round the inner parts of this island, thus. He says, the lowlands, or levels, as they were called, of marshland, on the south and west parts of the island of Thanet, contained the inland parts of it from sea to sea; and were in the antient state of the country all sea; and together made up the Portus Sandwichensis, or inland passage, through which the ships sailed to and from London. They entered it on the east, through Sandwich Bay, and went out of it at the Yenlade, or Northmouth, at Reculver. The two seas, he apprehended, were distinct, and kept their tides so from one another; the one flowing from the south, and the other from the north side of the Cantium, or Foreland; and that each met the other at the low point or tongue of the high lands under Sarre, from whence they ebbed back again, each to their own sea. The waters of this noble haven, which were in the narrowest place about one mile and an half, the wider about two, and the widest about four miles over; retired by degrees so far, that in Venerable Bede's time, being reduced to three furlongs width, at the ferry at Sarre, they were then called the Wantsum, or Deficient Water; but since then, the channel of the Wantsum had been quite evacuated, (and it was still to be plainly traced, dry through almost the whole level;) the Nethergong stream on the one hand, which in the antient state of the country entered the portus interior at Chifflet marsh side, had fallen down through the marshes into the north sea, about a mile and an half east of Reculver; and the river Stour on the other, which entered the exterior under Stourmouth, had made its way down into the sea at Sandwich Bay, and these two streams losing their own names, were called the Wantsum, frequently interspersed with small hamlets and cottages, most of which being built, as well as the adjoining walls, with chalk, the general soil of the country, have a very cheerful appearance. The grounds rise from the northern sea shore, up towards the middle part of the island southward, so that the high road across it from Sarre, eastward, towards Margate, and St. Peter's, as well as the many bridle, or horse paths, which are almost without number, across the lands, are most beautifully enriched with continued prospects over the intermediate country and adjoining channel, which being the constant passage towards the mouths of the Medway and Thames, has constantly on it a variety of shipping, which diversify and enrich the scene as far as the eye can compass.

These advantages, with the dryness of the soil, make the island most pleasant and grateful during the greatest part of the year, and very healthy at all times (b); which occasions a resort to it of numbers of persons of distinction, and genteel families from London and other parts of the kingdom, both for health and pleasure; whence there arises a continued resource of wealth, as well as increase of trade and inhabitants to this island, to the great benefit of the landholders, and every other person connected with it.

Yet, notwithstanding what has been already said, the general aspect of the island being ex-which he distinguished from the two rivers that belonged to it, into the Stour Wantsum and the Nethergong Wantsum. Now the distance between these two streams, which was something better than a mile, left the land as yet, a peninsula; but an artificial cut, called the Mile stream, which was made for the benefit of sewing the Nethergong into the Stour, over which was a bridge in the road to Sarre, which went almost straight; sometimes near, sometimes across the dry channel of the Old Wantsum, quite inclosed Thanet; so that the island, which formerly was cut off from us by the entire Portus Sandwichensis, and was then all high lands, was then made so only by the Stour-Wantsum on the south; the Mile-stream on the south-west, and the Nethergong Wantsum on the west; the rest of the island looking to the north and the east seas, as before.

(z) The chalk cliffs on the north and east parts, are in general pretty high; some of these, as from Margate-pier to Pegwell, are more firm and durable. Under these cliffs have been found large pieces of amber, after a rage of the sea, and fall of the cliffs. The other cliffs to the west of Margate, which reach to Westgate Bay, are much lower, and of a more loose and crumbly nature, and fall away in greater quantities after any frost, or rage of the sea. Through these cliffs, the inhabitants have cut several hollow ways, for the conveniency of passing to and from the sea; but they have been frequently forced to fill them up again in time of war, to prevent their being made use of by the enemy, to surprize and plunder the country. Lewis's Thanet, p. 10.

(a) See Boys's General View of Agriculture.

(b) This island is less pleasant, from there being scarce any medium here, between either a stark calm and an outrageous storm; owing to its being so much exposed to the sea, without any trees to shelter it. On the north and posed towards the north and east, and there being so very few hedges and inclosures to shelter it, causes the situation to be very bleak towards the sea, and those few trees, which are growing hereabout, are for the most part scrubby and unthriving, from their being so much subject to the sea winds, which often blow very strong, and at times blast almost every thing in their way.

The soil here has always been remarkable for its fruitfulness.—Felix tellus Tanet sua fecunditate, says the Monkish Historian (c); and modern writers speak of it in equal terms of praise.

It is, as to the uplands in general, a chalky light soil (d), though there are a very few parts in it a stiff clay; but by the excellent husbandry of the landholders, who are noted for it to a proverb in these parts, the crops of corn are abundantly large, and Thanet wheat and barley, for its cleanliness and weight, fetch a superior price at market of all others. Canary-seed is likewise produced on the lands here in great quantities, as well as the seeds of radish, spinach, mustard, cabbage, and other esculent plants, which are sent from hence for the supply of the London markets; in short, the high state of cultivation throughout the island gives an idea rather of the delicate work of a gardener, than the effect of the more enlarged industry of the husbandman. The farms throughout the island are mostly large and considerable, and the farmers wealthy, inasmuch that they are usually denominated gentlemen farmers on that account, as well as from their hospitable and substantial mode of living.

Mr. Boys, in his general view of the agriculture of this county, drawn up for the use of the Board of Agriculture last year, gives the following account of this Island.

Much of it, he says, is naturally very thin light land; but the greater part of it having belonged to the religious, who were the wealthiest and most intelligent people, and the best farmers of the time, no cost or pains were spared to improve the soil; the sea furnished an inexhaustible supply of manure, which was brought up by the tides to all the borders of the upland, quite round the island, and most probably was liberally and judiciously applied by the east sides of the island, next the sea, where the shore is clean, no marshes near, and the water in general good, the inhabitants are mostly healthy and long lived; but in the lower part of it, to the south and west, near the marshes, it is not near so healthy; the inhabitants, from the lowness of the situation and the badness of the water, being much subject to intermittent fevers and agues.

(c) An antient chronicle goes still further in its praise, styling it, Insula arridens, bona verum copia, regni flos et Thalimus, amenitate, gratia, in qua tanquam quodam elyso &c. and another antient MS. of the same author, thus praises it.—Habet Cantia insulam prægrandam et celeberrimam

Monks and their tenants; and their successors to the present time have not neglected to profit by their example. Owing to these circumstances, Thanet always was, and most likely always will be famous for its fertility; and the Monkish tale of Thanet's deriving its superior fruitfulness from its having been the asylum of St. Augustine, is not so far from the truth, at it may at first appear.

In short, there is not perhaps another district in Great Britain, or in the world, of the same extent, in such a perfect state of cultivation; where the farmers are so wealthy and intelligent; where land, naturally of so inferior a quality, is let for so much money, and produces such abundant crops?

The whole island contains about 3500 acres of excellent marsh land, and 23,000 acres of arable; all the lower part of the latter, bordering upon the marshes and some parts of the hill, where there is a good depth of earth, are exceedingly productive; and the principal part of the remainder, although naturally a poor thin light mould, on a chalky bottom, is made exceedingly fertile by the excellence of the system under which it is cultivated.

As to the soil; the bottom soil of the whole island, or what modern writers in husbandry call the subsoil, is a dry, hard, rock chalk. The tops of the ridges are about 60 feet above the level of the sea and are covered with a dry, loose chalky mould, from four to six inches deep, it has a mixture of small flints, and is without manure a very poor soil. The vales between the ridges, and the flat lands on the hills, have a depth of dry loamy soil, from one to three feet, less mixed with chalk, and of a much better quality.

The west end of the island, even on the hills, has a good mould, from one to two feet deep, a little inclining to stiffness; but the deepest and best soil, is that which lies on the south side of the southernmost ridge, running westward from Ramsgate to Monkton; it is there a deep, rich sandy loam, and mostly dry enough to be ploughed flat, without any water furrows. Indeed it is so rich and gentle, that being cultivated and managed with great care, expence and industry, there is seldom occasion to fallow it; so that it is, much of it, what is generally called round-tilth-land, and produces very large crops. The soil of the marshes is a stiff clay, mixed with a sea sand, and small marine shells. There is no commonable land, nor an acre of waste in the island.—Thus far Mr. Boys.

The Alga, or sea weed, which is often cast up by the sea in great quantities under the cliffs, has been made great use of by the inhabitants on the north and east sides of this island, for the making of a manure for their lands; tho' the stench of this weed, when first laid in a heap on the land, is very nauseous indeed (e); and there is another use to which this sea weed is put here; (but it is only such of it as is alive, and actually growing upon the rocks,) which is to burn to make pot-ash for the potters, which they call kelp (f); but the smoke arising from the process of it, is very offensive to some distance, as the wind happens to waft it (g).

The lands on the southernmost side of the island are defended by those above them, from the strong north and east winds, which come from the sea; and are very kindly for fruit trees, which thrive and bear well, though there are very few orchards in the island; and hops have been tried in it, but without success.

It should seem by the names of places still in use, that there was antiently much more woodland in this island than at present; but whatever there was, almost all of it has been grubbed up and converted into tillage, though several of the little vills in it still preserve the memory of these woods, viz. Westwood, Northwood, Southwood, Colyswood, Wood, or Villawood, corruptly pronounced by the inhabitants Willow wood; which last seems to have been once entirely a wood, excepting a few cottages; besides these, there were Frisket wood, near Hoo; a wood called Bobdale, in St. Nicholas, and Manston wood, a copse of about five acres, which is the only woodland, of all these, now left (b).

Into these woods, it is probable, the inhabitants used to retire, and secure themselves and families, when the Danish pirates infested this island.

(e) The method of getting this sea weed up, is through the sloping passages in the cliff, called gate-ways; when a quantity comes ashore, after a gale of wind, the farmers set all hands to work to get as much as possible, while the tide serves, lest the next tide should carry it away; and if it happens in the night, they work at it then, till stopped by the waters coming on. Some will get up in one tide, two or three hundred cart loads; those who live at a distance, hire small spots of land to lay the fresh weed upon as they get it, and carry it away to the farm at a more convenient opportunity. It sometimes comes ashore in quantities, to the amount of several thousand loads, and perhaps all swept away by the next tide. Boys's View of Agriculture.

(f) Several large holes in the ground, either on the sea beach or the top of the cliffs, are made, in which they

Some shew of this custom seems still remaining at a place called Cbesmunds, (which it is likely, was a part of that large wood about the middle of the island, which still bears that name,) where there is an appearance of entrenchments cast up, in which these distressed people sheltered themselves, this being too small for any army to encamp in. Several caves under ground have been discovered elsewhere, in this island, which were perhaps made likewise by the inhabitants to hide themselves in from the enemy. The timber growing in this island is in general elm, which in the lower part of it, about Minster and Monkton, grows to a good height and size, much more so than that which stands exposed to the sea winds and nearer the chalk. Just by the house of Powcies farm, there was, till lately, a small grove of oaks, the only one in this island; but the unthriving state of them, shewed how unkind both the soil and situation was to them.

Leland, in his Itin. vol. vii, p. 137, describes this Island in K. Henry VIII.'s time as follows:

burn the weed, after having thoroughly dried it for that purpose in the sun, and made it fit for the fire. In burning, it becomes a liquid substance, which is stirred well together in those holes, after which it is suffered to remain covered over with dry weed till it is quite cold, when it becomes a cake, very like in substance and appearance, what is called greaves.

(g) See Lewis, p. 19. Dr. Plot, in his account of a designed journey through England, &c. published in Lel. Itin. vol. ii, p. 169, says, the quercus maritimus, or quercus maritima, grows plentifully in the Iste of Thanet; they burn it to ashes, and then it is called kelp, which put into barrels, is carried over into Holland, with which they glaze all their earthen ware.

After which, the inhabitants appear to have increased considerably, insomuch that when Mr. Lewis published his History of this Island in 1736, it was computed that there were no fewer than 2,200 families or houses in the whole island; which, reckoning four to a family, one with another, would make 8,800 souls. In the parish of St. John and town of Margate, there were computed to be 600 families; which reckoning four to a family, makes the number of souls about 2,400; but they are very much increased indeed since, in the parishes of St. John, St. Peter, and the Ville of Ramsgate (i). By the subsequent account of the several parishes, it will appear that there were formerly many antient seats in this island, inhabited by good families with large estates; but these seats are all, except two, turned into farm houses, and the estates antiently belonging to them, for the most

(k) There are two seasons for the home fishery, which are called by the inhabitants shot fare and herring fare. The first of these is the mackarel season, which is commonly about the beginning of May. The other is the season for part, alienated; so that there are at this time but few gentlemen of estate, and, I believe, only one Justice of the Peace resident in it; which last is no small detriment and inconvenience to the inhabitants of it.

As to the present constant inhabitants, excepting those of the towns and viles of Margate, St. Peter, Broadstairs, and Ramsgate, who mostly depend on the resort of company in the summer season to those places, and the mechanics who constantly reside in them; they are in general those, who occupy farms, who as they are persons of good substance and some gentility, so they live in a very generous and hospitable manner. They who live by the sea side are generally fishermen, or seafaring men, or such as depend on what they call foying, i. e. going off to ships with provisions, and to help them in distress, &c. many of these, especially those who go to the north seas to fish, are such, as Camden calls them, a sort of amphibious creatures, who get their living both by sea and land, as having to do with both elements, being both fishermen and husbandmen, and equally skilled in managing the helm and the plow. According to the season of the year they knit nets, catch cods, herrings, mackarel, &c. go voyages and import merchandizes. The very same persons dung the land, and perform every other sort of husbandry business (k).

As to the north sea fishery, it has formerly been much used by the inhabitants of this island; but the little success they have met with for many years past, has entirely discouraged them from following that employment. The seamen here are generally reputed excellent sailors, and shew themselves very dextrous and bold in going off to succour ships in distress; but they are too apt to pilfer stranded ships, and ruin those who have already suffered so much. This practice they call paultring, and nothing sure can be so base and unfeeling, as under pretence of assisting and of saving for the unfortunate their property, to plunder and convert it to their own use, by making what they call guile shares, (that is, cheating shares) (l).

catching herrings, which begins about the end of harvest, and finishes about November, on this account it is no uncommon thing here for servants to bargain with their masters, especially such as hire small portions of land, to go to herring fare, &c. These fisheries find employment for the poor people on shore, who are greatly employed in spinning, twisting, and knitting the nets. Lewis's Thanet, p. 32, & seq.

The ISLAND of THANET.

TIME has made so great an alteration in this island, that it is very difficult, if not impossible, perhaps for us now to judge of the antient state of it. On the north and east the land has certainly gone much farther into the sea, which has washed away many hundred acres, not to say thousands, as it must have done, if it encroached in proportion for the seven hundred years before, as it has for these last hundred and fifty (m). On the south and west parts of the island, there are some hundred of acres now dry land, which were antiently all under water and a navigable stream, where the sea ebbed and flowed. Omnia Pontus erat. At Hepes-flete, or Ebbs-flete, as it is now called, was a water-mill, and at Stonar another, which both belonged to the Abbat of St. Augustine. Between these places was a place called Henne-brigge, not far from Stonar, on the same side that Cliffe-end is; no remains of which name is now left.

The main road through the island from St. Laurence to Sarre, was antiently called Dun-strete, or the street, or way over the downe. On the road between Minster and Birchington, across the island, were two crosses erected, which in former times were held in great reverence. The larger of these crosses stood where the road called Dun-strete and this way crossed.

The Britons were the antient inhabitants of this island; of these there have been found some memorials in their coin, and amulets both of gold, or electrum, and brass (n); and some of their tools have been likewise found here, in digging wells, &c. of a white flint, shaped and cut in the form of a broad edged chisel. To them succeeded the Romans, several of whose

(m) It is very plain, that formerly the land on the north and east sides of this island, from Westgate to Cliffe-end, went much farther out into the ocean than it does now. The sea having considerably encroached, since the stopping its course round the south and west parts of it. At this time, at low-water, rocks, as the inhabitants call them, or footings of the chalky cliffs, on which antiently was land, are to be seen above half a mile from the present shore or cliffs. See Lewis's Thanet, p. 5.

(n) Mr. Lewis, in his History of Thanet, p. 27, describes two of these, of gold, as being both convex, having the rude figure of a horse on the hollow. The impression on the other side was, as conjectured by some, the representation of a head dress, perhaps such as was worn by the British ladies of distinction. The biggest weighed about seventeen shillings, the least about six shillings; and in the same place he has given an engraving of them.

(o) One of them, says Mr. Lewis, was of the Emperor Constantine. It had, on the face, the head of the Emperor, and the legend Constantinopolis; the reverse, a victory upon or by the prow of a ship. Another was a silver coin of Domitian. About 150 years ago, the servants of a farmer at Minster, striking their plow a greater depth than ordinary into the ground, struck against a pot, which they brought up full of Roman coins, of the lesser and larger silver; these were called by the country people, balapates; coins in brass have been taken up under the cliffs near Bradshaw, after the rage of the sea and falling down of the land (o).

Of the Saxons, who drove out the Britons, after they had been abandoned by the Romans, no coins have been known to have been found here, though they frequently landed, and long remained in this island for some time. In this island the troops of the Saxons, sent for by the harrassed Britons, under the command of Hengist and Horsa, first landed at Hepes-flete, afterwards called Ebbsfleet, the common landing-place in the eastern part of this island, about the year 449; and had soon afterwards, for their services against the Scots and Picts, the antient enemies of the Britons, this island allotted to them for their habitation (p), where next year a new reinforcement of Saxon troops, in seventeen large ships, arrived on the invitation of Hengist; making together with their countrymen already in this island, a very considerable army. Hengist, after various incidents becoming King of Kent, this island continued in the constant possession of the Saxons (q). The consequence of this was, that the Britons, the antient inhabitants, were every where miserably harrassed and oppressed; nay, to shew the absolute conquest of the Saxons, as their language was altogether different from that of the natives, so they left very few places of any fort, which they did not change the names of, to such as were intelligible in their own language, and were given either by reason of their situation, or nature of the place, or after some place of the like sort to it in Germany, the country from which they came (qq). But this was not, by any means, the greatest misfortune to which and many years after, some of these were found after a shower of rain, which were supposed to be dropped by those who first discovered them. Another parcel of these coins was found, not far off from the other place, viz. near where the mill now stands; the others having been taken up near where the mill formerly stood, or what is now called King William's Mount. Of these coins, Mr. Lewis says, he never could recover but one, which was of the lesser silver, with the face of L. Aurelius Verus, on it, with short curling hair and beard, the legend—IMP. L. AVREL. VERVS. AVG; on the reverse, a woman habited in a stole or long robe, with a globe or ball in her right hand, and a cornucopia in her left; the legend—PROV. DEOR. T. P. II. COS. II. Lewis's Thanet, p. 27.

(q) It is supposed by some writers, that Vortimer, the British king, after having worsted the Saxons, both at Darent and Aylesford, in this county, pursued them to this island, where a third battle was fought between them at Wipped's-fleet, or Ebbsfleet, in it; but as it is agreed, that after this third battle, the Britons drove the Saxons into this island, the battle could not be in it; indeed it was fought most probably at Felicstore, as has been already mentioned in the 1st vol. of this history, p. xxviii.

the inhabitants of this island afterwards became subject; from its situation it lay exposed to the continual insults and ravages of those merciless pirates the Danes, as appears by the several histories of those times (r). These plunderers, for they were no better, having in the year 851 landed in Essex, and being beaten from thence, retired into the Isle of Thanet, where they continued during the winter, at the end of which they left it to pursue their designs elsewhere; but in the year 853 they again invaded this island with a considerable force, and being attacked by Earl Althel, with the Kentish men, and Earl Huda, with those of Surry, an obstinate battle was fought, in which the English at first got some advantage; great numbers were killed and drowned on both sides, and the two English Generals at length lost their lives (s).

In the autumn of the year 865, they landed again in this island, where they wintered in order to begin their incursions in the spring. Such frequent depredations not only reduced the inhabitants to the lowest extremity of poverty and misery, but corrupted their manners, and taught them, after the example of their invaders, to follow the same roving life of piracy and robberies; on this account K. Edgar, in 969, ordered this island to be plundered and laid waste, for having robbed several merchant ships, probably as they sailed by this island through the river Wantsum (t). In 980 the Danes again landed here and plundered this island (u); and in 988 they landed again and burnt the abbey or nunnery built by Domneva, at Minster, with the nuns in it, and the clergy and people who had fled there for sanctuary.

About the year 1002, K. Ethelred levied an army, in hopes of giving the Danes battle; but they retired to this island, where it was out of the power of his forces to attack them, and winter coming on, the English left them here and returned to their own homes (v). In the spring of the year 1009, the Danes set sail from their own country in two fleets for England, one of which arrived in East Anglia, under Turkill, and the other in this island, under Heming and Anlaff. These leaders joining their forces in Kent, and having plundered the country, were suffered to pass unmolested with their booty by K. Ethelred's army, in hopes of their embarking for their own country; instead of which they threw themselves into this island, where they wintered and subsisted themselves by the incursions they continually made into the neighbouring parts (w). In the year 1011, Suane, K. of Denmark, destroyed the Island of Thanet, and entirely demolished the monastery of Domneva in it (x); after which, though they no doubt again visited it, yet I do not find any particular mention of their transactions here, in the historians of those times. But in after ages, when the Port and Town of Sandwich became so formidable to the French, that it was held up as the continual object of their revenge, and was frequently attacked and plundered by them; this island was in much danger of being invaded, from its vicinity, as well as the great ease there was of landing on it, which induced Eustace le Moynes, the French Admiral, in K. John's reign, to conduct Lewis, the Dauphin of France, to it; when he, at the instigation of the Pope, and invitation of the discontented Nobility, invaded this realm, having under his command 600 ships and 80 cogges (y); and this induced K. Edward III. to take measures for the security of it; accordingly in his 43d year, anno 1369, he directed his letters patent to John de Cobham and others, reciting, that there were divers parts of the Isle of Thanet, where ships and boats could land; he therefore commanded them to cause such places to be inclosed and fortified with mounds and ditches, to prevent the same, at the charge of those whose lands should be benefitted by it. And in the 46th year of that reign, a writ of much the same nature, was directed to the guardians of the maritime parts of this county (z).

NATURAL HISTORY.

Just by Cliff-end there is a sort of blueish sand, very much resembling fuller's earth, among which are several stratums of shells, such as cockle, culver-shells, &c. great numbers of which are likewise found farther up, on the same level, in digging wells, &c. (a)

Our botanists have taken notice of the following plants, growing in different parts of this island.

- Abies marina Belgica*, Clusus's sea fir (b).
- Anchusa degener facie milii folis*, bastard gramel (c).
- ... Alcibiadon, red alkanet (d).
- ... Lutea, yellow alkanet (e).
- ... Minor, small alkanet (f).

(r) Leland, in his Itinerary, vol. vii, p. 130, says, the Danes in the time of Archbishop Cuthbert, (who came to the see of Canterbury in 742, and died in 759) wasted the Isle of Thanet year after year, and robbed the nuns of Mensere; but Thorne says their first arrival in Thanet was in 753. About Sarre and Margate, common fennel grows naturally, and in great abundance on the road side and in the ditches; and the soil is particularly kind for rosemary, inasmuch that there are hedges of it of a considerable length (z).

A weed begins to infest this island, which is not a little alarming to the farmers in it, as it is of the most prolific kind, and very difficult to be eradicated. It was produced a few years ago among some oats, which were imported in a vessel that was wrecked upon the coast here, and being washed by the tides along the shore, among the sea weeds, were carried away to different lands at the same time. It is of the class tetredynamia, and produces its seeds in a pod, flowering and seeding at the same time throughout the autumn. The inhabitants call it the sink-weed, from its fetid smell. It seems to be either the brassica muralis of Hudson, or a variety from it.

In the year 1630, the business of knighthood was retaken into consideration, and with care and diligence set on foot, being grounded upon an old statute entitled, Statutum de Militibus; and a proclamation was issued forth, dated July 6, that year, to this effect, that whereas the King having formerly sent forth writs to some of the Sheriffs of the several counties, for the summoning all that had 40 pounds, land or rent,

(c) Rushworth's Hist. Col. vol. ii, part i, p. 70. Their compositions and answers were, as appears by a MS. in the Surrenden Library, as follows:

Richard Terry compounded for the respite of knighthood at the rate of 10l. Henry Paramour, esq; 30l. William Fagg, 10l. Henry Johnson, 10l. William Jenkin, 17l. 10s. Edward Fuller made answer, that he had not 20l. per ann. and was indebted as much as his revenue came to, and to appear at the day of his coronation, and prepare themselves to receive the order of knighthood; he did then award a commission to certain lords, and others of his Privy Council, to treat and compound with all those who then made default, as well for their fines and their contempt; as for their respite to take that order upon them; and several commissioners were awarded into the several counties, giving power of compounding. Accordingly, by virtue of one of these commissions, granted to sir Edward Dering and sir Thomas Wilford, barts. Oct. 7, 1631, those of this island were summoned to appear before them, viz. Richard Terry, Edw. Fuller, Wm. Church, Wm. Jenkin, all of Minster; Henry Paramour, esq; of Monkton; Tho. Paramour, of St. Nicholas, gent. William Fagg, and Henry Johnson, of St. Laurence (c). Their several compositions and answers may be seen below.

The following men of note and learning, were natives of this island:

John de Tenet, a monk of the Benedictine monastery of Christ Church in Canterbury an. 1330.

William de Thorn, a monk of St. Augustine's abbey, anno 1380.

Stephen de Birchington, a monk of the monastery of Christ Church, above-mentioned, author of a history of the Archbishops of Canterbury, as far as the year 1369.

Marcellus Daundelyon. Abbat of St. Augustine's monastery in 1426.

Robert Jenkin, born at Minster in 1656, educated at the King's school, at Canterbury, and from thence sent to St. John's college, Cambridge, of which he became fellow; he was afterwards made præcentor of Lincoln cathedral (d), and in 1711 master of St. John's college, and Lady Margaret's Professor of Divinity, which places he held till his death in 1727. He was the author of several religious and other books and tracts.

In the year 1642, Henry Robinson, gent. by his last will, gave a messuage at Upper Gore-end, in Birchington, for the maintenance of two fellows and two scholars, in St. John's college in Cambridge; the said fellows and scholars to be born in the Isle of Thanet, and brought up in Canterbury school; and in default of such, other therefore refused. William Church said, that he had not at the day of the King's coronation 23l. and so refused. Thomas Paramour made answer, that his lands at the day of the King's coronation, were leased for a pepper corn by the year, for the payment of his father's debts, and yet continued incumbered, and therefore refused. These all lived within the jurisdiction of the county, in this island.

scholars born in Kent, and of the said school. By a decree in chancery, dated Nov. 22, 1652, and upon consent of parties, it was ordered, that whereas the said lands were then sunk to 50*l.* per annum, and not able to support the charge of two fellowships, &c. the college should maintain, instead of two fellows and two scholars, four scholars according to the direction of the donor, each of which four scholars should be allowed by the college in commons, 10*l.* a year (e).

TITLES.

This island gives the title of Earl to the family of Tuston, long resident at Hotbfield, in this county, an ample account of which has already been given under the description of that parish, in the third volume of this history, p. 253.

Sir Nicholas Tuston, knt. and bart. the eldest son of sir John Tuston, bart. so created by K. James I, on May 11, 1603, was created by patent, dated Nov. 1, 1626, anno 2 Charles I, Baron Tuston, of Tuston in the co. of Sussex, and afterwards by patent, August 5, 1628, was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Thanet. On his death, June 26, 1632, he was succeeded by sir John Tuston, knt. his eldest son, second Earl of Thanet, who died on May 6, 1664, anno 17 Charles II, on which Nicholas Tuston, his son and heir succeeded as third Earl of Thanet, but dying on Nov. 24, 1679, without issue, his next brother, John Tuston succeeded to his titles, and became fourth Earl of Thanet; he died on April 27, 1680, unmarried, upon which his next brother Richard Tuston succeeded him as fifth Earl of Thanet; he died on March 8, 1684, likewise unmarried, and was succeeded in titles by his next brother Thomas Tuston, the sixth Earl of Thanet, but he dying on July 30, 1729, without male issue, his titles descended to his nephew Sackville Tuston, the eldest surviving son of his brother Sackville Tuston, the fifth son of John, the second Earl, who became the seventh Earl of Thanet, on whose death, on Dec. 4, 1753, he was succeeded by his only surviving son Sackville Tuston, who became the eighth Earl of Thanet, and died in 1786. He married in 1767, Mary, daughter of the late Lord John-Philip Sackville, second son of Lionel, late Duke of Dorset, and sister to the present Duke; by her, who died in 1778, he had issue Elizabeth, born in 1768; Sackville, Lord Tuston, born in 1769; Charles, born in 1770; Caroline, born in 1771;

John, born in 1773, who died in 1786; Henry, born in 1775; William, born in 1777. He was succeeded on his death by his eldest son and heir Sackville, Lord Tuston, who became the ninth Earl of Thanet, being the present Right Honorable Earl of Thanet and Baron Tuston, who is as yet unmarried.

The Earl of Thanet's arms, supporters and crest, are fully described in the account of the parish of Hotbfield, in which his seat is situated, in vol. iii. of this history, p. 253 et seq.

THE HUNDRED of RINGSLOW, called likewise in ancient records, the Hundred of Thanet, claims jurisdiction over such part of this island, as is not within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports.

This hundred was part of the ancient possessions of the Abbey of St. Augustine, but it was given up to K. Edward I, in whose reign it appearing, by inquisition, to be of no value to the crown, that king in his 13th year granted it, with the hundreds of Blengate and Downbamford again to that Abbey, to hold in fee farm, at the annual rent of 100 shillings; which grant was allowed on a quo warranto, in the 7th year of K. Edw. II, before Henry de Stanton and others, Justices Itinerant (f); in which state these hundreds continued, till the dissolution of the abbey in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when they came into the hands of the crown, where they remain at this time (g).

On the aid levied anno 20 Edward III, for making the Black Prince a knight, this hundred answered for five fees and one quarter of a knight's fee.

It contains within its bounds, part of the parish of St. Laurence, the parishes of Minster, Monkton, and Stonar, and part of the parish of St. Nicholas, and all the churches of those parishes. Two Constables have jurisdiction over this hundred (h).

The remainder of this island is within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, containing the corporate town of Margate, including the parish of St. John; Birchington with Goresend, Wood alias Woodchurch, and St. Peter's, all members of, and within the jurisdiction of the port of Dover; the ville of Ramsgate, and the ville of Sarre, now esteemed in the parish of St. Nicholas, both members, and within the jurisdiction of the port of Sandwich.

There were formerly eleven parishes and churches in this island (i); four of the churches are ruined, being those of Stonar, Wood alias Woodchurch,

In all the parishes of this island were butts, formerly cast up and kept in repair, for the practice and exercise of archery, or shooting with the long bow, which was formerly a principal diversion in this island; the remains of these butts still continue in some of the parishes (k).

THE PARISH of ST. NICHOLAS, with THAT OF ST. GILES, SARRE, and ALL SAINTS, annexed.

THE PARISH of St. Nicholas, formerly called St. Nicholas at Wade, from its situation ad Vadum, that is, near the wading-place, or ford (l), across the water called the Wantsume, at, or at least near where the bridge at Sarre now is, lies at the north-west corner of this island.

The manor of Monkton claims paramount over this parish, subordinate to which is situated about half a mile south-west from the church, on the road from thence to Sarre. It seems to have been part of the antient possessions of the see of Canterbury; and in the 10th year of K. Edward III.'s reign, John Stratford, Archbp. of Canterbury, obtained the grant of a market weekly, on a Monday, and a fair on the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, yearly, to be held within this parish (m); after which this manor continued in the see of Canterbury, till it was ex-

Henry VIII.'s reign, as appears by the will of Alice Everard, widow, of this parish, proved anno 1538, by which she desires to be buried in our lady's chancel, in this church, and mentions the leases of her farms called Downeberton, Wardmarsh, and the parsonage of St. Nicholas; her son Valentine Everard, and his daughter Joane; Joane Beer, her daughter; Avice Aucher, her daughter; Roger Beer, her son-in-law; Thomas Denne, of Garenton, her brother; and Thomas Aucher, her son-in-law. Valentine Everard, gent. of this parish, son of John, by his will proved 1562, desired to be buried in the above chapel, with a grave-stone, having the picture of himself and his two wives and his children. Charles I, by his letters patent, Dec. 8, in his 7th year, granted this manor, late parcel of the see of Canterbury, to William Collins and Edward Fenn, to hold in fee, at the yearly rent of 60l. (p) They afterwards conveyed it by sale to Thomas Paramore, of this parish, gent. (q) by whose heirs, it was sold to Daniel Harvey, of Combe in Surry, esq; who possessed it in the middle of K. Charles I.'s reign (r), from one of whose descendants it was carried by sale to Elizabeth Breton, of Enfield, in the co. of Middlesex, esq; who died seised of it, et. 76, in 1785, leaving his widow Elizabeth in the possession of it, since whose decease their eldest son William Breton, [esq; is become entitled to it.

is an estate about a mile north-east from the church, in the road leading to the sea, which was held of the manor of Downe Barton in socage, by fealty and rent. It was formerly the property of John Wigmore, from whom it came to William Bredball, and thence again to John Cleymond, Cl. President of Corpus Christi College in Oxford, who by writing, dated Feb. 3, anno 25 Henry VIII, passed away and assured his right in it to Robert Kempe, to hold in fee; which release was again warranted by him as President, and the scholars of that college jointly afterwards.

Robert Kemp, by his last will in 1548, gave it to William and Thomas, his two younger sons, in tail, who suffered a common recovery, with voucher on which it became vested in the said William and Thomas, in fee, in separate moieties. They joined in the sale of it, anno 9 Elizabeth, to John Fynch, who two years afterwards passed it away by sale to sir Roger Manwood, Chief

Thomas Perye, alderman of Canterbury, was afterwards possessed of a moiety of the lease of Downebarton, which by will proved 1564, he devised to his wife Elizabeth.

BARTLETTS, alias THONETON, is a farm about half a mile westward from Sboart, which was likewise held of the manor of Downe Barton in socage, by fealty and rent. It was antiently the patrimony of the Chiches; and then of the Garlands, from which name it passed by sale to Robert Sea, to whom and to Henry his son it was assured in fee, which latter on his father's death became wholly seised of it; he died without male issue, and his three daughters, Millicent, Elizabeth and Mary, became his coheirs, and intitled to it in coparcenary. Jerom Brett and Millicent above-mentioned, his wife, by indenture, anno 5 Eliz. sold their third part to Wm Norwood, of Nash; as did Arthur Cbute, and Elizabeth above-mentioned, his wife, their third part, two years afterwards. From the Norwoods their property in it was passed by sale, to Thomas Paramor, in the 20th year of Q. The residue, which had come by Mary, the third daughter and coheir of Henry Sea above-mentioned, in marriage to *Edw. UPPER and NETHER HALE.

Margery, wife of John Exeter, was found by inquisition, anno 4 Henry VI, to die seised of lands in this parish, held of the manor of Downe Barton (t). John, son and heir of Henry Crispe, had livery anno 18 Elizabeth, inter alia, of one messuage, called Upball, now known by the names of Upper and Nether Hale, situated about a mile distant from the church eastward, near Birchington, and 200 acres of arable, 100 acres of pasture, and 20 acres of marsh in this parish, Minster and Monkton, which, excepting 30 acres of land, were held in capite (u). He soon afterwards passed away these premises to James Hales, who in the 22d year of that reign conveyed them to William Rowe, citizen and ironmonger, of London (v). The estate of Upper Hales now belongs to the heirs of Mr. Broadley, deceased, late of Dover, surgeon.

ST. NICHOLAS COURT,

situated at the eastern extremity of this parish, about two miles distant from the church, near adjoining to Birchington, consists of two separate estates, one of which was formerly accounted a manor, as appears by an inquisition taken in the 12th year of K. Edward IV, by which the President and Fellows of Queen's College, in the University of Cambridge, were found to be at that time possessed of the manor of St. Nicholas Court in this parish (x), part of whose possessions it remains as this time. The other estate, called St. Nicholas Court Farm, being an estate in fee, has for many years belonged to the Finch family, who are at this time entitled to it, Mrs. Finch, widow of Saville Finch, of Tbriburg in the co. of York, being the present possessor.

The lands of this latter estate are so blended with those of the former, having for a long succession of time been used by the same occupier, by his will, proved 1636; he had another son Henry, and lies buried in the north chancel of this church, near his two wives.

Mrs. Dorothy Nixon was afterwards lessee of this estate, her interest in which she devised by her will, proved in 1731, to her nephew Herbert Randolph, cl. It contains by estimation, 144 acres, 3 roods of land, and is held of the manor of Monkton, by the yearly rent of 15s.

This portion of tythes arises from certain glebe belonging to the vicar, intermixed with St. Nicholas Court lands, for which the occupiers of them pay at this time a yearly composition to the vicar, of 5s. but what it is, or where these lands lie, no one knows.

(a) This family of Brydges, or Bridges, as the name is now written, who have been long settled in this parish, are descended from the Rev. John Bridges, rector of Harbledowne, and vicar of Horne, who died in 1590, and lies buried at Monkton, of which parish he was likewise vicar. By Margaret Leicester his wife, he had several sons and daughters, of whom the eldest, John Bridges, married Maria Cloys, by whom he had issue several children, who all died without issue, except his two sons, John and Thomas.

John Brydges the elder son, was of this parish, and was possessed of Frosts and other lands in it; he was a benefactor to the poor of it, and dying here in 1667, was buried in the middle chancel of this church; by Ann his wife, he had 3 sons, Ezekiel, Thomas and John, and 2 daughters; Anne, married to William Tritton, and Mary to William Sayer; of the sons, Ezekiel the eldest, succeeded to his father's estates, and was of St. Nicholas, where he died in 1669, having married Elizabeth, daughter of John Cramp, by whom he had 2 sons and 2 daughters, who all died without issue, the eldest of them, John, in 1681, on which his estates went to Edward, eldest son of Thomas, the son of Thomas Bridges, the younger brother of his grandfather John, above mentioned.

Thomas Bridges, the second son of John, by Anne his wife, was of St. Nicholas, and died in 1695, possessed of lands in Asb, having by Joane his wife, several children, who all died without issue, excepting John and 2 daughters, viz. Elizabeth, married to Michael Wood, of Riebborough, whose sole daughter Elizabeth married Edward Bridges, as will be noticed below; and Mary married Robert Kennet, and left a son Robert, who died without issue; which John the son, was of St. Nicholas, where he died in 1704, having married Sarah Pett, by whom he left a son Thomas, who died an infant, and a daughter Sarah, who died unmarried, in 1715. To return now to Thomas Bridges, the younger brother of John, the sons of John Bridges, by two daughters. He devised this estate to his son Ezekiel, with other tenements and lands in this parish, purchased of Thomas Paramor, esq; and he died possessed of this estate in 1669, leaving it to his son John Bridges, who died without issue in 1681; upon which it came to Edward Bridges, eldest son of his kinsman Tho. Bridges, the son of Thomas Bridges, the younger brother of his grandfather John, above-mentioned, in whose descendants this estate has continued down to Mr. John Bridges, of St. Nicholas Court in this parish, the present owner of it (a).

PRESENT STATE OF ST. NICHOLAS.

This parish is most part of it situated upon high ground, excepting towards the west, where Maria Cloys, ancestor of the present Bridges's, of this parish;—by Elizabeth his wife he had issue several sons and daughters, of whom Edward Bridges married Margery Pannell, and died in 1688; he left surviving one son, Edward Bridges, of St. Nicholas, who married Elizabeth, sole daughter and heir of Michael Wood, by Elizabeth Bridges his wife, as mentioned above; by her he had issue, besides other children, who died without issue, two sons, Thomas and Edward.

Thomas Bridges, the eldest son, was of St. Nicholas, gent. and was twice married, first to Margaret Sankey, of Eastenleigb, by whom he had no issue; and 2dly to Anne, daughter and coheir of John Pamflett, gent. who died in 1758, as he did in 1777, leaving by her an only son and heir, Thomas Bridges, esq; late of this parish, but now of the county of Glamorgan, in Wales, who, in 1780 married Anne, eldest daughter of Edward Jacob, of Faversham, esq; by whom he has issue 3 sons and 2 daughters, viz. Thomas-Edward; Phillip-Henry; and Edward-Jacob; Marianne-Elizabeth; and Caroline-Anne.

Edward Bridges, the second son of Edward Bridges and Elizabeth Wood, was of St. Nicholas Court, and died in 1765; having married Mary, daughter of Matthew Sankey, of Harbledown, who survived him, and is now living in this parish; by her he left surviving one son John, and a daughter Elizabeth, married to Thomas Gillow, jun. of St. Nicholas Parsonage, gent. by whom she has two sons, Thomas and Francis.

John Bridges the son, is now resident at St. Nicholas Court, in this parish, and possesses the estate of Frosts, as above-mentioned; he married Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Thomas Denne, of Monkton, by whom he has no issue.

This family all lie buried in the church and church-yard of this parish, as will be further mentioned below, in the account of the epitaphs and monuments in it. They bear for their arms—Argent, on a cross sable, a leopard's head caboshed, or; quartered with Wood; to which Mr. Bridges, of Glamorganshire, adds the quarterings of Egerton, Reynolds, and Panflett; his mother being one of the two daughters and coheirs of Panflett, by Elizabeth, one of the two daughters and coheirs of Reynolds, by Elizabeth the sole daughter and heir of Egerton.

Mr. Reynolds had two wives; by his first, Elizabeth Egerton, he had one only daughter, the grandmother of the present Mr. Bridges last mentioned; by his second wife an only daughter likewise, married to Mr. John Jekyn, by whom she had an only daughter, married to Daniel Newman, esq; whose only daughter married the Rev. Sir John Fagg, bart.

it consists of a level of marsh land, bounded by the water called the Netbergong. The sea bounds it northward. The church and village stand on an hill, nearly in the centre of the parish. In it there are two neat new-built houses, the property of the Bridges's, one being the residence of Mrs. Mary Bridges, the widow of Mr. Edward Bridges, late of St. Nicholas Court; and the other the property and late the residence of Thomas Bridges, now of the county of Glamorgan, esq; the elder branch of this family, who have been long settled in this parish (b); and there is another which belongs to Thomas Gillow, senior, esq; About a mile northward from the church, near Sboart, is the Borough of All Saints, in which there was once a church or chapel, long since ruined, the parish of which is now united to this of St. Nicholas. The soil and face of the country within the bounds of this parish, have been already taken notice of in the general description of this island. It is about four miles across from east to west, and somewhat less than three, excluding Sarre, from north to south.

By the return made to the Council's Letter, by Archbishop Parker's order, in 1563, there were then computed to be in this parish, 33 households; of late there have not been near so many, owing to the laying farms together, and pulling down the houses of the smaller ones.

About half a mile to the right of the road from St. Nicholas to Birchington, and adjoining to the summer road from Sarre to Margate, is a large obelisk, about 10 feet diameter and 29 high, built with brick and capped with stone; it stands on the spot, where formerly stood a windmill, which was a peculiar sea-mark. On the north side is an inscription, shewing that it was erected by the Corporation of the Trinity House in 1791, for the safety of navigation.

CHARITIES.

Edward Okenfold, by will proved in 1683, gave 5l. to be put out to interest, and the money arising therefrom to be given to such poor persons of this parish, as receive no alms or relief. As this charity was unpaid for 34 years, it is supposed that the heirs of the donor, upon the settling of the account, made up the

Thomas Paramor, of Monkton, esq; (c), by will proved in 1637, gave 6l. per annum, to be paid out of certain lands and tenements in this parish; and a house with about an acre of land, near St. Nicholas street, for a schoolmaster to reside in, who is to teach such poor children as come to him, of this parish and of Monkton, to read and write; the children of such poor as receive alms to have the preference. This is now vested in the minister, churchwardens and overseers, who appoint the master, and is together of the annual produce of 10l. (d)

John Bridges, of this parish, by will in 1667, gave 10l. to the poor of St. Nicholas, to be put out to interest; which sum is now vested in the vicar, churchwardens and overseers, and is put out accordingly (e).

John Finch, of Lymne, gent. by will in 1705, gave one moiety of a farm, called Chamber's Wall, consisting of a house, barn, &c. and 105 acres of arable and marsh land, to the minister, churchwardens and overseers of this parish, in trust, to distribute the profits of the same half yearly to eight of the eldest, poorest, and most honest, industrious and diligent labouring men of this parish, who are members of the church of England, as then by law established, and never have received any alms or relief of the parish; which charity is now vested in the said minister, churchwardens and overseers, and is of the annual produce of 37l. 10s. (f)

The school endowed by Mr. Paramor, as above-mentioned, still exists for the teaching of reading, writing, and arithmetic, the master teaching, besides the above 10 scholars, several others from the neighbouring parishes.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THE PARISH of St. Nicholas is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Westbere. The church, which is exempted from the jurisdiction of the Archdeacon, is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and consists of three isles and three chancels, having a square tower at the west end (g), in which hang five bells (b).

three most beautiful Saxon arches between the nave and the south isle. It has a good altar-piece. In the middle isle is a handsome brass sconce; the rod by which it hangs, is richly ornamented with large crowns and mitres; it was given by Mrs. Elizabeth Hannis, in 1757, as appears by an inscription round it. The church is pretty well paved, and is kept remarkably clean; the south chancel is made use of as a school room; the north chancel belongs to the estate of Frosts, in this parish, by the owners of which it is held and maintained; under the greatest part of it, is a large vault, in which lie many of the Paramors, formerly owners of that of Archbishop Winchelsea, who principally on account of the inconveniences arising from the distance of this and other chapels (for those of Herne and Hotbe were chapels likewise to Reculver) from the mother church, about the year 1296, made them all three parochial, and united to this church of St. Nicholas the adjoining parish of All Saints, the church of which had been before esteemed as a chapel of ease to this church, and soon afterwards became desecrated and fell to ruin.

This small parish of All Saints, the church or chapel of which may be seen in the antient map of this island, in Trinity College Library in Cambridge, as mentioned above, had formerly within its bounds a vill or town, called All Saints, belonging to it. This is now called the borough of All Saints, in St. Nicholas parish. This church has been long since so entirely demolished, that there are no marks of it left. It appears by Leland that it was so in his time, but how long is not known. It appears to have stood not far from Sboart House (i).

The Archbishop, when he made these chapels parochial, as above-mentioned, instituted three distinct and perpetual vicarages in them, which he afterwards by his instrument in 1310 separately endowed.

By this instrument, having recited the motives for so doing, he decreed, with the consent of the Rector of the church of Reculver, that out of the profits of the said church and chapels, the perpetual vicars should from that time have such competent and fit portions, as are mentioned therein more particularly; nevertheless, in token of their perpetual subjection to the church of Reculver, the Vicars should pay each of them, certain annual pensions to the Vicar of it; that to be paid by the Vicar of St. Nicholas being yearly four marks and ten shillings; and that in re-back of the pulpit, which is very richly carved, is 1615, I. S. E. E. The following coats of arms were formerly in the windows of this church—Argent, a fess, embattled, counter embattled, between 3 crescents gules—Gules, a lion rampant argent billetee, or—Sable, a lion rampant or, crowned argent—Gules, on a fess sable, 3 mullets of the 1st, between 3 estoiles of 6 points argent. It appears by the wills in the Prerog. off. Cant. that there were formerly in this church, besides the image of Our Lord on the cross, those of St. Katherine, the Blessed Virgin Mary, and the Holy Trinity, and altars and lights belonging to each of them. John Andrews, of Thanet, by his will, proved in 1480, ordered to be buried in the chapel of St. Thomas the Martyr on the south side of the church, before the image of St. Thomas there; and he devised 6 marks to the making of a window in the east part of the said chapel. Many of the Bridges's, of this parish, lie buried in this church-yard as well as the church.

(b) On the bells are the following inscriptions in old English letters, excepting the 3d, which is in Roman capitals. 1st, Josephus Hatch me fecit, 1625. 2d, Joseph Hatch made me 1615. 3d, Messieurs Edward Bridges, Edward Haunis, churchwardens. Richard Phelps made me 1723.

verence to the mother church, the Vicars with their Priests, Ministers, and Parishioners, should come thither in procession, once in every year, in manner as therein mentioned (k).

Notwithstanding the above decree, it seems that the parishioners of these chapels continued as liable and subject to the repair of the mother church of Reculver, as the peculiar and proper inhabitants of the place; a matter much controverted between them in the time of Archbishop Stratford, who, after taking cognizance of the cause, and audience of all parties, made a decree in 1335, in favor of Reculver. After which there continued much contest and dispute still on this account, until by a decree of Archbishop Warham in K. Henry VIII.'s time, it was settled by the consent of all parties, that the people of the chapels of Herne and St. Nicholas should redeem the burthen of repairs with a moderate annual stipend, or pension in money, payable on a certain set day in the year; but with this proviso, that if they kept not their day of payment, they should then be open to the law and fall under as full an obligation to the repairs of the mother church, as if the decree had never been made; in which state it remains at this time, the churchwardens of St. Nicholas paying annually 3s. 4d. on this account to those of Reculver (l).

Although the vicarages of Reculver and its chapels were thus separated and made distinct, yet the rectories, or parsonages of them, remained in the same state as before; viz. one parsonage of Reculver, extending over that parish and those of Hotbe and Herne; and another of St. Nicholas, with All Saints in Thanet, both remaining parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury to the present time (m). Mr. Thomas Gillow, jun. is the present lessee of this parsonage.

His Grace the Archbishop continues the patron

4th, Joseph Hatch made me 1615; and 5th, Thomas Bridges, Ralph Greeders, churchwardens, I. H. 1692.

(i) In the Lambeth Library are several instruments making mention of this church or chapel and parish, viz. A decree of Archbishop Peckham, between the parishioners of the chapel of All Saints and St. Nicholas in Thanet, anno 1284. Regist. Peckham, f. 206—An inquisition concerning the bounds of the above two parishes, anno 1297. Regist. Winchelsea, f. 240; and a decree concerning a highway belonging to the chapel of All Saints.

(k) This was continued in Leland's time, temp. Henry VIII, who says, "Ther cum at certen tymes sum paroches out of Thanet to Reculver a myle of as to ther mother-chyrche."

(l) See a more particular account of the institution and endowment of these vicarages, and the controversies above-mentioned, concerning the contribution towards the repair of the church of Reculver, in vol. iii. of this history, under Herne, p. 622, and Reculver, p. 638.

(m) Nicholas Crispe, esq; of Whitstaple, son of sr Henry, kn. was possessed of a part of this parsonage by lease, which by his will proved 1564, he gave among his serving men.

of this vicarage, which is valued in the King's books at 15l. 19s. 7d. and the yearly tenths at 11. 11s. 11½d. (n) In 1588 it was valued at 50l. and here were 250 communicants. In 1640 it was valued at 80l. communicants 300. Archbishop Juxon in 1661, in conformity to the King's letters mandatory, augmented this vicarage 30l. per annum, to be paid by the lessee of the great tythes (o). It is now of the yearly certified value of 66l. 6s. 3½d. which income arises from the above augmentation, the glebe, and a payment of 4d. an acre for all the marsh lands and pasture in the parish.

In 1630, the minister and churchwardens returned, that there was here a glebe of 10 acres, 1 rood and 21 perches, including a close, called Alballows Close, in part of which antiently stood the chapel of All Saints, or Alballows, containing one acre and an half, which is bounded out, the fences being all down; they added, that a report then went, that there was other land belonging to the Vicar, which was concealed. Formerly there was a vicarage-house in the street near the church; but some time before the year 1620 a fire happening in the street, these buildings shared in the common calamity, and have never been rebuilt since, nor is it now known where it stood.

Richard Marshall, of this parish, by his will proved in 1482, ordered to be buried in this church, and devised the yearly rents of 29 acres of arable, and 15 acres of marsh land in this parish and St. Giles's, to the yearly reparations of the church works of St. Nicholas church for ever, or else the said land to be sold and the money coming therefrom to remain to the reparations, at the discretion of the churchwardens for the time being, on condition, that they, and the vicars, and parishioners, should grant a release of all their claim and demand, in an annuity of 15½d. yearly due to this church, out of a tenement called Bynez, and the gardens belonging to it in the said parish, so that the same be extinct for ever.

That same year Thomas Perrye, alderman of Canterbury, by his will, devised his interest in this parsonage to his wife Elizabeth. In 1643, Daniel Harvey, esq; was lessee of this parsonage, on a beneficial lease from the Archbishop, at the yearly rent of 40l.

(q) Here was the greatest recourse of the stream and reof St. Nicholas, was once a separate parish of itself; it was antiently spelt Serre, and was sometimes written in antient records, St. Giles, alias Serre, and St. Giles at Serre, from the church of it being dedicated to that saint.

It is a small village adjoining to the parish of St. Nicholas south westward, being situated at the entrance into this island from the county eastward, and at the western extremity of it.

It seems antiently to have been much larger, and more populous than at present, on account of its being the most frequented passage into this island, and a place where the shipping often lay at anchor, in their passage to and from the Northmouth or Yenlade, there being a most commodious haven for them here (p). The distance between the upland and the county, and this place, across the marshes over Sarre wall, is about a mile.

This space was antiently covered with water, the sea flowing over it between Northmouth and Richborough, being the usual passage for the shipping to and from London, and here the two tides met, which flowed in at the north and east mouths of it (q). This water was so much decreased (and on that account named the Wantsum) in Bede's time, that it then was no more than three furlongs broad; so that there were kept here two ferry boats to carry men and cattle over it, to and from the island; the tribute or toll of these, which used to be paid to the King, was granted by K. Egbert to the Abbey of Minster in Thanet (r).

In the antient rude map of this island, formerly belonging to the Abbey of St. Augustine, which has been already noticed above, a pretty large boat is placed here, a man rowing it, and another nearly up to his knees in the water, with a staff in his hand, carrying a monk on his back to the boat; which seems to intimate, that then the water was so much fallen away that the boat could not come up quite to the shore.

This water still decreasing, ceased to be a continued stream, and the flood gates erected across it dispersed it among the adjoining lands, insomuch that it became too narrow, even for verberation from the other reflux of the Sandwich shore, so that here the tides opposed one another with a sort of reciprocity, and as it were a mutual change or vicissitude, the western ebb giving way to the eastern flood, and again the eastern ebb giving way to the western flood; but not fully, nor with equal force, nor at the like hours. See Lewis's Thanet, p. 47.

the use of a ferry (s), and the inhabitants applying to Parliament for licence to build a bridge at Sarre ferry, an act passed in the 1st year of K. Henry VII. for that purpose; and a bridge was soon after erected here over this water, which is not more than 10 or 12 feet wide (t).

Leland, who wrote in K. Henry VIII.'s time, says, in his Itinerary—"At Northmouth, where the Estery of the Se was, the Salt Water wel-
" lish yet up at a Creeke a myle and more to-

" Commune Fery when Thanet was fulle iled."

ANTIENT AND PRESENT STATE OF SARRE.

THE VILLAGE of Sarre is situated at a small distance from the bridge above-mentioned eastward, the road from thence across the island leading through it. It consists of only a few straggling houses, one of which, on the south side, is the manor house. There is a fair held here on Oct. 14th, for toys, &c.

Whilst the sea flowed up hither and the ships resorted to this haven, it was accounted a pleasant, healthy situation; but afterwards the continued fogs and damp vapours, occasioned by the vast quantity of marshes inned from the decreasing waters, soon made this place exceedingly unhealthy, and at the same time unpleasant, and of course decreased the populousness of it, so that it has been for a long time but very thinly inhabited, and that by those only whose occupations among these sickly marshes oblige them to reside in it.

This village, or parish of Sarre, has ever been accounted one of the antient members of the Cinque Port of Sandwich, and as such, within the liberty and jurisdiction of those ports; notwithstanding which, a dispute arose in K. Henry VI.'s time, touching the assessing of it, as lying within the

(t) The conflux of waters where the two streams of the Nethergong, which ran by Chiffet, and the Wantsum, which came by the Northmouth, met, goes by the name of Serre Pent, in consideration of which, the lands adjoining are not scotted to the repair of the wall or sea fence at Reculver, some of those lands, I suppose, having been taken away for the making of this pent and setting up the sluices there, [in order the better to sew the whole level. See Lewis's Thanet, p. 49.

The above bridge has always belonged to the Commissioners of Sewers, acting for the eastern parts of the county of Kent, by whose orders it is constantly repaired. The antient Ferry House, situated at a small distance westward from the bridge, on the south side of the high road, belongs likewise, and is from time to time demised by them.

(v) In the 9th year of K. Henry VI, being Governor of Gourney in Normandy, he sallied out from that place and county; to take away all disputes of which, the King, by his letters patent, united it again to Sandwich.

THE MANOR OF SARRE

was in antient time part of the inheritance of the eminent family of Crevequer, from which it came, partly by sale and partly by marriage, to that of Criol; one of whom, Bertram de Criol, in the 10th year of K. Henry III, had a grant of a weekly market, to be held on a Thursday at his manor of Serres, until the King should be of full age; his descendant sir John Criol paid aid for it in the 20th year of K. Edward III, at the making of the Black Prince a knight, as one knight's fee; after which, sir Nicholas de Criol, or Keriel, died seised of it in the 3d year of K. Richard II, and from him it devolved to sir Wm Criol, father to sir John Criol, who held it in the beginning of K. Henry VI.'s reign (u).

His son sir Thomas Keriel, for so their name was then spelt, succeeded him in this manor; he was a Knight of the Garter, a man of great worth and eminence, and of great courage, whose valiant actions in the French wars are noticed in all the histories of those times (v); but he was at length slain in the second battle of St. Albans, in the 38th year of K. Henry VI, asserting the cause of the House of York. About which time, and probably before his death, this manor was alienated to John White, merchant, of Canterbury, afterwards knighted, who held it at his decease, in the 9th year of K. Edward IV, (w) as did his descendant Robert White, in the 12th year of K. Henry VIII, then holding this manor and 100 acres of land in the parish of St. Nicholas and St. Giles's in Thanet, of the Archbishop, by knight's service (x); from one of his descendants this manor passed by sale to Roger Bere, or harrassed not only that province, but fought with the Earl of Bretagne, who was sent to oppose his eruption, and after a sharp encounter gave him a remarkable overthrow, killing about 600, and taking 200 soldiers prisoners. In the 15th year of the same reign, he seized on the Duke of Burgundy's carriages and cannons, leaving Crotoy, (a fortress then in the possession of the English, and not long before distressed by the Duke,) furnished with victuals for 600 men, for the space of a 12 month; and lastly, in the 27th of that reign, he was sent into France with a supply of 1,500 men to recruit the English army, where he effected as much, with so small a number of men, as could be expected from human courage; and having reduced some places of strength, he encountered the Earl of Clermont, at Formigny, where, being overpowered by superior numbers, after he had given the most signal testimony of his valour, and discharged every duty which might have secured and preserved the honour of the English nation and the glory of the day as a prudent and experienced Commander, he was at last defeated. Philipot, p. 384. messuage called Clerks, at Sarre, to his wife Joane and her heirs for ever (d).

THE PARISH CHURCH of Sarre stood upon the hill to the eastward of the town, about 30 rods on the left hand of the great road leading from Sarre to Monkton. It was dedicated to St. Giles, and was a vicarage, which in the 8th year of K. Richard II. on account of its smallness was not taxed to the tenth, being valued at no more than 66s. 8d.

The alteration made in this place by the failing of the Wantsume, and consequently the decrease of the inhabitants, occasioned very probably the dissolution of this little vicarage, and the uniting it, together with this parish, to that of St. Nicholas; soon after which, the church decaying was suffered to fall down, and there are at this time no remains of it left (e).

The Vicar of St. Nicholas receives the small tithes, offerings, &c. of this little parish, or ville of Sarre, the inhabitants of which are assessed to the repairs of the church of St. Nicholas, but they still keep up the distinction of maintaining their own poor.

The church of St. Giles's at Sarre was part of the possessions of the eminent family of Crevequer, Lords of the manor of Sarre, to which it was appurtenant, and continued so till Robert de Crevequer, founder of Ledes Priory, in K. MONKTON

LIES the next parish south-eastward from St. Nicholas, in the lower half hundred of Ringslow likewise. It is written in the survey of Domesday, Monocstune, i. e. Monks Town, and in other records Muncbetun, Munketune, and Monkynnton; all which names it had from its being part of the possessions of the monks of the priory of Christ Church in Canterbury.

THE MANOR OF MONKTON.

was in the year 961 given by Q. Ediva, mother of K. Edmund and K. Eadred, for the health of her soul, to Christ Church in Canterbury, among other lands, free from all secular service, excepting the Trinoda Necessitas, of repelling invasion, and the repair of castles and highways (a); and it continued in the possession of that church at the time of taking the general survey of Domesday, in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, in which it is thus described, under the general title of Terra Monachorum Archiepi, lands of the monks of the Archbishop; that is, of Christ Church above-mentioned.

(r) He had the Queen's letters of presentation that year. Rym. Fœd. vol. xv, p. 358.

(s) He was buried in the middle chancel of this church.

(t) He is mentioned in a will, in Prerog. off. Cant.

(u) He was likewise vicar of St. John's, Margate.

(v) He was ejected by the Bartholomew Act. See Calamy's life of Baxter.

(w) He lies buried in the middle chancel of this church.

(x) He and his two successors held this vicarage, with that of Chifflet, by dispensation.

(y) He was likewise vicar of Chifflet, which he resigned as well as this vicarage, on being collated to the rectory of Aldington with Smeeth.

(z) In June 1785, a dispensation passed for his holding this vicarage with that of Chifflet; in 1790, he succeeded his father in the title of baronet.

Which is: In Borowart Lest, in Tanet Hundred, the Archbishop himself holds Monocstune. In the time of K. Edward the Confessor it was taxed at 20 sulings, and now for 18. The arable land is 31 carucates. In demesne there are 4 and 4 times 20 and 9 villeins, with 21 borderers, having 27 carucates. There are 2 churches, and one mill of 10 shillings. There is a new fishery, and one salt work of 15 pence; wood for the pannage of 10 hogs.

In the whole value it was worth in the time of K. Edward the Confessor and afterwards 20 pounds, and now 40 pounds.

The great extent of this manor, comprehending near one half of the island, that is, all that part of it on the western side of St. Mildred's Lynch, answers well the above description; and the extensive demesne lands of it, might well employ fourscore and nine villeins. The two churches were those of this parish and Woodchurch; the mill, now called Monkton Mill, still remains; but the fishery and saltwork are lost long ago by the deficiency of the river Wantsume. In the 21st year of K. Edward I, the King brought a writ of right against the prior for this manor; but the jury gave it against him for the Prior (b). In the 10th year of K. Edward II, the Prior obtained a grant to him and his successors of free warren in all his demesne lands in this manor, among others, which the Prior or his predecessors had acquired since the time of the King's grandfather, so that the same were not within the bounds of his forest (c); at which time this

At the time of the dissolution of the convent, the interest in the above premises was vested in Lybye Orchard, who continued lessee of them in the first year of King manor, with its appurtenances, was valued at 62 pounds (d).

The buildings of this manor were much augmented and repaired by Prior Selling, about the year 1480, who built a new dormitory here for the use of the monks, when they visited this place (e); and his successor Prior Goldstone, about the year 1500, erected two new barns and most of the other edifices (f). K. Henry VI, in his 25th year, granted to the Prior and his successors a market weekly, to be held on a Saturday; and a fair yearly, on the feast of St. Mary Magdalen within this manor (g), which continued afterwards part of the possessions of the priory of Christ Church, till its dissolution in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII, when it was surrendered into the King's hands, to the use of him and his heirs for ever; but this manor did not continue long in the Crown, for the King settled it, among other premises, in his 33d year, on his new-founded Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, part of whose inheritance it still continues.

There is a Court Leet and Court Baron held for this manor.

The manerial rights, with the Court Leet and Court Baron, are reserved by the Dean and Chapter in their own hands; but the Court Lodge with its appurtenances, and the demesne lands, which are very extensive, are demised on a beneficial lease to sir Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, bart. (h) is a seat in this parish, pleasantly situated about two miles north-eastward from Monkton church, on high ground, having a fine prospect of the neighbouring country and the sea beyond it. This seat was formerly in the possession of the family of Quekes, resident at the seat of that name in the adjoining parish of Birchington, from whom it came, in K. Henry VII.'s reign, by Agnes, the female heir of John Quekes, in marriage to John Crispe, afterwards of Quekes, esq; whose son John Crispe devised it in 1518

Edward VI, but in the 24th year of Queen Elizabeth, the Queen appears to have been in possession of them; two years after which the Earl of Leicester was become lessee of them; in 1616 Sir Richard Smith was lessee, who parted with the lease to Randall, and in 1628 Joane Randall was lessee, but in 1635 the lease was in the names of Alured and Frewen, and in 1642 in that of Warner, Bishop of Rochester, who held it after the restoration in 1661, from whom it went to Hen. Lee, esq; who possessed it in 1680, and continued so to do till after 1702, from whose heirs his interest in it passed to Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, esq; afterwards created a baronet, who held it in 1734, holding it for 3 lives; which tenure his grandson, of the same name, exchanged in 1781, for a term of 21 years, in which manner his son Sir Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, bart. now holds it; the rack rent of these premises being upwards of 700l. per annum.

to his eldest son of the same name, who resided at Cleve, where he died in 1558 and was buried in this church, having desired that his executors should place his arms in the next window to where he should lay, and devised to Richard his son and heir, his house and lands, called Cleve Court, with their appurtenances, and all his lands at Minster, Monkton, and Woodchurch, (the lands at Howe and Feeles Court only excepted,) and his lands and outlands at Acolte in Birchington and Monkton, to hold in fee simple. By Jane, daughter of Edmund Slyfield, of Surry, esq; he left one son sir Edmund Crispe, knt. (i); whose heirs afterwards sold it to Ruisb, ancestor of sir Francis Ruisb, knt. who dying in K. Charles I.'s reign without male issue, his two daughters and co-heirs became entitled to it, one of whom marrying with sir George Wentworth, younger brother of sir Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford, he became in her right entitled to it; after which it descended to Ruisb Wentworth, esq; who left an only daughter and heir Mary, who married Thomas, Lord Howard of Effingham; and he about the year 1723 passed away this seat, with other estates in this island, to Mr. James Colebrooke, of London, banker, (afterwards of Chilham Castle in this county;) and Mr. James Ruck, likewise of London, banker; who afterwards made a partition of these estates, in which partition this of Cleve Court was allotted to the latter, who built the present seat here; on his death it descended to his son, who passed it away by sale, about the year 1748, to Mr. Josiab Farrer, of Doctors Commons, Proctor, who died in 1762, whose son Josias Fuller Farrer, esq; resided here and was High Sheriff of this county in the year 1773, since which he has resided abroad, and is at this time owner of this seat.

In K. Edward I.'s reign, anno 1288, the Abbat, &c. of St. Augustine in Canterbury, with the King's licence, exchanged certain lands in this parish, among others, with the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, for other lands elsewhere (k).

The Rector and Brothers of the Hospital of St. Thomas of Canterbury, granted to John, Prior and Convent of Christ Church, all that land called Affeteghe, &c. and 34 acres and an half in Tbanet, of the tenement of Monkton, of which 26 acres and 3 roods were held by the Rector and Brothers of Adam de Sturry, the son of Ailgar; and 7 acres and 3 roods of Theobald de Hakes, &c. who were Lords of the fee, &c. PRESENT STATE OF MONKTON.

THE parish of Monkton is about three miles from east to west, and as much from north to south. The village, called Monkton street, is situated rather on low ground, about a mile eastward from Sarre, having the church on the south side of it, and Monkton Court, an antient timbered building, at a small distance from the west end of it, between which and Sarre, is the hamlet of Gore-street. At a small distance eastward from the village is the vicarage and parsonage house, called the Ambry Farm; the lands northward of the street rise to high land, being open common land, over which the road leads across the island eastward, close to which is Monkton Mill; and at the eastern extremity of the parish, Cleve Court. Southward of the village is a large parcel of marsh land, called Monkton Level, under the direction of the Commissioners of Sewers for the eastern parts of Kent, which reaches down as far as the river Stour.

By the return made to the Council's letter by Archbishop Parker's order in 1563, there were then computed to be in this parish 15 households.

The market mentioned above to have been granted in K. Henry VI.'s reign has been long since disused; but there are two fairs, one held on the day of St. Mary Magdalen, July 22d, for the sale of hogs; the other on October 11th, for toys, &c.

In the Heraldic visitation of the co. of Kent, anno 1619, there is a pedigree of Thomas Mason, of Monkton, whose eldest son William was of Bury St. Edmunds, esq; and Custos Brevium of the Court of King's Bench; and his youngest son James, was of Frindsbury in this county.

They bore for their arms—Party per pale, argent and sable, a chevron between 3 billets counter-changed.

Thomas Delaway was deputy to Robert Walleran, who was Sheriff of this county part of the 46 and 47 years of K. Henry III, and he held this office at his seat in this parish.

There was a set of ALMS HOUSES belonging to this parish, which were burned down by accident in the beginning of the year 1792.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

MONKTON is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Westbere. The church, which is exempted from the Archdeacon, is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen; it consists at present of only one isle and one chancel, having a square tower at the west end (o), in which is a very antient spiral staircase of wood. There are four bells in it (p).

The church of Monkton, to which the two chapels of Birchington and Woodchurch were appendant, was appurtenant to the manor, and as

(n) See an extract of the Will in Lewis's Thanet, addenda, p. 19, No. 13.

(o) The body of it was antiently larger than it is now, consisting of two isles, part of the end of the north isle being still to be seen, and the arches between the two isles still remaining in the wall; at present it consists of but one isle and a chancel; in the latter are twelve stalls, used formerly by the clergy and the monks when they visited this place. In the windows, there were some remains of painted glass, among which were the heads of several of the Priors and these coats of arms—King Lucius;—A plain cross. King Estelred, 3 circles, 2 and 1; in the first, a lion passant; in the 2d, a griffin, and in the 3d, a king crowned and robed, with a globe and sceptre in his hands. Queen Ediva—3 lions passant guardant, an orle of hearts. Vert, on a chevron argent, 3 bugle horns stringed sable, between 3 talbot bounds passant argent. Blecbenden and Godfrey, quarterly. Blecbenden impaling Blecbenden. Dean Wotton, with his quarterings, and Crispe; of all which there now remain entire only a prior's head, and the arms of Crispe, or, on a chevron sable, 5 horse shoes, argent; under the shield, 1506. At the west end of the church, Weever, p. 266, says, were these verses in old English letters:

Insula rotunda Tanatos quam circuit unda Fertilis et munda, nulli est in orbe secunda.

There are but few monuments or memorials in this church, most of the grave-stones having lost their brasses, or are worn smooth, but those which remain are as follows: In the nave of it, is a grave-stone on which is the figure in brass of a priest in his habit, but the inscription is lost. On a brass plate, a memorial for Christopher Blecbenden, gent. of this parish, with Amy and Margaret, his wives, obiit 1554; over it were the figures of him and his two wives, with their coats of arms, but they are all long since torn from the stone; the brass, with the inscription, is nailed up in the vestry, as is that for Nicholas Robinson, gent.

such part of the antient possessions of the see of Canterbury. Archbishop Richard, (successor to Archbishop Becket), in K. Henry II.'s reign, appropriated this church, with its appendages, to the priory of Christ Church (q); but it did not continue long so, for Archbishop Baldwin, his immediate successor, having quarrelled with the monks, on account of his intended college at Hackington, took this appropriation from them, and thus it remained as a rectory, till about the 39th year of K. Edward III.'s reign, when Archbishop Simon Islip, with the King's licence, restored, re-united and annexed it again to the priory (r); but it appears that in return for this grant the Archbishop had made over to him, by way of exchange, several advowsons in London, belonging to the priory (s).

In the 8th year of K. Richard II, anno 1384, the appropriation of this church was valued among the temporalities of the Almonry of the priory at 13l. 6s. 8d. and the portion of the monks in this church at 33l. 6s. 8d. (t) After which this appropriation continued in the possession of the monks, who managed it for the use of their almonry (whence it gained the name of the Almonry, or Ambry farm) till the dissolution of the priory in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII, when it came with the advowson of the vicarage, into the King's hands (u), where they staid but a small time, for the King granted them in his 33d year, by his dotation charter, to his new-founded Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, who are the present owners of this appropriation, or parsonage of Monkton (v).

Mr. Finch is the present lessee of this parsonage.

But the advowson of the vicarage, notwithstanding the above grant of it to the Dean and Chapter, appears not long afterwards to have become parcel of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, where it continues at this time, his Grace the Archbishop being the present patron of it.

This church of Monkton continued as a rectory, as has been above-mentioned, till the 39th year of K. Edward III; but there was no vicarage endowed here till the 42d year of that reign, when Archbishop Simon Langham, by his instrument dated at Le Ford, 11 nones August, anno 1377, decreed, that the portion of the vicar and vicarage of this church of Monkton should consist in future for ever, as undermentioned, viz. that the Vicar, for the time being, should have in it, the hall with two chambers, the kitchen, one pigeon house, and one curtilage, competent for his condition, with a sufficient close within the manse of his portion, which the Eleemosinary lately had in it and then extant, situated and built there, to be in future continually repaired at the cost of the Vicar; and also all oblations, legacies and obventions whatsoever, and the tythes of wool, lambs, calves, butter, milk, cheese, hemp, flax, geese, ducks, pigs, eggs, wax, honey, apples, pears, pigeons, fishings, fowlings, huntings, busineses, mills, hay, herbage, silva cædua, and all other things whatsoever in any shape arising to the church of Monkton, or any chapels whatsoever dependant on it; and twelve pounds and 20 pence of good and

(u) The inhabitants of this place were obliged to pay annually to the Convent of Christi Church, as appropriators of this church, a yearly service called Avercorn, by uncertain measure; but in the year 1263, it was determined that the quantity should be two bushels and an half; these payments of corn were usually made on All Saints Day, and the custom seems to arise from what the Saxons used to call cyrie sceat, or church scot, which was a certain quantity of corn paid to the parish church on St. Martin's Day, Nov. 11, as the first fruits of the corn. King Ina in his laws, ordained this annual payment under severe penalties; when the Norman terms came into use it probably took the name of Avercorn.

(v) By the survey of this parsonage, after the death of K. Charles I, in order to its being sold for the use of the state, in 1649 it was returned; that it then consisted of a parsonage house, containing a large hall, a fair parlour, a great kitchen, with several houses of office, below stairs; six lodging rooms, with garrets over them; three barns, with stables, a pigeon house, &c. a court yard, a great fold yard, a garden and two orchards, containing 134.

lawful money at the feasts of St. Michael and Easter, by equal portions, by the Prior and Chapter of Christi Church, yearly, for ever in future, faithfully to be paid to the Vicar, for the time being. Which oblations, legacies, profits and tythes, with the pigeon house aforesaid, as by an inquisition taken on the annual value of each of the same, the Archbishop was informed, together with the said 12 pounds and 20 pence yearly to be taken, amounted one year with another to the yearly sum of 23l. of lawful money; nevertheless his portion of the same, consisting in the oblations, obventions, legacies, tythes, and 12 pounds and 20 pence aforesaid, as was represented, on account of casual events which might happen in future, he limited and taxed at 10 marks of silver only; according to which tax, the Vicar, for the time being, should for his portion, only pay, undergo, and acknowledge the tenth, which should happen to this church; and the said Vicar should find one chaplain in the chapel of Birchington, dependant on the church of Monkton, daily to celebrate as far as he commodiously could; and should likewise find one other chaplain in the chapel of Wode, dependant on the church of Monkton, daily to celebrate on Sundays, and on Wednesdays and Fridays; which chaplains should officiate in the said chapels duly as was prescribed in divine services; and that he should find the processional tapers, and the surplices, and should bind the books belonging to the Rector to find; and the books of this sort so found, he should preserve at his peril; and also all other burthens within the said church and chapels, accustomed to be found by the Rector of the place, he should undergo, at his own costs and expences, with this exception, that the religious should repair the chancels of the church and chapels in all their members and particulars, and if they

THE next parish to Monkton eastward is Minster, antiently written both Mynstre, and Menstre, being so named from the Saxon word Minstre, signifying a church or monastery. It is divided into two boroughs, viz. Way Borough and Street Borough; the former of which lies on the ascent on the northern side of the street; the latter contains the street and church, with the southern part of the parish.

THE MANOR and ABBEY OF MINSTER.

THIS manor was antiently called Thanet manor, and continued so till, from the foundation of the abbey or minster within it, it acquired the name of the manor of Minster, though in the survey of Domesday, taken in the year 1080, it is still called Tanet Manor, Κατ' ἔχουσι; but I have met with it no where else so late by that name.

This manor was in the year 670 in the possession of Egbert, K. of Kent, whose two nephews Ethelred and Ethelbrigt, sons of his father's elder brother Ermenfride, deceased, (who left likewise two daughters, Ermenburga, called also Domneva, married to Merwald, son of Penda, King of Mercia (s), and Ermengitha (t), were left to his care, under promise of their succeeding to the kingdom. These Princes were kept under the inspection of one Tbunnor, a flattering sycophant, who persuaded the King to have them murdered, lest they should disturb him in the possession of the throne; which Tbunnor undertook and perpetrated (u). To expiate this crime, the King, by the advice of Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Adrian, Abbat of St. Augustine's monastery, sent to Domneva, who had taken the vow of chastity on her, to intreat her pardon, and to offer her any satisfaction for the crime he had been guilty of, offering her at the same time rich presents, which however she refused; but as an atonement, requested of the King, according to the custom of those times, to grant her a place in Tenet, where she might build a monastery to their memory, with a sufficient maintenance, in which she, with her nuns, might continually pray for the King's forgiveness, who immediately consented and granted to her for the endowment of it full one half of this island, being the eastern part of it (v), comprehended within the bounds of this manor, and since separated from the western part of the island and

(t) She was after her death sainted, and lived with her sister Domneva, in the abbey afterwards built here by her, where she died, and at her desire, was buried in a place about a mile eastward of the abbey, where the inhabitants have found numbers of bones, and where it is probable, she in her life time, built some chapel or oratory. In a field or marsh called the 20 acres, a little more than a quarter of a mile eastward of the church of Minster, are several foundations, as if some chapel or oratory had been built there. manor of Monkton, by a broad bank or lynch, made quite across the island, since called St. Mildred's Lynch, and remaining at this day; which gift he confirmed to her and her successors, the Abp, with the Abbat Adrian and others being present, and bestowing their benedictions on it (w).

The story of this grant, as told by Tborn, a native of this parish, and a monk of St. Augustine's monastery, in his chronicle of that Abbey, is: that Egbert granting Domneva's petition, demanded of her how much land she desired to have; who replied, as much as her deer could run over at one course; this being granted, the deer was let loose at Westgate in Birchington, in the presence of the King, his nobles, and a great concourse of people, who followed, expecting the event. Among them was Tbunor, the perpetrator of the murder, who, ridiculing the King for the lavishness of his gift and the method of its decision, endeavoured by every means to obstruct the deer's course, both by riding across and meeting it; but Heaven, continues the chronicler, being offended at his impiety, whilst he was in the midst of his career, the earth opened and swallowed him up, leaving the name of Tunor's-leap, or Tbunor's-by-sepe, to the ground and place where he fell, to perpetuate the memory of his punishment, though it was afterwards called Hegbigdale. This singular catastrophe put the King in great fear, he trembled, and his guilty conscience smote him; meanwhile the deer having made a small circle eastward, directed its course almost in a strait line south-westward across the island from one side to the other, running over in length and breadth 48 plow-lands; upon which the King, immediately afterwards giving thanks, delivered up to Domneva the whole tract of land which the deer had run over.

This tract or course of the deer, which included above ten thousand acres of some of the (w) The king's charter concluded with this singular curse on the infringers of it:

Si Cui Vero hec largicio displicet, vel si quis, quod absit, hanc donationem velo ductus diaboli quoquo ingenio infringere temptaverit, iram Dei et omnium Sanctorum maledicta incurrat et subita morte intereat sicut predictus Deo Odibilis Thunor interijt percutiatq; cum Deus amentia, Cecitate ac furore mentis omniq; tempore Columnam maledictionis Dei sustineat, non sit qui eum liberet, nisi penitus recipiscit et digna satisfactione satisfaciat. See Weever, p. 261.

(x) See Thorn's Chron. in Dec. Script. col. 1906 et seq. Puteus Thunor (or Tbunor's Leap) says the Annalist of St. Augustine's Monastery, apparat prope Cursum Cervi juxta Al-delond; and the place where the king stood to see this course is represented to be by it, where formerly was a beacon, it being some of the highest land hereabouts, where the king might see the course, if any such there was. This Puteus Tbunor, or Tbunor's-lep, is very plainly the old chalk pit, called Minster chalk-pit, which its not unlikely was first funk when the abbey and church here were built, and the bottom of it in process of time, being overgrown with grafs, gave occasion for the invention of this fable of Tbu- best lands in Kent, is said to have been marked out by the broad bank, or lynch, across the island, since called St. Mildred's Lynch, thrown up in remembrance of it (x); but notwithstanding this well-invented story of Tborn, it is more probable that this lynch was made to divide the two capital manors of Minster and Monkton, before this gift to Domneva.

Domneva being thus furnished by the King's munificence with wealth and all things necessary, founded, in honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary, a monastery, or cloyster of nuns, afterwards called St. St. Mildred's abbey, on part of this land, on the south side of the island near the water, in the same place where the present parochial church stands. Archbishop Theodore, at the instance of Domneva, consecrated the church of this new monastery (y), and she afterwards appointed the number of nuns to be 70, and was appointed by the Archbishop, the first Abbess of it; she died here and was buried on the glebe of the new monastery (z).

Domneva was succeeded as Abbess (a) by her daughter Mildred, who is much extolled for her sanctity, and many wonderful tales are told of miracles performed by her, as well whilst she was living as after she was dead, which occasioned her afterwards to be sainted. She is said to have been buried in this church, founded by Domneva her mother.

On the death of the Abbess Mildred, Edburga succeeded in the government of this monastery, who finding it insufficient for so great a number of nuns, built another just by, larger and more stately, and fitted up adjoining convenient conventual offices and dwellings; after which it was consecrated by Archbishop Cutbert, and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul; and to this church she, about the year 750, removed the body of St. Mildred, at whose tomb many miracles were said to be wrought afterwards (b).

nor's being swallowed up by the earth at this place. The name of Tbunor's-lep has been long since obliterated, and even the more modern one of Hegbigdale has been likewise long forgotten. Lewis's Thanet, p. 83. Weever says, he lieth buried under an heap of stones, which the inhabitants to that day called Tbunniclam.

(z) In her time, viz. anno 694, abbesses were held in such great esteem for their sanctity and prudence, that they were summoned to the council held at Becanceld, and the names of five, and not one abbat, are subscribed to the constitutions there made. See Spelman's Councils, for their names, vol. i, p. 189. Weever says, she was buried in the church of her own foundation.

(a) Ann. Sci Aug. Mss. Tanner, p. 207, says that Domneva, at the foundation of this monastery, placed her daughter St. Mildred, the first Abbess in it.

(b) The day of this translation being fixed, there assembled to see it a great concourse of clergy and people; and according to the Annalist of St. Augustine's, the body was found whole and incorrupt, and even the garments were not changed, although they had lain in the coffin 45 years.

This Abbess Edburga is said by some to have been a daughter of K. Etlbert, who was converted to Christianity by St. Augustine, and is reported to have been a nun here, and to have died in 751; according to which account she must have been Abbess 60 years. According to Capgrave, she was buried at Minster in her own new church (c), and afterwards received the honor of being sainted.

She was succeeded as Abbess of this monastery by Sigeburga, one of the nuns of it, being nominated by Archbishop Cutbert (d). In her time was the first depredation of the Danes in Thanet; who, like rapacious wolves, fell upon the people, laid every thing waste, and plundered the religious in this monastery; from this time the Danes continued their ravages throughout this island almost every year; hence by degrees, this monastery of St. Mildred fell to decay, and its possessions were from time to time taken away, so the nuns decreased in number, being vexed with grief and worn down with poverty, by the continual insults of these merciless pirates. She died in the year 797, having continued Abbess for 46 years, and was buried in the new church of this monastery (e).

Siledritba succeeded her as Abbess, being consecrated by Archbishop Athelard. She used all her endeavours to comfort the forlorn sisters of this monastery, to restore it to its pristine state and condition, and to recover the possessions which had been taken from it; but at length the Danes, according to their usual custom, came with a large fleet and army, not only to plunder, but to subdue the whole kingdom. They landed in this island in the year 978, and entirely destroyed by fire this monastery of St. Mildred, in which the clergy and many of the people were shut up, having fled thither for sanctuary; but they were, together with the nuns, all burnt to death, excepting Leofrune the Abbess, successor

(c) Capgrave says, her relics were afterwards removed from hence by Archbishop Lanfranc's order to his church of St. Gregory, at Canterbury; of which see more below.

(e) Capgrave says, she was buried at Ely.

(f) Weever says, the Danes utterly demolished this monastery, and finding the Abbess and her sisters inclosed in secret caves for fear of their enemies, they burned them all to ashes. Leland says, anno 1011, Suane, King of Denmark, destroyed the Island of Thanet, and entirely demolished the monastery of Donneva. Itin. vol. vii, p. 130.

(g) On the night of Whitsunday, the Abbat, with his attendants, secretly removed the body of St. Mildred, which had been left unmolested by the Danes, from the tomb in which it rested; and the reliques being put into a bag, the Abbat himself, with 3 of his monks, hastened forward towards home with them; but notwithstanding all their care, the inhabitants gaining intelligence of it, pursued them with swords and clubs, but not being able to come up with them, the Abbat and his company with their reliques, having to Siledritba, who is said to have been carried away prisoner (f).

The Danes, however, spared the two chapels of St. Mary, and of St. Peter and St. Paul, in one of which, two or three clerks afterwards performed divine service for the inhabitants of this parish and the adjoining neighbourhood. The ancient scite of the monastery, together with this manor, and all the rest of the possessions of it remained in the King's hands, and they continued so till King Cnut, in the year 1027, gave the body of St. Mildred, together with the ancient scite of the monastery, this manor and all her land within this island and without, and all customs belong to her church, to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine in Canterbury (g); which gift of this manor, with all its appurtenances in this island and without, together with the rest of the possessions of this monastery, was confirmed by King Edward the Confessor, to Elstan the Abbat, and the monks there (h).

The Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine becoming thus possessed of this manor, fitted up the remains of the abbey to serve as the Court Lodge of it; accordingly it has ever since borne the name of Minster Court. In the survey of Domesday, taken in the 15th year of the Conqueror's reign, anno 1080, this manor is thus described, under the general title of Terra Eccle Sci Augustini, the land of the church of St. Augustine.

This exploit is by some said to be performed in the year 1027, and by others in 1030, and by Kilburne in the year 1033. The advantage these reliques brought to the Abbey were so great, that it induced the Canons of St. Gregory, in Canterbury, justly to assert that St. Mildred's body, together with that of her successor St. Edburga, had been removed from Minster to Liminge, and from thence again to their church of St. Gregory, by the favour of Archbishop Lanfranc their founder, then in the chair of Canterbury, which occasioned great disputes between the two houses for a long time. The Abbat himself holds Tanet Manor, which was taxed at 48 sulings. The arable land is 62 carucates. In demesne there are two, and 150 villeins, with 50 borderers having 63 carucates. There is a church and one priest, who gives 20 shillings per ann. There is one salt-pit and 2 fisheries of 3 pence, and one mill.

In the time of K. Edward the Confessor it was worth four times 20 pounds, when the Abbat received it 40 pounds, now 100 pounds.

Of this manor 3 knights hold so much of the land of the villeins as is worth 9 pounds, when there is peace in the land, and there they have 3 carucates.

After which, K. Henry I, among other favors which he bestowed on the monastery of St. Augustine, granted to it, about the 4th of his reign, a market, to be yearly held within this their manor of Minster, with all customs, forfeitures, and pleas, as freely and quietly for ever, as it possessed with any other land or matter whatsoever (i); which grant was confirmed among other liberties by K. Edward III, in his 36th year, by inspeximus (k).

In future time there arose great disputes between the Abbat and Convent and their tenants of this manor, concerning their doing suit and service for the lands which they held of it, at the high court of the Abbey of St. Augustine (l), the issue of which was by the King's command tried, in the year 1176, at Canterbury, before John de Cardyff, who supplied the place of Robert Fitzbernard, the sheriff, when it was determined in favor of the Abbat and Convent (m); notwithstanding which, these tenants not contented with this decision, in the year 1198, anno 10 Richard I, complained before Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, and others, the King's Justices at Westminster, on the same plea; but they were again overruled in it (n).

(l) The Abbat Roger, elect, then insisted, as his predecessors had done before, that the Tenet men who held of the manor of Minster, should come to Canterbury, and there do suit and service for the lands which they held of it at the high court of St. Augustine; particularly that those of the land called swillingland or plowland, should perform their suit at that court from 3 weeks to 3 weeks, by four of the tenants, under pain of americiament. This they refused, and averred, that they ought not to go out of the island, but that all their pleadings should be held in their own balimot, or manor court, at Menstre in Thanet, as had been used time out of mind; but it appears on the hearing of the matter at Canterbury, that the Tenet men were forced to acknowledge the right of their appearance at the said high court of St. Augustine, at Canterbury, as often as they should be summoned thither, and there to plead and abide the

K. Henry III, in his 54th year, anno 1270, granted to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, the liberty of free warren in all their demesne lands of Minster (o); and anno 3 Edward I, being the year after Nicholas de Spina was elected Abbat, on a general aid paid by the several tenants of their manors, as for his palsry, those of Minster paid him 53l. 6s. 8d. (p) in the 21st year of which reign the King brought his claim against the Abbat for this manor, by writs of quo warranto and de repleto, which was tried before J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant at Canterbury that year; but the King relinquished his claim and confirmed it to the Abbat and Convent and their successors (q). In the 7th year of K. Edw. II, anno 1313, in the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, the Abbat was summoned by quo warranto, to shew why he claimed sundry liberties therein mentioned, in this manor, among others, and likewise free warren in all his demesne lands of it, and view of frank pledge and all belonging to it; and likewise wreck of the sea, and one market weekly on a Friday (r), and one fair yearly on the eve and day of St. Mildred the Virgin, and other liberties therein mentioned; and the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, in this county; and he pleaded, that K. Edward II, by his charter in his 6th year had fully confirmed all of them to the Abbat and Convent and their successors (s); after which the rolls of the last iter of J. de Berewick being inspected, it was found that all the liberties which the Abbat then claimed by allowance of that iter were allowed in it, upon which every part of the same was allowed by the said H. de Stanton and his sociates as above-mentioned (t). After which, K. Edward III, by his judgment of the court, as the tenants of any other ville, if the Abbat had a complaint against them on any account whatever. (m) Dec. Script. Thorn, col. 1827.

(n) This complaint was made before Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, Richard, Bishop of London, Geoffry Fitzpier, and their associates, the king's justices at Westminster, viz. that the Abbat exacted of them services and customs, which they averred they ought not to do at Canterbury, but in Tenet at Minster. They were fined for not prosecuting their plaint. See Madox's Exchequer, p. 384.

charter of Inspecimus in his 36th year, confirmed to this Abbey all the manors and possessions given to it by former Kings; and by another charter, the several grants of liberties and confirmations made by his predecessors, among which were those above-mentioned (u); and K. Henry VI. afterwards confirmed the same (v).

In the year 1317, anno 11 Edward II, the King gave licence to the Abbat and Convent to purchase divers lands in this parish; and the same year the Abbat recovered by an assize against William Treir, and many others of the island of Thanet, 260 acres of marsh in Minster (w).

Next year the Abbat and his servants taking several distresses on their tenants of this manor, for rents detained and other matters appertaining to the court, and the view of frankpledge of it, the tenants, to the number of 600 men, met and continued together for the space of five weeks, having got with them a greater number of people, who coming in an hostile manner, armed with bows and arrows, swords and staves, to the court of this manor and that of Salmanstone, belonging likewise to the Abbat, laid siege to them, and after several attacks set fire to the gates of them. For fear of these violences, the monks and their servants at Salmanstone kept themselves confined there for 15 days, so that the people enraged at not being able to encompass their ends in setting fire to the houses, destroyed the Abbat's ploughs and husbandry utensils, which were in the fields; and to do still further mischief they cut down and carried away the trees on Minster and Salmanstone manors.

(u) Dec. Script. col. 2124, 2134. By the register of this monastery, of about this time, it appears that this manor had within its court the same liberties as those of Chislet and Sturry. Edward III, in his 5th year, exempted the Abbat's homagers and tenants of this, among other of their manors, from their attendance at the Sheriff's Tourne, of which see vol. iii. of this hist. p. 613 (x). (z) Cornegavel. This, according to the composition above mentioned, was a rent paid on the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, of 26s. 6d. for every suling or plowland of 4 of the 47 sulings, and for the moiety and quarter part of another suling, which is 997 acres, reckoning each suling to consist of 210 acres, as the composition says it did. This land lies in the parishes of St. John and Minster, and in King James I.'s reign was reckoned to be but 823 acres. Besides this payment in money, there used likewise to be paid for every suling, at the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, 15 quarters and 5 bushels of principal barley, and 15 quarters and 5 bushels of oats, to be delivered at the granary of the Abbat and Convent at their monastery, at the coits and charges of the tenants, or by paying for every acre of

At Minster, at the time of high market, they beat and abused the Abbat's men and servants, and raising a tumult, hindered the bailiffs from keeping the courts there. At the same time they entered into a confederacy and raised money here by tallages and assessments, by means of which they drew to them no small number of others of the Cinque Ports, who had nothing to lose, so that the Abbat did not dare to sue for justice in the King's Courts; but a method it seems was found to punish these rioters, or at least the principal of them, who were fined to the Abbat for these damages 600l. a vast sum in those days, and were imprisoned at Canterbury till the fine was paid (x).

However, the uneasiness of the tenants under such respective suits and services, seems to have occasioned the Abbat and Convent to have compounded with them, which they did in the year 1441, anno 20 Henry VI. By this composition the Abbat and Convent agreed, that the tenants should not in future be distrained for the rents and services they used to pay; but instead of them should pay for every acre of the land called Cornegavel, sixpence halfpenny; and for every acre of land called the Pennygavel, three-pence; and that the defaulters in not appearing at the high court of St. Augustine at Canterbury, instead of 6s. 8d. should pay but 12d. (y) which composition for the Cornegavel and Pennygavel land, continues in force at this time, only that 6d. an acre instead of 6½d. is now paid for the Cornegavel land (z).

In the time of K. Richard II. this manor, with its rents and other appurtenances, was valued, the said 4 sulings, eight-pence. They were likewise to do service at the court of Minster every three weeks, to pay a rent or present, viz. of hogs, geese, and hens, on the feast of St. Martin in the winter; to pay 55 shillings on the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula towards the romescot, and to a service called garberde, as it was used to be paid by the rentals.

Pennygavel, was a rent paid yearly to the Abbat and Convent on the feast of St. Martin, in the winter, of 19s. 8d. for every suling of 42 sulings and a quarter in the parishes of St. John, St. Peter, and St. Laurence, and a proportionable sum for every acre of 38 acres of the same land; all this, as it seems, came at that time to 8977 acres, whereas it was computed in King James I.'s time at 6256 acres only. Besides this payment in money, this land used then to pay yearly on the feast of the annunciation of St. Mary, for every one of the said sulings another payment of 16 shillings and eight pence, and 2 quarters and an half of good barley, to be delivered at the granary of the Abbat, &c. at Minster, before sun set, or else to pay for every quarter of the said barley 6s. 8d. The tenants were likewise to pay for every suling of the land 50 eggs, and proportionably for every part; to do suit and service at the court at Minster every 3 weeks, and to pay a relief on the death of every person seized of any part of this land or any alienation made of it, viz. for every acre two-pence. Besides these rents, the tenants of this manor used to pay Avercorne to the Abbat and Convent, but this being paid in an uncertain measure, it was agreed by the Abbat and Convent, at the petition of the tenants,

King Edward VI, in his 6th year, demised to firme to Sir John Gate, knt. vice chamberlain of his household, his manor of Minster, with all its rights, members, and appurtenances, late belonging to St. Augustine's Monastery, and his mansion and edifices on the same, and the scite of it; and his tenement, and lands with appurtenances within the said manor, lately belonging to the office of treasurer of the said monastery; and his lands lying at Hoo, late belonging to the office of Almoner there; and the lands, rents and farms belonging to the late office of keeper of the chapel of St. Mary, in the nave of the church of the monastery aforesaid. (k) The Court Lodge, formerly a part of the nunnery, was, after the dissolution of it, made use of as a farm house, in which some of the monks of St. Augustine resided, to manage the estate of it, which they kept in their own hands. On the north side of it, which seems to have been the front or entrance, is a handsome stone portal, on the top of which, in the middle, within a circle, are the arms of the Abbey of St. Augustine, viz. Sable, a cross argent; on each side of the shield is an antient letter seemingly a Ⓒ and an Ⓐ. At a small distance from it stood antiently a very large barn, sufficient to hold the corn growing on all the demesnes, being in length 352 feet, and in breadth 47 feet, and the height of the walls 12 feet, with a roof of chesnut. When the estate was divided, 154 feet in length of this building was carried to Seven score farm, where it was burnt, by an accident unknown in 1700, and the remaining part here was burnt by lightning afterwards. James's grant to sir Philip Carey, William Pitt, esq; and John Williams, goldsmith, as has been mentioned in the account of that manor; they in the year 1620, joined in the sale of them, containing 35 acres in Minster and St. Laurence, to Jeffry Sandwell, of Monkton, gent. who purchased sundry other lands, containing upwards of 100 acres, of different persons in this parish, Monkton, and Bircbington, the whole of which he sold, in the year 1658, to John Peters, M. D. Philip Le Keuse, and Samuel Vincent, which two latter alienated their shares soon afterwards to Dr. Peters; at which time all these lands together, not only comprehended Waschebester farm, but likewise part, if not the whole of another called Acol. From Dr. Peters this estate descended to Peter Peters, of Canterbury, M. D. who died seised of it in 1697, upon which the inheritance of it descended to his sole daughter and heir Elizabeth, who in 1722 carried it in marriage to Tho. Barrett, of Lee, esq; whose second wife she was; he died possessed of it in 1757, upon which it descended to their only daughter and heir Elizabeth, who entitled her husband, the Rev. Wm Dejevas Byrbe, to the fee of it (n). He died in 1792, leaving an only daughter Elizabeth, married to Samuel Egerton Brydges, of the Middle Temple, esq; Barrister at Law, who in her right is now possessed of it; on whose issue, by this marriage, this estate is by the settlement made on it entailed.

is an estate lying somewhat less than a mile westward from Waschebester, in the the hamlet of Hoo in this parish; it was formerly called Sberiff's Hope, from the Hope, or place of anchorage for ships which sailed in the river Wantsume, which once ran close by this place. It is said by some to have taken its name from its having been part of the possessions of Reginald de Corn-the house stood a chapel, said to have been built by St. Eadburga, the third Abbess here. In it the body of St. Mildred is said to have been placed by her, or rather translated from the other monastery. Some of the walls and foundations of this chapel were remaining within the memory of some not long since deceased, but it is now so entirely demolished, that there is nothing to be seen of it, excepting a small part of the tower, and of the stairs leading up into it. Just by these ruins of the tower is a small piece of ground, in which lately in digging for mould, several human bones were dug up. There is a view of the remains of this nunnery in Lewis's Thanet, p. 76.

His descendant sir Edward Wotton, knt. procured his lands in this county to be disgavelled by the acts both of 31 Henry VIII, and 2 and 3 K. Edward VI, and from him this manor descended to his grandson sir Edward Wotton, of Boughton Malherb, knt. who, in the 1st year of K. James I, was created Lord Wotton, Baron of Marley in this county. Thomas, Lord Wotton, his son and heir, dying anno 6 Charles I, without male issue, his four daughters became his coheirs (q), of whom Catherine the eldest carried this estate in marriage to Henry, Lord Stanhope, son and heir of Philip, Earl of Chesterfield, who died in his life time, upon which his widow Catherine, Lady Stanhope, became again seised of it in her own right. She sold it to Henry Paramor (r), who left it to his brother Thomas Paramor, who at his death in 1621, was succeeded in it by his only surviving son Henry Paramor, esq; who married Mary, daughter and heir of Thomas Garth, of London, esq; by whom he had a son Tho. Paramor, esq; who died seised of it in 1652, and was buried with his ancestors in this church (s); from his heirs this estate was

See vol. i. of this history, p. lxxx. The arms of Reginald de Cornbill are on the stone roof of the cloysters at Canterbury, being 2 lions passant, debruised of a bendlet, impaling 3 piles. Thorn in his Chron. Dec. Script. col. 2027, says that one Gervas Shereve, (perhaps le Stereve, so called from this office,) gave six marks of free rent to the Abbat of St. Augustine's, at Hoo, in Menestre. This Gervas might be Gervas de Cornbill, who was sheriff of this county from the 15th to the 19th year, inclusive, of King Henry II, and ancestor of Reginald above-mentioned, and most probably owner of this estate.

(r) He was the tenant and occupier of Sheriff's Court, being the eldest son of John Paramor, of Preston, the grandson of Thomas Paramor, of Paramour-street, in Ash, near Sandwich. This Henry dying without issue, made his brother Thomas, of Fordwich, his heir, who had been mayor of Canterbury in 1607; he married first, Anne, daughter of Michael Hougham, of Ash, by whom he had 3 sons and 2 daughters; and secondly, Mary, daughter of Richard Sampson, of London, widow of Thomas Garth, esq; of London. His eldest son Henry Paramor was of this parish, and by Mary his wife, left Thomas Paramor, of Monkton, esq; who alienated to Thatcher, in which name it continued, till at length it was sold by one of them (t) to Mr. Robert Wilkins, of St. Margaret's, Rochester, gent. who possessed it for many years. He died without issue, and it has since become the property of Mrs. Terry, the present owner of it.

To this manor is appurtenant the small manor of Pegwell, or Court Stairs, in the parish of St. Laurence.

ALDELOND GRANGE,

usually called Allen Grange, situated about a mile northward from Minster church, on the open high land, was so called in opposition to Newland Grange in St. Laurence parish.

It was antiently part of the possessions of the Abbey of St. Augustine, near Canterbury, and was in the year 1197, assigned by Roger, the Abbat of it, to the sacristy of the abbey, for the purpose of upholding and maintaining the abbey church, as well in the fabric as ornaments, but on the condition that the sacrist for the time being, should perform all such services to the court of Minster as were due, and had been accustomed to be done for the land of it (u).

The measurement of this land, according to Thorne, amounted to 62 acres (v); and to this Grange belong all the tythes of corn and grain, within the limits of the borough of Wayborough, excepting those which are received by the vicar. On the dissolution of the Abbey of St. Augustine, in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, this estate came, with the rest of the possessions of the monastery, into the King's hands (w), where it did of a family which took their name from it, one of them, Henry de Thorne, was owner of it in the year 1300, anno 29 Edward I, and resided here (e); against whom it seems complaint was made to the Abbat of St. Augustine, that he caused mass to be publicly said in his private oratory, or chapel, at this his manor of Thorne, (apud spinam) (f), to the prejudice of the mother church, and the ill example of others; and he accordingly inhibited him from so doing in future, by his letters to the Vicar of Minster, dated that year (g).

After this family of Thorne were become extinct here, that of Gosball, of Gosball in Asb, appear to have been possessors of this manor; in whom it continued till about the reign of K. Henry IV, when it went by marriage by a female heir to one of the family of St. Nicholas, in whose descendants it continued down to Roger St. Nicholas, who died in 1474, and as appears by his will, was buried before the image of St. Nicholas in the chancel of Thorne at Minster, and left Roger St. Nicholas his son and heir, who left an only daughter Elizabeth, who entitled her husband John Dynley, of Charlton in the co. of Worcester, esq; to the possession of it. By her he had two sons Henry and Edward, the eldest of whom succeeded to this manor, which he afterwards alienated, about the middle of Q. Elizabeth's reign, to John Roper, of Linsted, esq; who was afterwards knighted and created Baron of Teynbam anno 14 James I, in whose descendants it continued down to Henry, Lord Teynbam, who, about the year 1705, by bargain and sale inrolled in chancery, conveyed this manor of Thorne, alias Thourne, with its appurtenances in Minster and St. Laurence in Thanet, containing 472 acres, and likewise 88 acres of land, parcel of this manor, in the parishes of St. Laurence and Minster, to sir Henry Furnese of Walderbare, bart. who died possessed of this estate in 1712, and was succeeded in it by his son sir Robert Furnese, bart. and he in 1714, made a settlement of it on his marriage with his 2d wife Arabella Watson, one of the daughters of Lewis, Lord, afterwards Earl of Rockingham, whom he survived, having had issue by her a son Henry, his successor in title and estates, who dying in 1735, under age and unmarried, this manor descended in like manner as Powcies last described, to Anne, sir Henry's eldest sister, who entitled her husband John, Viscount St. John, to the possession of it (h); whose grandson, the present Right Hon. George, Viscount Bolingbroke, in 1790, alienated it to Mr. Henry Wooton, the present owner of it (i).

Richard Newman, of Canterbury, esq; by his will proved 1627, devised his manor, lands and tenements in Minster, to his brother George in tail general, remainder to his brother James in like tail, remainder to his three sisters in fee (k).

(e) Under the cross in this church, in the north wall of it, is an antient tomb or coffin of solid stone, let into the wall under an arch of antient Saxon ornaments. On the stone which covers the tomb is a cross flory, on each side of which are two blank shields, and round the edge of the stone these words in old French letters: Ici gist Edila de Thorne, que fust Dna del Espine. This seems probable to have been one of the family, owners of this manor; above is a drawing of it.

(f) The remains of this chapel are still so entire as to be made use of as a granary, &c.

PRESENT STATE OF MINSTER.

THIS PARISH is about three miles and an half from east to west, and near as much from north to south. The farms in it are perhaps as large as in any other parish in this county; the occupiers of which are, in general, men of considerable ability. The west part of this parish is bounded by a lynch or balk, which goes quite across the island to Westgate, called St. Mildred's Lynch, an account of which has already been given above, and which is the bounds of this manor from that of Monkton, as well as of the parish (l). The village of Minster lies nearly in the centre of it, on low ground at the foot of the high lands, having the church on the south side of it; northward of the village it rises to high land, being a fine open champion country of uninclosed corn land, on which are situated Minster Mill, Allan Grange, and Powcies, the latter at the extremity of the parish, close to which was, till lately, a small grove of oaks, the only one in this island. Lower down, about a mile southward, is Tborne manor, and beyond that Sevenscore farm. At the south-eastern extremity of the parish, and partly in St. Laurence, is Cliffsend, or Chyvesend, so called from its being at the end of the cliff, which extends from Ramsgate; it was antiently a part of the estate of St. Augustine's Monastery, and is called by Tborne, in his Chronicle, the manor of Chyvesend. Here are now two considerable farms besides cottages.

About a mile and an half south-east from Minster church, is Ebbsfleet, formerly called by the various names of Hipwines, Ippeds, and Wipped's fleet; this seems to have been a usual place of landing from the ocean in this island; here it is said Hengist and Horsa, the two Saxon Generals,

(l) This lynch has formerly been much broader than it is now, many of the farmers, who occupy lands bounding on or near it, having through a covetous humour, not only dug up the mould or top of it, to lay on their land, but in some places have ploughed upon it. Too many instances of this kind are practised in other places, not only of this island, but of the county in general, so that there is scarce a remembrance left where those balks or lynchets have been; such has the greedy avarice of the occupiers been, and this is one instance of the ill consequence of the neglect of the Courts Leet and Baron.

(m) Leland's Col. vol. iv, p. 8. Thorn, in his Chronicle says, that in the year 1266, the inhabitants of Stonore and Sandwich rented two water-mills of the Abbat of St. Augustine, one at Stonore and the other at Hepesflete. Dec. Script. col. 1915.

(n) A part of the marsh lands have been much improved by means of shortening the course of the river Stour to the first landed with their forces, about the year 449. Here St. Augustine, often called the Apostle of the English, first landed, in the year 596; and here too St. Mildred, of whom mention has been made likewise above, first landed from France, where she had been for instruction in the monastic life; and not many years ago there was a small rock at this place, called St. Mildred's rock, where, on a great stone, her footstep was said, by the monkish writers, to have remained impressed (m). Below the church of Minster, southward, is the large level of marshes, called Minster Level, at the southern extremity of which runs the river Stour, formerly the Wantsume, which, as has been already noticed above, was antiently of a much greater depth and width than it is at present, flowing up over the whole space of this level, most probably almost to the church-yard fence, being near a mile and an half distance (n); but the inning of the salts by the landholders, which had been in some measure deserted by the waters of the Wantsume at different places, so far lessened the force of the tide, and of the river waters mixing with it, that it occasioned the sands to increase greatly near this place, where it was at length entirely choaked up, so that a wall of earth was made by the Abbat of St. Augustine, since called the Abbat's wall (o), to prevent the sea at high-water overflowing the lands, which now comprehend this great level of marshes, at present under the direction and management of the Commissioners of Sewers for the district of East Kent. Between this wall and the river Stour lie a great many acres of land, which the inhabitants call the salts, from their being left without the wall, and subject to the overflowing of the tide, so long as it continued to flow all round this island. Over against the church is a little creek, which seems to have been the place antiently called Mynstre fleet, into which the ships or vessels came, which were bound for this place (p). Concerning this fleet a long contest was carried on between the Abbat of St. Augustine and the sea, by the cut at Stonar, which lets off the superfluous water in wet seasons with greater expedition, and a very valuable tract of near 200 acres has been lately inclosed by a strong wall from the sea near Ebbsfleet.

(o) When this wall was built, is very uncertain; but we find that King Edward I, in the 16th year of his reign, directed his precept to Edmond de Passelle, John de Isfeld, and Stephen de la Dene, whom he constituted justices to enquire into the damages done by the overflowing of the sea and fresh water, in the marshes of Monkton and Menstre. By virtue of this precept, the sheriff was commanded to summon 24 men, as well knights as others, to enquire into the premises. Dugdale's Imbank, p. 36.

(p) As a proof of this, there was found some years ago in a dyke bounding on this place, in digging it somewhat deeper than usual, some fresh coals, which very probably had fallen aside some lighter or boat in taking them out of it. Lewis's Thanet, p. 77.

RINGSLOW HUNDRED.

Prior of Christ Church, owner of Sandwich, and of the lands on the other side of the river; which dispute was at last amicably determined in 1242 (q).

In the 21st year of K. Edward I, anno 1293, the Jury presented before the Justices Itinerant, that Roger, late Abbat of St. Augustine's monastery, the then Abbat's predecessor, obstructed 20 years before, a certain fleet of the sea in the town of Minster, through which ships used to pass with much ware and merchandize to the said town; and that the then Abbat kept the fleet obstructed to the King's damage, and the nuisance of the country. Afterwards the Abbat came and pleaded, that the Abbat, his predecessor, had made this fleet in his own proper soil, through which small boats used to come to the above-mentioned town; therefore what obstruction had been made was made in his own land (r).

At the same time the Jurors of the hundreds of Ringslow, Blengate, and Wengbam, declared on their oaths, that the aforesaid fleet used to be open, time out of mind, in the soil of the Abbat, and that it was not opened or made by manual labour or art, but by the rage or force of the sea, and that small ships or boats used to come to it; and that the Prior of Christ Church in Canterbury, when the fleet was open, used to take in the stream of the water, or river Stoure, before the mouth of the fleet, a certain custom, which was called selynge, of every small boat which came to an anchor before the mouth of the fleet, on account of the liberty of his manor of Sandwich, which was then in the King's hands, till for these 20 years last past; from which time the Abbat had obstructed or dammed up the fleet.

But perhaps this obstruction was the Abbat's casting up the wall above-mentioned, to inn the land on the falling away and decay of the water about this time, which still continuing, occasioned probably the dropping of this suit. However this be, at a small distance eastward of this fleet, there are two little hills, some small space from each other, called by the inhabitants Boxlege-bill, and Wetherleeze-bill, which seem to have been made by the sea, when it overflowed this level, the ground of them being all sand and sea beach (s).

I ought not to omit mentioning, that on the downs on the north part of this parish, where the old and present windmills were placed, is a prospect, which perhaps is hardly exceeded in this part of the kingdom. From this place may be seen, not only this island and the several churches in it, one only excepted; but there is a view at a distance, of the two spires of Reculver, the Island of Sheppy, the Nore, or mouth of the river Thames, the coast of Essex, the Swale, and the British channel; the cliffs of Calais, and the kingdom of France; the Downs, and the town of Deal, the bay and town of Sandwich, the fine champion country of East Kent, the spires of Woodnesborough and Asb, the ruins of Richborough castle, the beautiful green levels of Minster, Asb, &c. with the river Stour winding between them; the fine and stately tower of the cathedral of Canterbury, and a compass of hills of more than 100 miles in extent, which terminate the sight.

In the marshes on the south of this parish, there was found in 1723, an antique gold ring; on the place of the seal, which seemed to represent an open book, was engraved on one side an angel, seemingly kneeling, and on the other side a woman standing with a glory round her head; on the woman's side was engraved in old English characters, hone; on that of the angel, letters of the same character, but illegible.

A fair is kept in this village on a Good Friday for pedlary and toys.

By the return made to the Council's Letter, by Archbishop Parker's order, in the year 1563, there were then computed to be in this parish 53 households. By an exact account taken of Minster in 1774, there were found to be in this parish 149 houses, and 696 inhabitants; of the houses, 16 were farm-houses, and 133 were inhabited by tradesmen, labourers, and widows.

CHARITIES.

The occupier of Salmeston Grange in St. John's parish, is bound by his lease, to distribute to six poor inhabitants of the parish of Minster, to be nominated by the minister and churchwardens, in the first week, and on the middle Monday of Lent, to each of them, nine loaves and eighteen herrings; and to three poor people of the same, to each of them, two yards of blanket; and every Monday and Friday in each week, from the Invention of the Holy Cross to the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, to every poor person coming to Salmeston Grange, one dishfull of peas dressed (t).

Thomas Appleton, of Eastry, yeoman, by his will proved 1593, gave to the relief of the poor of this parish, the sum of 5l. to be paid to the churchwardens yearly, and to be distributed by them to the use of the poor people, inhabitants there, 14 days before Christmas day, the same to be paid out of certain lands belonging to him, called Hardiles, in the parish of Woodnesborough (b).

RINGSLOW HUNDRED.

Richard Clerk, D. D. Vicar of Minster, partly by deed, on January 25, 1625, and partly by his will, proved on Nov. 6, 1634, gave 100l. by the former, and 20l. by the latter, to be lent unto four several parishioners of this parish; sober men of good and honest conversation, born in Minster, whose fathers were deceased, and they not sufficiently stocked, for the term of one, two, or three years, but not exceeding that; the interest arising from it to be divided among the poor of the parish (v).

But it having been found difficult to carry the intention of the donor into execution, the trustees, at several times, purchased houses with the money, which are at present divided into four tenements, besides the parish work-house, called the seoffees houses; and seven other tenements were either bought or built by them, called Cheap Row, the rent of which is annually distributed in clothing to the poor persons of the parish of Minster. They are all at present let to the churchwardens and overseers of Minster for the time being, by a lease of 99 years, from Oct.

(v) By the will he devised 20l. to the churchwardens, to be freely lent on fit security to any young, poor beginner there, to help his stock, to have it for three years, and then to repay it, to be lent to a new man.

(w) When the Danes plundered and burnt the Abbey of Minster, they seem in their rage to have spared the two chapels of St. Mary, and of St. Peter and St. Paul, or however the stone work of them was preserved, and not burnt with the roof and other works of timber. The former of these was afterwards made into the present parish church, and has since been considerably enlarged. The nave or body of the church seems to have been the old building; the pillars of which are thick and short, and the arches all circular, and a low roof was probably upon them, according to the simplicity and plainness of those times; But since the wall has been built higher, as appears by the distance; there is betwixt the top of the arches and the wall plate, a cross; and an handsome chancel added at the east end, and a square tower on the west, with a high spire covered with lead placed on it. The chancel or choir and the middle of the cross are vaulted, and by the footings which are left, it was certainly intended that the whole cross should have been finished in the same manner. The 18 stalls mentioned above, have very handsome wainscot behind, according to the mode of those times; in these the monks, vicars, and priests used to sit during the performance of divine service. Besides the high altar in this church, there were before the reformation other altars in it, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, St. James, and St. Anne. At these, as likewise before the Holy Cross, were lights constantly burning; for the maintenance of which, there were societies or fellowships, who contributed towards the maintenance of them, and those who died left in their last wills constantly small sums of money for that purpose. Under the middle of the cross was the rood-loft, the going up to which out of the chancel is yet to be seen, as are the mortice holes in which the timbers were put on which the loft was built. On the north wall of it is the antient tomb of Edile de Thorne, an account and drawing of which has been given above, p. 324. On the pavement, as well as in the church porch, are several large flat grave-stones, the inscriptions, if any

John Carey, of Stanwell, in the co. of Middlesex, esq; by will, Sept. 20, 1685, gave 10l. per annum, to be paid yearly to the churchwardens, out of his farm of Sevenscore in this parish; to be disposed of by them to the poor thereof yearly, on St. Thomas's day.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.

THIS PARISH is within the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Canterbury and deanry of Westbere. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a very handsome structure, consisting of a nave and two side isles, a cross sept, and east chancel; the nave is of Saxon, the transept and chancel of Gotbic, architecture; the last is curiously vaulted with stone, and provision was made for the same in the transept, but it was never completed (w). In it are 18 collegiate stalls, on them, entirely worn away; they seem very antient, and are not improbably, memorials of some of the religious of this place, but they do not seem always to have lain where they do now. On the front of the tower of the steeple is a shield, carved in the stone work, viz. A fess, between 3 lion's passant. Among other memorials in this church, in the chancel is one for Francis Saunders, esq; captain of a select company in the island of Tbanet, son and heir to Edward Saunders, of Norbourne Court, gent. which Edward married the female heir of Francis Pendrick, esq; grandmother to this Francis, and nurse to Queen Elizabeth, which Francis Saunders married Frances, daughter to Sir Adam Sprackling, knight, who had six sons and three daughters, and died anno 1643, æt. 66. Arms—A chevron between 3 elephant's heads, impaling a saltier ermine, between 3 leopard's faces. A memorial for John Blaxland, of Minster, yeoman, who married first, Katharine, daughter of Henry Archer, and had two sons and one daughter; he married secondly, Mary, daughter of John Sommers, and had by her one son; he married thirdly, Sibel, daughter of Stephen Tomlin, and had by her one son and one daughter, obiit 1649, æt. 48. In the middle isle is a memorial for Thomas, only son of William Jenken, who married twice, first Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony Curling, and had five sons and one daughter; 2dly, Margaret, daughter of Henry Jenkin, by whom he had three sons and one daughter, obiit 1666, æt. 49. A plain mural monument fixed on the east side of the south pillar of the cross next the nave, for Bartholomew Sanders, gent. and Mary his wife, daughter of Henry Oxenden, of Wingham, esq; deceased, having had four sons and two daughters; in memory of whose parents Henry Saunders, esq; their eldest son, who married Jane, the eldest daughter of Thomas Paramore, esq; erected this monument. Arms—Per chevron sable and argent, 3 elephant's heads, counterchanged, impaling argent, a chevron between 3 oxen, sable. On a mural monument on the west wall of the north end of the cross, are the effigies of a man and woman, kneeling at a desk, in a praying posture, with an inscription for Thomas Paramore, esq; sometime mayor of Canterbury, and Anne his first wife, by whom he had three sons and two daughters, of whom Henry, the surviving son, married Mary, daughter and heir

The church of Minster was antiently appendant to the manor of Minster, and as such was granted with it, first to Domneva, and afterwards became part of the possessions of the Abbey founded by her here; and after the destruction of it came with the manor, by K. Cnute's grant, to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, to which is became appropriated in the year 1128, anno 29 Henry I, and was at that time assigned, with the chapels of St. John, St. Peter, and St. Laurence, with all rents, tythes, and other things, to the said church and chapels, belonging to the sacristy of that monastery; which regulation was confirmed by Archbishop Theobald (z), and af-

In the year 1176, anno 23 Henry II, the tenants of the Halimot, or Manor Court of Minster, agreed, that from thenceforth they would all cop their corn; and that they and their heirs, then and for ever afterwards, should pay all their tythes lawfully by cops, and all other matters of tythes, which they were accustomed to pay, as amply as they had ever paid them from the time of the dedication of the church of St. Mary of Menstre; and they bound themselves to keep and maintain without any evasion, for ever, all liberties whatsoever, which Roger, the then Abbat, found this Abbey seized of, as well as all years. A memorial for Henry Harnett, obiit 1720, et. 15 years. A memorial for Robert Kennett, of this parish, yeoman, obiit 1720, et. 77. Mariae in Thanet, cujus Tumba Crescit signis*. See his Collect. vol. iv, p. 7.

William Denwood, of this parish, by his will, proved 1612, ordered his body to be buried in the south chancel of this church, near the place where his grandfather Parker was buried, with a stone to be laid over, in height sufficient to write on, and to join to the wall there. On the top of the spire was formerly a globe, and upon that a great wooden cross, covered with lead, over which was a vane, and above that, an iron cross; but about the year 1647, the noted fanatic Richard Culmer having got the sequestration of this vicarage, took it into his fancy that these were monuments of superstition and idolatry, and got these crosses demolished by two persons of the parish, whom he had hired, after he had himself before day, by moon light, fixed ladders for them to go up and down, from the square of the tower to the top of the spire. But if all the figures of a cross are monuments of idolatry, and to be removed, the poor carter had done his work but by halves, or rather not at all, when he took down these from the spire and left the church standing, which is itself built in the form of a cross.

services which they owed to any of his predecessors (b).

On an agreement entered into in the year 1182, between Archbishop Richard, and Roger, Abbat of St. Augustine's, relating to the churches appropriated to the Abbey, it was stipulated, that this church should be exempted from the payments of all dues and procurations to the Archdeacon (c); and that same year the Archbishop confirmed this church to the monastery (d). The above agreement was renewed in the year 1237, by Archbp. Edmund, in which it was recited, that this church and its chapels should be in future free, as well from the dues as the procuration of the Archdeacon and his officials, and be for ever free from all suspension and interdict of the ordinaries, saving their jurisdiction over the clergy and people of the same (e); and it was further granted, that the Abbat and Convent should present to the Archbishop, in the chapels of St. Peter, St. John, and St. Laurence, fit perpetual chaplains to the altarages therein, provided those several altarages were worth ten marcs, with which the chaplains should be content, on pain of forfeiting the same (f); especially as the Vicar of the mother church of Menstre, who had a sufficient vicarage taxed from antient time in the same, would take and receive in right of his vicarage, the tenths of small tythes, viz. of lambs and pigs, and the obventions arising from marriages and churchings, which were forbid at the chapels, and were solemnized, &c. at the mother church only, and the burials of certain corpses, being those of the tenants or occupiers (d) Dec. Script. col. 1837. About the year 1185, Pope Urban III. confirmed the church of Minster to the above mentioned Abbey. Ibid. col. 1838.

(f) This part of the revenue of the vicarage of Minster has long since been lost, except that out of Salmeston Grange is paid to it 10s. a year; which, perhaps, might be a composition for the tenths of the small tythes, &c. in the said chapelries of St. Peter, St. John, and St. Laurence.

(g) Dec. Script. Thorn, col. 1882. These altarages were the customary and voluntary offerings at the altar, for some religious office or service of the priest. To augment these, the regular and secular priests invented many things. For it is to be observed, that only a portion of these offerings, to the value of 10 marcs, or 6l. 13s. 4d. was what the chaplains of these three chapels were presented to, and that they were accountable for the residue to the Abbat and Convent, and that if they presumed to detain any more of these offerings beyond that sum, they were to be deprived even of that. For this reason, they were to swear to the Abbat and Convent, to give a true account of the offerings made at their several altars, on their respective offering days, and in no shape to detriment their parish of Menstre, as to legacies or obventions, personal or predial, but to conserve all the parochial rights of the same, entire and untouched, to the utmost of their power. Ten marcs appear now but a small sum for the maintenance of a parish minister; but when the of lands in these chapelries, who were to be buried at Minster, unless the Vicar gave leave to the contrary. At the same time the Archbishop, with the consent of the Archdeacon, confirmed this church to the Abbat and Convent, together with the several archiepiscopal confirmations, and those of the several Kings of England, made of this church to the monastery, together with its chapels, and the tythes which it had received by reason of them, of antient time, and all their appurtenances, notwithstanding the dispute carried on by his predecessors, to be retained to their uses by them peaceably for ever (g).

On the great and principal festivals, the inhabitants of these three chapelries of St. Peter, St. John, and St. Laurence, preceded by their priests and other officers, with their banners, tapers, &c. were used to go in procession to Minster, their mother church, there to join at the solemn mass and other divine service then performed, to make their offerings and pay their accustomed dues, in token of their subjection to their parochial or mother church (b).

At this time there was an annual pension of 12 shillings payable from this church, and the three chapels belonging to it of antient time, to the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine; which, with the other pensions from their several churches, was given up by agreement, anno 1242, between Robert, Abbat of it, and Simon Langton, Archdeacon of Canterbury, sede vacante, for a composition to be received by them out of the profits of the church of Preston (i).

value of money at the time when this composition was made is considered, it will be found to be a handsome and generous allowance to a chaplain, especially as their stipends were then paid by authority; ten marcs were then equal to more than 60l. now, and in a council held at Oxford but 15 years before, it was decreed, that where the churches had a revenue as far as 5 marcs per annum, they should be conferred on none but such as should constantly reside in person, on the place, as being a sufficient maintenance. In 1348, H. Knighton informs us, a chaplain's usual stipend was no more than 4 or 5 marcs, or two and his board; as for the chaplains of these 3 chapels, though they were to receive no more than 10 marcs of these altarages, they were not excluded the enjoyment of the manes and glebes, given to these chapels when they were first consecrated, which made some addition to their income, and perhaps enabled them to keep a deacon to assist them. See Kennet's Parochial Antiquities. Lewis's Hist. of Thanet, p. 96.

(b) A mother church was formerly reckoned the more honorable, for being branched out into one or more subordinate chapels, and therefore was sometimes called plebania, and reputed a dignity, or at least somewhat above or greater than a rectory. Therefore by law, there was a greater regard had to mother churches than to chapels, as there was more respect paid to *abbey*s and religious houses, than to parish churches; the penalty of their violation being apportioned to their dignity. Kennet's Parochial Antiq. p. 603. Lewis's Hist. of Thanet, p. 97.

(i) Dec. Script. Thorn, col. 1891.

In the year 1301, Thomas Fyndon, then Abbat of St. Augustine, took upon him to ordain several new deanries, consisting of the several churches, which were of the patronage of his convent; one of these he named the Deanry of Minster, in which he comprehended the several churches of Menstre, St. Peter, St. John, St. Laurence, of Stonore, Chislete, Swaleclive, and of Westbere, all of the patronage of his convent. But this ordination raising great contests between the Abbats and the several Archbishops, and the Pope deciding in favour of the latter, these new deanries were entirely dissolved (k). In the year 1384, anno 8 Rich. II, this church was valued among the spiritualities of St. Augustine's Abbey at 133l. 6s. 8d. (l)

The appropriation of the church of Minster, together with the advowson of the vicarage, continued with the Abbat and Convent till the dissolution of their monastery in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when it was surrendered, together with the rest of the possessions of the monastery, into the King's hands. After the dissolution of the monastery, there could not be said to be any parsonage or appropriation of this church, for the demesne lands of the manor of Minster, which are very extensive in this parish, are subject, as to the tythes of corn, to only a small modus or composition to the Vicar, of 18 shocks or cops of wheat, and 18 shocks or cops of barley, or thereabouts; and the Vicar is intitled, in right of his vicarage, to the corn tythes of the lands in the remaining part of the parish, as will be further noticed below.

When the vicarage of this church was endowed and a Vicar instituted, is no where found; but certainly it was before the year 1275; for in the act of consecration of the church or chapel-yard of St. Laurence that year, when that chapel was made parochial, mention is made of the Vicar of Menstre, &c. and in the year 1384, anno 8 Richard II, this vicarage was valued at 30 marks. After the dissolution of the Abbey of St. Augustine, the advowson of this vicarage continued in the hands of the crown, till K. Edward VI, on June 12, in his first year, granted it, among other premises, to Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury (m); since which it has continued parcel of the possessions of that see, his Grace the Archbishop being the present patron of it.

This vicarage is valued in the King's books at 33l. 3s. 4d. and the yearly tenths at 3l. 6s. 8d. (n) In 1588 here were 300 communicants, and it was valued at 150l.

It is endowed with a manse and glebe of about 24 acres of land, upland and marsh (o); all the corn tythes, and other tythes of that part of the parish called Street-borough; and of about 100 acres in the other borough, called Weyborough, except the corn tythes of the demesnes of the manor of Minster, for which the modus or composition above-mentioned is paid.

The land in Minster Level, which is pasture, paying but 4d. an acre for tythes, Dr. Richard Clarke, who was Vicar here in 1597, made a composition with his parishioners, the first year of his admission, by which they obliged themselves to pay him at the vicarage house, within three days after every quarter, after the rate of 12d. an acre for their marsh-land, or else to lose the benefit of the composition (p). Dr. Meric Casaubon, who succeeded Dr. Clarke, would not abide by this composition of 12d. an acre, but demanded the tythes of the marsh-land in kind, but afterwards compounded with the occupiers, at the rate of 12d. an acre for the worst of the land, and of 14d. and 16d. for that which is better; and in the year 1638, he demanded his tythes of the marsh-land in kind, or 18d. per acre, which was agreed to by the parishioners, and paid by them till the year 1643; when the civil wars being begun, and this county in the power of the Parliament, Dr. Casaubon, being continually threatened to be turned out of his vicarage for his adherence to the King, was content to receive 1s. per acre for the marsh-land, at two payments; in which manner he received it till the end of the year 1644, when this vicarage was sequestered. When the doctor was sequestered, one Richard Culmer was put into possession of this vicarage (q), who to ingratiate himself with the parishioners, agreed to take no more than 12d. an acre of them, as did Dr. Casaubon in 1660, on his being restored to this vicarage, at which rate the tythes were afterwards uniformly taken, till the time of the present Vicar; the several Vicars not being disposed to quarrel with their neighbours, as they found they must do, if they raised their tythes, though the land now lets for as much again as it did in Dr. Casaubon's time, viz. at 28s. an acre and upwards. There have been several litigations and issues at law tried between the present Vicar, Mr. Dodsworth, and his parishioners, on account of this modus for the marshland, all which have been decided in the Vicar's favor (r). The present value of it is about 350l. per annum.

(p) According to this agreement, Dr. Clarke received in the year 1615, for 1579 acres, and in the year 1633, for 1665 acres of marsh land, at the rate of 12d. an acre; which was quarterly paid, according to this composition.

Archbishop Parker, in 1562, gave licence to John Butler, Vicar of Minster, to pull down the great barn on his vicarage, it being in a ruinous state; and there being another competent one for the use of the vicarage, to convert the materials to any other necessary use to the advantage of it.

BIRCHINGTON.

NORTHWARD from Minster lies the parish of Birchington, adjoining to the sea. It is said to have been antiently called, sometimes Birchington in Gorend, and at other times Gorend in Birchington, from a place called Gorend, in this parish, where it is reported the church for-

(x) In 1665, he was made a canon of Christ Church, and in 1672, Dean of Rochester.

(y) He was likewise rector of Chartham. See Wood's Ath. vol. ii, p. 874, and his life in Biog. Brit. vol. vii, p. 4197; his will was proved April 25, 1695, and is in Prerog. off. Cant.

(z) He was a native of Norfolk; in 1702 he was made canon of Christ Church, in Canterbury, and in 1708, Archdeacon of that diocese, at which time he was collated to the rectory of Adisham, when he resigned this vicarage; he was afterwards vicar of St. Martin's in the fields; Bishop of Norwich, and then Bishop of Ely. See Biog. Brit. vol. vii, appendix, p. 112.

(a) He was likewise vicar of St. John's, Margate, in Thanet; in 1719 he was made master of Eastbridge Hospital, in Canterbury; he died æt. 72, and lies buried in this church. See more of him, under St. John's, Margate.

(b) He held the rectory of Chart with this vicarage, by dispensation, dated Feb. 12, 1747, and resigned both for the rectory of Rocbdale, in the county of Lancaster.

(c) He is treasurer of the church of Salisbury, and a prebendary of York, and holds this vicarage with that of Doddington, in this county, by dispensation. See more of him, vol. ii. of this history, p. 696.

(d) By the Landtax Act of 1711, it was enacted, that in future, the parishes of St. John, St. Peter, and Birchington, in the Ile of Thanet, within the liberty of Dover, should be deemed and taken to be a distinct division within the said liberty, and in the executing of that act, should be charged towards making up the whole sum charged on the town of Dover, and the liberty thereof, according to the proportion which was assessed upon the said parishes by the act of the 4th of William and Mary, for granting an aid of 4s. in the pound, &c.

(e) In the antient map of this island, mentioned above, formerly belonging to St. Augustine's Monastery, and now in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, there is placed merly stood, though the most usual name was always, as it is at present, Birchington only.

This parish is within the liberty and jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, and is a member of the Town and Port of Dover; and though Gorend in it, is said to have been united to that town and port, ever since the reign of K. Edward I, yet in K. Henry VI.'s reign it was disputed whether this parish was not in the county at large; to take away therefore all doubt of it, the King, by letters patent, united it to Dover, the Mayor of which appoints a deputy here, to whom the inhabitants have recourse for justice (d).

The manor of Monkton claims paramount over this parish; subordinate which is or Quex, as is frequently spelt in the antient deeds of it. It is situated in the south-east part of this parish, about three-quarters of a mile from the church (e), and was antiently the seat of a family who gave name to it, many of whom lie buried in this church, some of whose grave-stones and inscriptions yet remain; among which are those of John Quex, who died possessed of it in the year 1449, anno 28 Henry VI, and of his son Richard Quex in 1456 (f); from the latter in the southern part of this parish, nearly about where Quekes stands, a seat called Parker, once belonging to a family of that name. By its situation, one would imagine it to have been this seat. The dates of the wills of John Parkere, and Cecilia Parkere, of this parish, are as old as the years 1411, and 1428, in which they appear to have been persons of very considerable substance.

(f) Richard Queke, of Birchington, by his will, proved in 1458, desired to be buried in the chancel of St. Mary of Birchington. John Queke, his father, William Manslon, and others, his feoffees, as well of his principal mansion as of his lands and tenements in Birchington, Monkton, and St. Nicholas de Wade, late his father's John Crispe, as those purchased by himself in Birchington, St. Nicholas at Wade, and All Saints, at Wade; he wills them to sell all the lands and tenements aforesaid, and his principal mansion aforesaid, late his said father's, to Roger Manslon, esq; and then for them to perform his said late father's will, viz. of 10 marks for the making of a window, with the glass belonging to it, in the above chancel; and he wills to John Malyn, and others his feoffees, all his lands and tenements, purchased by himself as aforesaid, as well to sell the same as to receive the money arising from the sale of the aforesaid lands of his father John Crispe, as aforesaid; his daughters Izabella and Juliana. He willed that Roger Manslon, jun. esq; supervisor of his will, should dispose of one part of the said monies to the church of Birchington, to those works which he had lately resolved on in the presence of divers of his neighbours in the said chancel, and in the making of images and the painting of the same, as far as it would go. Will, in Prerog. off. Cant.

Laurence Quke, of Birchington, by will proved in 1476, willed to be buried in the church-yard; his wife Maryan, to whom he gave all his lands and tenements, in Birchington and elsewhere; Joan, wife of John Cantey, his youngest daughter. Will, ibid. office.

of whom this feat devolved by paternal descent to John Quekes, esq; who about the beginning of K. Henry VII.'s reign, left an only daughter and heir Agnes, who carried it in marriage to John Crispe, esq; descended of an antient family seated at Stanlake in the co. of Oxford (g); he afterwards resided here, and died possessed of it in 1500, anno 16 Henry VII. He left issue by her four daughters, married to Barret, Gesborne, Thomas, and Symons; and one son and heir John Crispe, who was Sheriff of this county in the 10th year of K. Henry VIII, and kept his shrievalty at this seat of Quekes. He married Avice, daughter and heir of Thomas Denne, of Kingston; 2d son of John Denne, of Denne-bill, by whom he had issue three sons. John, the eldest, was of Cleve Court in Monkton, in this island, of whom further mention has been made in the description of that place; Henry, the second, was of Quekes; and William, the third, was Lieutenant of Dover Castle, and married Mary, daughter of Avery Randolph, of Badlesmere, by whom he left issue several children (b); and likewise two daughters (i).

Henry Crispe, the second son, of Quekes, esq; kept his shrievalty for this county at this seat in the 38th year of the above reign, an. 1546, being the last of it, and was a man of great name and eminency, and of singular estimation for his discretion and weight in the management of the public affairs of the county, as well as for his hospitality, insomuch that he was reputed to have the entire rule of all this island (k). He died at Quekes, at a good old age, in the year 1575, anno 18 Elizabeth, having been twice married; first to the daughter of Thomas Scott, of Scots Hall, esq; by whom he had a son George Crispe, esq; who though married, yet appears to have died without issue. His second wife was Anne, one of the daughters and heirs of John Hazlehurst, esq; (l) by whom he had six children (m); of whom Nicholas Crispe, esq; the eldest son, was of Grimgill in Whistaple, and married Frances, daughter of sir Thomas Cheney, of Skurland, knt.

(g) He was the second son of John Crispe, of Stanlake, esq; by his wife, the daughter of Nicholas Dyer, of Rotberfield, esq;

(b) She was his first wife—his second wife was Anne, daughter of John Brett, who died without issue. There is a pedigree of him and his descendants in the Heraldic visitation of the county of Kent, anno 1574.

He was Sheriff of this county in the 1st year of Q. Elizabeth, and died here in his father's life time, anno 1564 (n), leaving an only daughter Dorothy. John, the second son, married first, Margaret, daughter of Thomas Harlackenden, esq; who died without issue in 1576; and 2dly Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Roper, of Eltham, esq; who died in 1626, leaving a son Henry, heir to his grandfather, who will be further mentioned below. Edward was the third son; and Henry the youngest, who married Anne, daughter of Thomas Colepepyr, of Aylesford, esq; by whom he had three sons (o), viz. Henry, who was first of Great Chart, and afterwards succeeded to this seat of Quekes, of whom further mention will be made; Thomas, who was first of Canterbury and afterwards of Goudhurst, where he died in 1663, having married Anne, daughter of sir Tho. Roberts, of Glassenbury, knt. by whom he had three sons, Thomas, who at length succeeded to Quekes, as will be mentioned below; Henry, who was of Monkton, and died in 1678, being ancestor of Henry and Thomas Crispe, of the custom-house in London, and of West-Ham in Essex, esqrs. the latter of whom ended in an only surviving daughter Susan, who married the late Geo. Elliot, of Upon in Essex, esq; and Richard, the third son, who died without issue. Richard, the third son of Henry, by Anne Colepepyr, was of Maidstone, and ended in three daughters and coheirs, of whom Alice married Thomas Monins.

Now to return to Henry, the only son and heir of John, the second son of sir Henry Crispe, of Quekes, knt. by his second wife Anne Hazlehurst, who became his grandfather's heir and possessed of Quekes; he was knighted and resided here till his death in 1648 (p); his first wife was Mary, daughter of sir Edward Monins, of Waldershare, knt. who died in 1606 without issue; his second wife was Anne, daughter of Thomas Nevinson, of Eastry, gent. of which parish he was then a resident, by whom he had likewise no issue; on his death in 1648 (q) this seat came,

(m) Of these six children, four were sons, as above-mentioned, and two were daughters, viz. Anne, married to Philip Browne, and Jane, to John Johnson.

(n) In his will he mentions his wife Mary, which must have been his second wife.

(o) He had likewise one daughter Mary, married to John Alchorne.

(p) Anno 7 James I, an act passed for making void certain conveyances, and the estates limited thereby, unduly gotten from Sir Henry Crispe, knt. whereby he was defrauded of the inheritance of divers manors, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, lying in Kent, and for establishing the inheritance of the same in the said Sir Henry Crispe, and his heirs.

by the entail of it, to his first-cousin Henry Crispe, of Great Chart, gent. above-mentioned (the eldest son of Henry, the 4th and youngest brother of Nich. Crispe, of Grimgill, the father of sir Henry Crispe, last-mentioned.) He removed to Quekes, and in the year 1650 was appointed Sheriff of this county; but on account of his great age and infirmities; his son was suffered to execute this office in his room (r). He died possessed of it in 1663, having been twice married; first to Mary, daughter of sir Anthony Colepeper, who died without issue in 1618; his second wife was Frances, the widow of John Hooper, esq; and daughter of sir Thomas Roberts, of Glassenbury, knt. who died in 1646; by her he had issue one son and one daughter, who married Rob. Darell, esq; Nicholas the son, born in 1607, was knighted, but died before his father at Quekes in 1657, having married Thomasine, daughter of Thomas Denne, of Denne-hill, who survived him, and died in 1679, by whom he had an only daughter and heir, who married sir Richard Powle, of the co. of Berks, knt.

On Mr. Crispe's death in 1663, without surviving male issue, this seat came, by the entail made of it, to his nephew Thomas Crispe, (the

(r) He was commonly called Bonjour Crispe, from his having been kept a prisoner in France for some time, and never learning more French than those words, at least he never would use any other whilst there. In August 1657, he was forcibly, in the night time, taken away and carried from his seat of Quekes, by several persons, Englishmen and others, to Bruges, in Flanders, and detained there as a prisoner, till the sum of 3000l. should be paid for his ransom. A few days after his arrival at Bruges, he sent to his nephew Thomas, who then lived near Quekes, to come over to him, to assist him in his great exigencies and extremities. After some consultation together, he dispatched his nephew to England, to join his endeavours, with those of his son Sir Nicholas Crispe, for his ransom and enlargement, in which they found great difficulty, as Oliver Cromwell, who was then protector, suspected the whole to be only a collusion, to procure 3000l. for the use of K. Charles II., then beyond the seas; and accordingly an order was made by the protector in council, that Mr. Crispe should not be ransomed; upon which much difficulty arose in procuring a licence for it; Sir Nicholas died before it could be effected, and then the whole care of it devolved on Mr. Thomas Crispe, to obtain the licence and raise the money, which finding himself not able to do without the sale of some of his uncle's lands, he empowered him and his son-in-law, Robert Darell, for that purpose, who made every dispatch in it; but it was eight months before the ransom could be paid, and Mr. Crispe released out of prison; when he returned to England, and died at Quekes, on July 25, 1663.

The account from which the above was taken, was found among the writings of the estate of Stonar, in this island, which formerly belonged to Mr. Henry Crispe, and was mortgaged for part of his ransom.

This enterprise was contrived and executed by Captain eldest son of his next brother Thomas Crispe, of Gondburß,) who afterwards resided at Quekes, where he died in 1680, leaving by his wife, whom he married in Holland, four daughters his coheirs, viz. Maria-Adriana, married to Richard Breton, of the Elmes in Hougham, esq; Frantosi, or Frances, to Edwin Wiat, of Maidstone, esq; serjeant at law; Elizabeth, to Christopher Clapham, of Wakefield in Yorkshire, esq; (s) and Anne-Geertry Crispe, who died unmarried in 1708 (t). On the division of their inheritance, this seat fell to the lot of Richard Breton, esq; who immediately afterwards sold it to Edwin Wiat, esq; (u) and he alienated it, after some little interval, to John Buller, esq; of Morvall in the co. of Cornwall, whose son William dying without issue, the reversion of it, (after the death of his wife, who was entitled to it for life, as part of her jointure (v), was sold to sir Robert Furnese, of Walderbare, bart. but he never came into the possession of it; for Mr. Buller's widow, afterwards the widow of Francis Wyat, esq; her second husband, enjoyed it till her death in 1760, when it came into the possession of Catherine, Countess of Guildford, one of the three daughters and coheirs of sir Robert Furnese, bart. (w) who in 1767 sold Golding, of Ramsgate, who was a sanguine Royalist, and had sometime taken refuge with King Charles II. in France. The party landed at Gore-end, near Birchington, and took Mr. Crispe out of his bed, without any resistance; though it appears that he had been for some time under apprehensions of such an attack, and had caused loopholes, for the discharge of muskets, to be made in different parts of the house, and had afforded a generous hospitality to such of his neighbours as would lodge in his house, to defend him; but all these precautions were at this time of no effect, so that they conveyed him, without any disturbance being made, in his own coach; to the sea side, where he was forced into an open boat, without one of his domesticks being suffered to attend him, although that was earnestly requested as a favour. He was conveyed first to Ostend, and then to Bruges, both which places were then in the power of Spain, which had been at war with England for more than two years. See Bibl. Topog. Brit. No. 45.

(s) He was son of Sir Christopher Clapham, of Clapham in Yorkshire, and died in 1677, having had issue by Elizabeth his wife, above-mentioned, an only posthumous son Christopher.

(t) The family of Crispe lie interred in the chancel of this church, belonging to the estate of Quekes; their tombs and memorials may be seen in the description of the church below.

(u) See more of the Wiats, under Boxley, vol. ii. of this history, p. 126.

(v) She was the daughter of Mead, of London, and after Mr. Buller's death, married Francis Wyat, esq; eldest son of Edwin, above-mentioned, who, in her right, resided at Quekes till her death, which happened there in 1760, having had issue by neither of her husbands. See Boxley, vol. ii, ibid.

(w) The reversion of Quekes being purchased by Sir Robert Furnese, Lady Rockingham supposed the entire right of it belonged to her, and as such, it was comprised in both her marriage settlements; but on her title being after-it to Henry Fox, Lord Holland (x), who conveyed it to his second son, the Honourable Charles-James Fox, and he passed away his interest in it to John Powel, esq; who dying without issue, his sister, then the wife of William Roberts, esq; became his heir and entitled to this estate; and their son Arthur, who has taken the name of Powell, is now become the owner of it.

At this house K. William used to reside till the winds favoured his embarking for Holland. A room said to be the bedchamber of the royal guest is still shewn. His guards encamped on an adjoining inclosure.

It has been a large commodious structure, built partly of timber and partly of brick, much of which has been within these few years pulled down, and the rest modernized and converted into a farm house. It is pleasantly situated among a toll of trees, which defend it from the winds.

There was formerly a vineyard in the gardens, which are walled round (y).

THE MANOR OF WESTGATE, alias GARLING, lies at the eastern part of this parish, extending likewise into the parish of St. John. It had antiently owners of its own name, for it appears by the book of knight's fees in the Exchequer and other records, that Robert de Westgate held it in the reigns of K. Henry III. and Edward I, of the Abbat of St. Augustine in escuage, and by service, as the tenth part of a knight's fee. He left at his death his son Robert, under age, who afterwards was in the custody of sir Henry de Sandwich, and he held it accordingly as such in the latter of those reigns. It went into the family of Leyborne very soon after this, for William de

(x) He was descended from William Fox, of Farley in the co. of Wills, esq; whose youngest son Sir Stephen had two sons who survived him. Stephen, who was father of the present Lord Ilchester, and Henry above-mentioned, created Baron Holland, of Farley, by patent, dated April 16, 1763. He married in 1744. Georgina-Carolina, eldest daughter of Charles, Duke of Richmond, (created on May 6, 1762, Baroness Holland, of Holland, in the co. of Lincoln, who died in 1774,) by whom he left 3 sons, Stephen, who succeeded him in title, and left issue the present Lord Holland—Charles-James, born in 1749, the late possessor of this estate, and Henry-Edward, a general in the army. The arms of Fox are—Ermine, on a chevron azure, 3 fox's heads erased; or, on a canton of the 2d, a fleur-de-lis of the last.

Leyborne died seized of it in the 3d year of K. Edward II, leaving Juliana his grand-daughter his heir, (daughter of his son Thomas, who died in his life time,) who being heir both to her father and grandfather, became entitled to large possessions in this and several other counties, for the greatness of which she was usually styled the Infanta of Kent, who having issue by neither of her husbands, (for she had three,) whom she survived, this manor escheated to the crown for want of heirs (z); for it appears by the inquisition taken after her death, in the 43d year of K. Edward III, that there was then no one who could make claim to her estates, either by direct or even collateral alliance (a). After which this manor continued in the crown, till K. Richard II, in his 11th year, gave it to the priory of Canons alias Chiltern Langley, in the co. of Hertford (b), where it continued till the dissolution of that house in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, when it was, with all its possessions, surrendered into the King's hands, and was confirmed to him and his heirs, by the general words of the act, passed the next year for that purpose.

K. Henry VIII, becoming thus possessed of it, granted this manor, with all its rights, members, and appurtenances, among several other premises, for divers good causes and considerations, to Richard, Suffragan Bishop of Dover, to hold to him and assigns, during his life, without any account or rent whatsoever; provided, if he should be promoted to one or more ecclesiastical benefices, or other dignity or annuity, of the yearly value of 100l. that then this grant should be void (c). This certainly happened before the 36th year of that reign, for the King on May 26, that year, granted this manor to sir Tho. Moyle, knt. to hold in capite by knight's service (d); he alienated it in the first year of K. Edw. VI.

A south view of this seat, as in 1780, is given in Bibl. Topog. Brit. No. 45.

(g) Henry Crispe, of Chart Magna, and afterwards of Quekes, left issue 3 sons, the eldest of whom was Sir Nicholas Crispe, knt. who died in 1657, leaving issue Anne, his sole daughter and heir, married to Sir Richard Powle, K. B. as above-mentioned; the second son was Thomas, of Goudburst, who left issue by Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Roberts, of Glassenbury, knt. 3 sons viz. Thomas, of Quekes, who left four daughters his coheirs; Henry, mentioned below; and Richard, who died without issue. Which Henry, last mentioned, was of Monkton, gent. and died in 1678, leaving by his wife Barbara, daughter of the Rev. Dr. Jarvis, Henry, of whom below; Thomas, who died without issue, and four daughters, viz. Mary, married to George Friend, of Birchington; Frances to Isaac, Anne to Halfside, and Elizabeth to Thomas Prentice; which Henry the eldest son, was rector of Catton, in the county of Ebor, and married Anne, daughter of Francis Percy, by whom he had Henry, of the custom-house, who married Mary, widow of Lewin Cholmley, James and Edward Taddy, are now entitled to the fee of it.

In the year 1402, one Hammund died here, who wrote himself de Westgate, and by his will appears to have been a person of some considerable note and substance; probably he was tenant to the Abbat and Convent of Canons, alias Chiltern Langley, for this estate, and resided here.

BROOKSEND, antiently spelt Brookesende, is a manor situated about a mile south-west from the church of Birchington; it was part of the antient possessions of the priory of Christ Church in Canterbury; and in the 10th year of K. Edward II, the Prior obtained a grant of free warren for his demesne lands in this manor among others(b); after this it continued with the priory till the final suppression of it in the 31st year of K. Henry VIII, when this manor, among the other possessions of it, came into the King's hands, where it did not continue long, for he settled it, among other premises, in his 33d year, on his new-erected Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, part of whose inheritance it still continues.

There is not any Court held for this manor.

The manerial rights the Dean and Chapter reserve in their own hands; but the scite and demesne lands are demised on a beneficial lease(i), the present lessee being Mr. John Friend, jun. who is the present occupier of it.

THE MANOR OF BROADGATE, otherwise called Brockmans, lies within the bounds of this parish, and extends likewise into Monkton; it was part of the possessions of Henry Beaufort, Duke of Somerset, and on his attainder in the 8th year of K. Edward IV, came to the crown, whence it was granted to John Brockman, of Wilbam in the co. of Essex, esq; (k), to hold of Swanscombe, esq; Anne Crispe, who died unmarried; Thomas Crispe, of the custom-house likewise, and of West-Ham, in Essex, who was the possessor of this estate, who married Susan, daughter of Samuel Barwick, esq. by whom he had Susan, married to George Elliot, of Upton, esq; and Anne, who died unmarried. (b) Tan. Mon. p. 201.

(i) The reserved rent for the scite and buildings of this manor, with the demesne lands, consisting of about 400 acres of land in Birchington and Monkton, is 22l. 13s. 4d. In the 33d year of King Henry VIII, Thomas Manwaring was lessee of these premises; from which name the interest of the lease, about 1633, passed to Hammond, and continued so till about 1733, when Mrs. Margaret Hammond was lessee; she married Howell Price, and they were lessees in 1737; but in 1762, the lease was vested in John Jones, esq; who died seised of it about the year 1781, soon after which, the lease was sold in chancery in 1784, to Mr. John Friend, the present lessee of it.

by the same tenure and services as it was held in the 1st year of his reign, and he died possessed of it in the 16th year of K. Henry VII, anno 1500, viz. of a messuage, pigeon-house, and 450 acres of land in Birchington and Monkton, held of the King by fealty only, in lieu of all services, as was found by the inquisition then taken (l).

The hospital of the Maison Dieu in Dover, was formerly possessed of lands in this parish (m), as was that of Eastbridge in Canterbury (n).

In the Heraldic visitation of this county, anno 1619, are the pedigrees of John Tenete, of this parish, son of Richard, of Sandwich, by Anne, daughter of Vincent Colebrand; by her he had issue John, above-mentioned, who married Grace, daughter of Thomas King, of Bucklebury, in the co. of Bucks, who left an only daughter Phæbe, born 1615; and a daughter Mary, married first to James Tilden, of Sarre; and 2dly, to Thomas Fetherstone, of Canterbury; and of Richard Hart, of this parish, who by Jane, daughter of Colman, had two sons, Richard and Jeremy, which latter died without issue; Richard, the eldest son, married Jane, daughter of Robert Leigh, of Beckenbam, esq; by whom he had Valentine, Anne, Rose, and Frances. He bore for his arms—Or, on a fess sable, 3 falcons volant of the first.

THE PRESENT STATE OF BIRCHINGTON.

THIS PARISH joins the sea shore northward, along the whole of which it is bounded by high cliffs of chalk, through which there are several apertures made for the conveniency of a passage on to the sea-shore. The parish is, in general, high land, and very pleasantly situated; in the middle of it stands the church and village adjoining, tolerably well sheltered with elm trees. This village, in a pleasing situation, on a gentle eminence, commands many delightful prospects over sea and land; particularly a fine view up the delightful vale to Canterbury, the principal tower of which cathedral forms a conspicuous object, though at the distance of 12 miles; beyond which, in clear weather, are plainly seen the large hills and lofty woods in Chilbam and Godmersham parks, more than 6 miles further southward.

(n) John Crispe, son and heir of Henry Crispe, was found, by inquisition, to die seised, inter alia, of 90 acres of land in Birchington and Monkton, late John Brockman's, held of the king in capite, by socage and fealty only. Rot. Esch. ejus an.

(o) Jeake's Charters, p. 125. Leland, in his Itin. vol. vii, p. 137, says, "Reculver is now scarce half a mile from the shore, but it is to be supposed, that y^e tymes paste the se cam hard to Gorcende a 2 mile from North-

About three-quarters of a mile north-west of the church, and near as much from the sea shore, is Gore-end, antiently a place of note, being particularly mentioned in the great charter of the Cinque Ports, as one of the members of the town and port of Dover (o); here it is said the church stood antiently, and that it was lost by the falling of the cliff on which it stood, and that the present one was built in its stead; near this is a farm, called Upper Gore-end (p). About a mile southward, lie Great and Little Brooksend; and at a like distance eastward, Great and Little Quekes. At the north-east extremity of the parish is Westgate, where there is a small hamlet of houses; from which place Domneva's deer is said to have begun its course across this island, running for some space eastward, till it turned southward towards the boundary of it, at Sberiff's Hope in Minster.

This parish is somewhat more than two miles and an half each way; about the village and Quekes, it is pleasantly sheltered with trees; the lands in it are fertile, and like the other parts adjoining to it, are arable and mostly uninclosed, lying high, with hill and dale intermixed. The high road from Sarre to Margate runs along the southern side of the parish. There is a bay of the sea adjoining to the shore of this parish, called Hemmings bay; probably so called from Hemming, the Danish chieftain, who landed with his companion Anlef and their forces in this island, in the year 1009. By the return made to the Council's letter by Archbishop Parker's order in 1563, there were then computed to be in this parish 40 households; and by the return of the survey made by order of the same Queen, in her 8th year, of the several maritime places in this county, it appears that there were then here, houses inhabited 42; that there was a landing place, but in had neither ship nor boat.

A whale was cast ashore within the bounds of this parish in the year 1762 (q).

CHARITIES.

Ten acres and one half of land, were given for the repairs of the church here, or perhaps purchased with the several legacies left to the church fabric, of which one acre is let by the church-

(u) Among other memorials in this church, in the big chancel, is a stone with a brass plate, having on it, the effigies of a priest in his habit, and an inscription for Master John Heynes, cl. late vicar of Monkton, obiit Oct. 9, 1523. In the vestry, on a brass plate, an inscription for Mistress Margaret Crispe, late wife of Master John Crispe, the younger daughter and heir of George Rotherham, esq; obiit 1508. In the Quekes, formerly called St. Mary's chancel, a brass plate, the figure torn off, with an inscription for John Crispe, esq; and Agnes, his wife; he died 15—, she died 1533. Below are the figures of 8 sons and 7 daughters, all kneeling; a brass plate and effigies for John Felde, obiit 1404. A brass plate, and effigies for Margaret Cryppys, late wife of John Cryppys the younger; she died 1533. Another like stone, the brass remaining, for Richard Quex, obiit 1459; another like, for John Quex, obiit 1449; another like, for Alys, late wife of John Crispe the younger, obiit 1518. A mural monument against the south wall, for Mary Crispe, eldest daughter of Sir Anthony Colepeper, of Bedgbury, descended of the honorable family of the Lords Dacre; she married Henry Crispe, of Queke, esq; and had two surviving sons, Nicholas and Henry, and one daughter Anne, obiit 1618, æt. 34. On this monument are her and her husband's effigies kneeling, under two semicircular arches; behind him 4 sons, two with sculls in their hands, denoting their being dead; behind her, one daughter with a scull in her hand. A fine monument of sculpture on the north wall, on which are the following 6 busts, and inscriptions under of Westbere. The church, which is exempted from the Archdeacon, and dedicated to All Saints, is a handsome building, situated on a rising ground; it consists of a nave and two isles, reaching but half the length of it, and what is remarkable, they are all spanned by a single roof; beyond these are three chancels. That on the north side of it belongs to the antient seat of Quekes in this parish, and is repaired by the owners of it; in it are many fine antient monuments and memorials of the families of Quekes and Crispe, &c. The south chancel is made into a handsome vestry, and just by stands the steeple, which is a tower, on which is placed a spire covered with shingles, of great use to ships at sea as a land-mark. There are five bells in it (t). In the windows of the church are some few remains of painted glass, but just sufficient to shew that the whole was so formerly. Before the reformation, there were here beside the high altar, altars and images with lights before them, for the Blessed Virgin Mary, St. Nicholas, the Holy Trinity, St. Anne, and St. Margaret; to each of which legacies of a few pence and sometimes shillings, were almost constantly devised by the parishioners; as appears by their wills, remaining in the Prerog. office, Canterbury (u).

Under the bust of a lady on his right hand, John Crispe, esq; son of Sir Henry Crispe, knt. 1st married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Herlackenden, obiit without issue, 1576. Under the bust of a lady on his left, John Crispe, esq; married 2dly, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Roper, esq; of Eitbam, by whom he had one son; she died 1626. In the centre of the upper part is the bust of Sir Henry Crispe, and a copy of verses composed to his memory, by Henry Crispe, esq; anno 1651. The arms of Crispe, with the several impalements of their wives, are over or under these busts. A mural monument on the same wall, with a fine bust, for Anna-Gertruy Crispe, fourth daughter and coheir of Thomas Crispe, of Quex, esq; obiit 1708; on which is an account of her charitable donation to this parish, which has been mentioned above. In the church-yard, on the north side, there stood formerly a small house, called the Wax-house, where they used to fabricate the lights for the church processions, &c. In the time of the sequestration of this vicarage, about the year 1642, or rather the resignation of it by Dr. Casaubon, on the ordinance against pluralities, this church was left by the Vicar, to any one who would officiate in it, and this house was fitted up at the parishioners charge, or perhaps at the expence of the family of Crispe, who were desirous of a conformist's officiating here, for the minister to live in. Accordingly Mr. Edmund Fellows, A. M. of Sandwich, officiated here as minister from 1657 till after 1660; but in a late Vicar's time, this house was, by his order, pulled down, and the materials carried away.

This church was one of the chapels belonging to the vicarage of Monkton, and is now the only one of them in being. As this church was a chapelry of the parish church of Monkton, and phor Clapham, of Clapham in Yorkshire; he married Elizabeth, 3d daughter and coheir of Thomas Crispe, of Quex, esq; by whom he had Christopher, his only son, posthume born, obit 1677. One for Henry Crispe, of Queakes, esq; who married Mary, daughter of Sir Anthony Calpeper, of Bedbury, obit 1618; his 2d wife was Frances, widow of John Hooper, esq; and daughter of Sir Thomas Roberts, of Glassenbury, obit 1646; he died in 1663. One for Thomas Crispe, late of Quex, esq; who left four daughters and coheirs, Maria-Adriana, married to Richard Breton, of Elmes, in Hougham, esq; Frantofr alias Frances, married to Edwin Wiat, of Maidstone, esq; Elizabeth to Christopher Clapham, of Wakefield, in Yorkshire; and Anna-Gertruy, then unmarried; he died in 1680. A very handsome mural monument, with 3 tablets on the middle one; arms—In a lozenge, Powel impaling Crispe, and inscription for Dame Anne Powel, only daughter and heir of Sir Nicholas Crispe, of Quex, knt. and relict of Sir Richard Powel, K. B. obit 1707, leaving issue only one son John Powel, of Lincoln's Inn, esq; who died unmarried 1740, and lies here interred. By her death, all his mother's estates in Kent pursuant to her deeds of settlement, descended to Henry and Thomas Crispe, of the custom-house, London, esqrs. the only surviving branch in the male line of this antient name and family, by whom this monument was erected. On the right hand tablet, arms—Crispe, impaling Denne; and inscription for Thomasine, daughter of Thomas Denne, of Dennehill, esq; and widow of Sir Nicholas Crispe, of Quex, obit 1679. On the left hand tablet, an inscription for Sir Nicholas Crispe, of Quex, knt. obit 1657, son of Henry Crispe, of Quex, esq; who died 1663; and for Henry Crispe, esq; formerly of Dover, cousin-german to the above Sir Nicholas Crispe, obit 1678; he was receiver of the subsidy outwards in London, anno 1650, and afterwards comptroller of the customs of Dover. On the middle pedestal, under the middle tablet, the above named Henry Crispe, esq; who was register of certificates, and examiner of debentures, in the custom-house, London. He married Mary, relict of Lewin Cholmley, esq; and died without issue, 1743, et. 60, and here buried; arms—Crispe, impaling sable, 3 swords fessways argent, hilted and pomelled or. On the right pedestal an inscription for Thomas Crispe, esq; obit 1757, et. 62. Arms—Crispe, impaling argent, 3 bear's heads erased sable, muzzled gules. On the left pedestal, an in-the chapel was erected for the ease of the inhabitants, they were antiently obliged to contribute towards the repairs of the mother church; but this usage, as well as that of the other chapels in this island (except St. Nicholas, which still continues to pay a certain sum towards the repairs of its mother church of Reculver;) has been for a long time discontinued.

By the endowment of the vicarage of Monkton in 1367, it was decreed, that the Vicar of Monkton for the time being, should find one chaplain in this chapel of Birchington, dependant on that church, daily to celebrate, as far as he conveniently could, which chaplain should officiate in this chapel duly in divine services; for which the Vicar allowed him a stipend of 6l. per ann. In the valuation of the vicarage of Monkton, in the King's books, the Vicar of it is charged for a priest at the chapels of Birchington and Wode, 11l. 13s. 4d. CINQUE PORTS LIBERTY.

The Vicar of Monkton now finds a curate to officiate in this church, being collated by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, the patron, to the vicarage of Monkton, with the chapels of Birchington and Wode appendant to it; but the appropriate parsonage of this parish, including that of Wood adjoining, as an appendage to that of Monkton, which was part of the possessions of the priory of Christ Church, was yet a distinct parsonage from it, and as such was granted, after the dissolution (w), by K. Henry VIII, in his 33d year, by his dotation charter, to his new-erected Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, in whom the inheritance of it is at this time vested (x).

The parish-clerk here had formerly some peculiar privileges, as appears by the antient book of the clerks for collecting his dues (y), different from those enjoyed by other parish-clerks in this island; besides certain sums of money, amounting to 5s. 6d. and a groat a year for every cottage; and he had paid him in kind by the farmers, 12 cops and 12 sheaves of wheat, and 12 cops and 2 sheaves of barley; but in the year 1638, an assessment was made by the parishioners of this parish, and of the parish and ville of Wood, wherein they rated their lands at 12d. the score acres, and the cottages at 4d. each, for the clerk's wages.

WOOD, alias WOODCHURCH.

SOUTH-eastward from, and adjoining to Birchington, lies the ville or parish of Wood, otherwise Woodchurch, corruptly called by the

(w) King Henry VIII, in his 32d year, demised to Thomas Broke, esq; all those two chapels, called Birchington and Woodchurch, in the parish of Monkton, in Thanet, with all buildings, edifices, tythes, oblations, profits, and commodities whatsoever to the said chapels belonging; which said chapels lately belonged to the Priory of Christ Church, lately dissolved, and were reserved in the hands or occupation of the said Prior and Convent, ad usum hospitii, to hold for 21 years, at the yearly rent of 42l. 7s. 11d.—Augment. office, inrolm.

(x) The parsonage of Birchington, including that of Wood, alias Woodchurch, adjoining, is let on a beneficial lease for 21 years, by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. In 1778, the rack rent of it was 200l. per annum; but it was valued by the Dean and Chapter, on a survey, at 600l. per annum, and they then demanded 750l. for the renewal of 7 years to the lease, there being 2000 acres of tytheable land within the tythery of it. The family of Hugeffen, of Proveder, were lessees of it for more than a century before, when the Everings, of Dover, held it in lease. From the coheirs of the late William Western Hugeffen, esq; their interest in this lease was sold, in 1791, to Mr. George Busbell, of Minster, the present lessee. On the abolition of Deans and Chapters, this parsonage was surveyed after the death of K. Charles I, in 1649, by order of the powers then in being, for the sale of it; when it was returned, that it consisted of a great barn, commonly called the parsonage-barn, and a stable, with one close of arable land, lying near the barn, containing 4 acres, and a great fold-yard to fodder people Willow-wood, for Villa Wood, taking its name from its being antiently almost all a wood.

It is, as Birchington, a limb of the town and port of Dover, and under the government of the same deputy, and assessed, with Birchington, to the land-tax, though antiently it was taxed by itself. This town of Wood, in Q. Elizabeth's reign, paid more to the tenth and fifteenth, than was paid at that time by the town of Monkton; and yet in the return made by Archbishop Parker, in pursuance of a letter from the Privy Council, it is said there were no households in this parish; the meaning of which probably was, that this parish, being chiefly woodland, there were no farm-houses in it, but only cottages.

The high road from Sarre to Margate separates Wood from Birchington; about a quarter of a mile or a little more from which, southward, are the ruins of Wood, or Woodchurch chapel; near it there is but one house, the rest of the houses being near a mile from it, at a ville, antiently called the Millburgh, and now Acholt, which is about the same distance from Birchington (z); for this reason it is likely this chapel was so far suffered to go to decay, as at length to fall down; however this may be, it has been long since demolished, only part of the walls being left (a); and its yard, containing about half an acre, surrounded by the original walls of it, converted to a lay fee. The inhabitants of this parish are assessed towards the repair of the church or chapel of Birchington, though it still maintains its own poor (b).

cattle before it; all containing by estimation 5 acres; and were worth by the year, the sum of 80s. together with the tythes of corn, and other advantages to this parsonage belonging, within the parishes of Birchington and Woodchurch; all which were estimated, coibs annis, at 350l.

Memorandum. The Dean and Chapter, by indenture, 1638, demised to William Hugeffen, gent. all that their chapels of Birchington and Woodchurch, with their appurtenances, (excepting timber trees, and the advowsons of the vicarages of Birchington and Woodchurch) for 21 years, at the yearly rent of 42l. 7s. 11d. and likewise of 10 quarters of wheat and 10 quarters of barley, but were worth over and above the said reserved rent, the sum of 281l. 2s. 1d. The lessee was bound to repair the premises, and the said two chapels, and to pay all taxes whatsoever. Parl. Surveys, Augment. office.

(z) There is a fair held at Acholt, on May 30th, yearly, for pedlary and toys.

(a) The church must have been of a considerable size, as the foundation measures from east to west 84 feet, and from north to south 56; there is a mount of 8 or 10 feet high in the middle of the area of the church, which evidently appears to be the ruins of the tower. There is a farm house adjoining the inclosure, which is about a quarter of a mile from the great road leading from Canterbury to Margate.

The chapel of Wood was dedicated to St. Nicholas; it was exempt from the jurisdiction of the Archdeacon, and was standing and used as a place of worship in the year 1563. The Vicar of Monkton, to which church this was a dependent chapel, was bound by the endowment of his vicarage, to find a chaplain, to celebrate in this chapel on Sundays, and every Wednesday and Friday, and to officiate in it duly, in divine services, as is more particularly described in it (c); for which duty he paid him 3l. 14s. 4d. yearly.

The parsonage of this parish is united with that of Birchington, an account of which has already been given above, and is demised with it, on a beneficial lease; the present lessee being Mr. George Busbell, of Minster (d).

ST. JOHN BAPTIST, alias MARGATE.

THE next adjoining parish north-eastward from Woodchurch, is that of St. John, alias Margate; which latter, though only a borough within it, has so greatly increased in buildings of late years, and become so noted from the resort of company to it yearly, that it has almost obliterated its antient parochial name of St. John's, that of Margate being the only one now known to most people.

This parish is within the liberty and jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, and is an antient member of the town and port of Dover, and though united to it ever since K. Edward I.'s reign, yet so late as in that of K. Henry VI. it became a dispute, whether this parish was not in the county at large; to take away therefore all doubt of it, that King, by his letters patent, united it to Dover, to which place it is subject in all matters of civil jurisdiction. The Mayor of Dover appoints one of the inhabitants to be his deputy here; but though he bears the name of the

(d) K. Henry VIII., in his 32d year demised to Thomas Broke, Esq.; the two chapels of Birchington and Woodchurch, in the parish of Monkton, with their commodities and appurtenances, lately belonging to the priory of Christ Church, then lately dissolved, and which were reserved in the hands or occupation of the Prior and Convent, ad usum hospitii, to hold for 21 years, at the yearly rent of 42l. 7s. 11d. (e) He had antiently an assessment allowed him every year, to bear the charge he was at, in the execution of his office, out of which he paid several sums, by reason of the dependency of this parish on the town and port of Dover.

In this parish, and the other two parishes of St. Peter and Birchington, there were two companies of foot soldiers raised, which used to be mustered by the deputy constable of Dover, which was a considerable expence to the inhabitants, the Governor and his attendants being all treated by them and their charges borne, which was done out of this deputy's rate or assessment. Out of the same rate there were Mayor's deputy, he has no power to administer an oath, or to act as the Mayor himself might do, if he was present. This officer is chosen either every year, or once in two or three years, at the pleasure of the Mayor of Dover, and appoints a sub-deputy (e).

The manor of Minster claims over the greatest part of this parish; the lands holding by certain rents of assize, called Corn-gavill and Penny-gavill. The lands were antiently distinguished by a large lynch, balk, or greensward, part of which is still remaining, though not so broad as it was formerly, and the other part has undergone the fate of other lynes hereabouts, being so entirely plowed up, that there are no remains of it left (f).

Subordinate to this manor, are the following places of note, situated mostly in the southern, or inland part of this parish, excepting that of Dandelion, which is in the north-west extremity of it. The first of these to be described is or Salmanston grange or parsonage, usually called Salmstone, being a manor, situated about three quarters of a mile southward from the church. It was part of the antient possessions of the Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine near Canterbury, to the sacristie of which monastery it was appropriated. K. Henry III., in his 9th year, anno 1224, granted to the Abbat and Convent the privilege of holding a fair within this manor (g). In the 21st year of K. Edw. I., the King brought his claim against the Abbat for this manor, by writs of quo warranto and de rectorio, which was tried before J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant at Canterbury that year; but the King relinquished his claim, and afterwards confirmed it to the Abbat and Convent, and their successors (h). In the 7th year of K. Edward II., anno 1313, in the Iter of H. de Stanton and his sociates, Justices Itinerant, the Abbat was summoned by quo

Thanet*, p. 131.

(f) Notwithstanding which, the number of acres is still preserved in the books of the Collectors of these rents of assize, according to which it is still gathered, though much of the land is gone over the cliff into the sea.

In the reign of K. James I., the rent of assize in this parish, called Corn-gavill, amounted to the yearly sum of 20l. 11s. 5½d. and that of Penny-gavill to 25l. 14s. 1½d.

warranto, to shew why he claimed fundry liberties therein mentioned in this manor, among others; and the Abbat pleaded the grants and confirmations of them, by divers of the King's predecessors, and that they had been allowed in the last Iter of J. de Berewick and his sociates, Justices Itinerant in this county; and he pleaded, that K. Edward II, by his charter in his 6th year, had fully confirmed all of them to the Abbat and Convent and their successors (i). After which, the rolls of the last Iter of J. de Berewick being inspected, it was found that all the liberties which the Abbat then claimed by allowance of the said Iter were allowed in it; upon which every part of the same was allowed by the said H. de Stanton and his sociates, as above-mentioned (k). After which, K. Edward III, by his charter of inspeximus, in his 36th year, confirmed to this abbey, all the manors and possessions given to it by former Kings; and by another charter, the several grants of liberties and confirmations made by his predecessors, among which were those above-mentioned; and K. Henry VI. afterwards confirmed the same (l).

In the year 1318, anno 12 Edward II, the Abbat of St. Augustine and his servants, giving much offence to the tenants of the manor of Minster, for taking some distresses on them, and other matters relating to the court of it; the tenants assembled together, and assaulting the court-lodges, or mansions of that manor and of Salmanstone, set fire to the gates of them; during which the monks and their servants here kept themselves confined within the walls for 15 days; so that the people without, not being able to encompass their design of firing the house, destroyed the Abbat's husbandry utensils in the

(pp) In the 23d year of K. Henry VIII, the Abbat and Convent demised to Simon Webbe, gent. and William Webbe his son, all that their rectory or grange of Salmeiston, with all its lands, tenements, tythes, oblations, obventions, and other profits and appurtenances belonging to it, to hold for 20 years; which lease the said Simon Webbe and Wm Webbe rendered null and void; upon which the Abbat and Convent, in the 34th year of that reign, demised to Edw. Thwayts the above premises, to hold for thirteen years, at the yearly rent of 1d. for the first year, and for the other twelve years 8ol. per annum rent, with a covenant that he should at Salmeiston, in the first week of Lent, distribute to 24 poor persons of the island, and dwelling in the undermentioned parishes, viz. in the parish of Mynster 6, in the parish of St. John's 6, in the parish of St. Laurence 6, in the parish of St. Peter 6, to each of them 9 loaves and 18 fields, and all the trees in this manor, so effectually, that none have grown here ever since; but a method was found afterwards to punish these rioters, or at least the principal of them, who were fined in a large sum, and imprisoned at Canterbury till it was paid (m). At the beginning of K. Richard II.'s reign, Thomas Ickbam, Sacrist of the abbey of St. Augustine, among many other improvements made on the monastery, and other estates belonging to it, built a new hall at this manor, with chambers, at the cost of 100 marks (n); at which time this Grange, with Reyde, Blackmanbury, and Wyngate, all belonging to the Sacrist of this monastery, was valued, among the temporalities of it, at 34l. os. 9d. (o) According to the measurement made about the same time, of the lands of Salmanstone, they amounted to 89 acres and one rood of arable land; and there belonged to it likewise, the tythes, great and small, of the parochial chapel of St. John Baptist, the small tythes of the parochial chapel of St. Laurence, and of the parish of Minster, exclusive of those given to the Vicar; and a portion of great tythes in every one of the three parishes; from the possession of which tythes, this estate was usually called the rectory, or grange of Salmanstone. So long as the Abbat and Convent continued in possession of this estate, they kept it in their own hands, collected the tythes and plowed the lands with the assistance of lay-brethren; the mansion-house served them for retirement and the use of the grange. The chapel and infirmary here are still entire, excepting that the windows are demolished (p).

On the final dissolution of the abbey of St. Augustine, in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII, this manor came to the crown (pp), where the possession of it staid till the second year of Q. Elizabeth (q), when it was granted for a term of years, to Edward Thwayts, then lessee of it; and next year the Queen having taken into her hands certain manors, lands, &c. parcel of the see of Canterbury, by letters patent, that year granted to Matthew, Archbishop of Canterbury, and his successors, several rectories, parsonages, and other premises, in lieu of them, among which was the rectory of Salmestone, late parcel of the possessions of the late monastery of St. Augustine, valued at the annual sum of 38l. 10s. 0½d. with the reprise out of it, of 8l. yearly, to the Vicar of St. John in Thanet; and of 4l. yearly to the Vicar of Waltbam; since which this manor and grange has continued part of the possessions of the see of Canterbury, his Grace the Archbishop being the present owner of it.

The lessee is still bound by his lease to pay out of it all the above charities, the same as were paid by the lessee of it before the dissolution of the monastery (r).

It has been for many years past demised by the Archbishop, on a lease for three lives, at the above yearly rent. The interest of this lease was vested in Thomas Diggs, esq; in 1643. In 1656 it was vested in the Lady Mary, widow of sir Warham St. Leger, who had it in exchange from sir Thomas Colepeper, of Hollingborne, knt. Sir Robert Furnese some length of time afterwards purchased it, from whom it descended, in like manner as and Convent covenanted and agreed to repair the premises, &c. In witness whereof, &c. Which indenture and lease the said Edw. Thwayts gave up in the 34th year of that reign, and the king that year granted the premises, with all their rights, privileges, and emoluments as aforesaid, for 21 years, at the yearly rent of 80l. 12s. 0d. and the king covenanted to save the said Edward Thwayts harmless from all other rents, issues, and outgoing, issuing out of the premises; and the said Edward Thwayts covenanted to preserve all the reeds within the bounds of the manor and premises, for the repair of the buildings on it, which he should place and be allowed in his yearly account; and that he would yearly pay to the vicar of the churches of St. John, St. Peter, and St. Laurence, in Thanet, for the time being, 2 bushels of corn, and to the vicar of Minster, 10s. as he by his former indenture was bound to pay; and likewise to pay, or cause to be paid, all the charities and alms covenanted in his former indenture to be paid. (r) The dish of peas, covenanted to be given to every poor man coming to Salmestone, is almost grown obsolete, which it is said, is owing to the lessee's taking advantage of the word dish in the lease, which being an uncertain measure, is given to the poor people in so small a pittance, that it is not worth their while to go for them. Lewis's Hist. of Thanet, p. 154.

is an estate situated in the north-west extremity of this parish, about half a mile from the sea-shore. This was in antient times the seat of a family of this name, and who spelt their name at first, both Daundeleon and Daundelyonn, as appears by divers antient deeds, some of which are without date, some as high as K. Edward I.'s reign. Wm Daundelynn, or Daundelyon, possessed it in the second year of K. Richard II, as appears by the registers of St. Augustine's Monastery (t); his successor was John Dandelyon, who resided here in the next reign of K. Henry IV, whose successor of the same name, died seized of this seat in 1445, anno 24 Henry VI, and was buried in the north chancel of this church. He left an only daughter and heir, who marrying with Pettit, entitled him to the possession of this seat (u). His descendant John Pettit, (son of Valentine,) was an alderman of London, whose son Valentine resided here (v), and in his descendants it continued down to Captain Henry Pettit (w), who died here in 1661, and was buried with his ancestors in this church, leaving surviving issue by his two wives five sons, Thomas, John, and Valentine, by his first wife Anne, daughter of Thomas Finch, of Coptree, esq; and Richard and Henry, by his second wife Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Best, of St. Laurence, Canterbury, gent. who became heirs in gavelkind to this estate, which afterwards, in consequence from such division of it, became vested in several different proprietors, whose respective heirs afterwards joined in the sale of it to Henry Fox, Lord Holland, who conveyed it to his second son, the Hon. Charles-James Fox, and he passed away his interest in it to John Powell, esq; who dying without issue, his sister, then the wife of Wm Roberts, esq; became his heir, and entitled to this estate; and their son Arthur, who has since taken the name of Powell, is now become the possessor of it.

This ancient seat has for some length of time been made use of as a place of public resort, with a bowling-green and other accommodations for the purpose. It seems as if it had been antiently walled round very strongly, according to the manner of that age, for a defence against bows and arrows; part of this wall is still standing, with the gate-house, built with bricks and flints in rows, with loop-holes and battlements at top. Over the main gate are the arms of Daundelyon as above-mentioned; on the right side of this gate is a smaller one for common use, at the right corner of which is a blank escutcheon, and at the left corner a demi lion rampant, with a label out of his mouth, on which is written, DAUNDELYONN.

Under the right side of it, as you go out of the gate, was found in the year 1703, a room large enough to hold eight or ten men, in which were many pieces of lacrymatory urns, of earth and glass; under the other side of it is a well prison. In the window of the dining room in the mansion-house, are the arms of Daundelyonn, quartered with those of Pettit (x).

HENGRAVE, alias DENECOURT.

The manor of Dene, with the estate called Hengrave, is situated about a mile south-eastward from Dandelion. The manor of Dene was in the beginning of K. Henry III.'s reign in the possession of the family of Sandwich, to one of whom, fir Henry de Sandwich, knt. Robert, Abbat of St. Augustine, granted a licence to build an oratory at this manor, being within the bounds of the Abbat and Convent's capital manor of Minster, in which the Abbats exercised an ecclesiastical as well as civil jurisdiction, in which he might cause (x) There is a view of this gateway in Lewis's History of the Isle of Thanet, p. 149, and another smaller one in Bibl. Topog. Brit. No. 45, plate xii, p. 171.

divine service to be celebrated by his own chaplain, in the presence of himself, his heirs, and successors (y). He was succeeded in this manor by fir Simon de Sandwich, knt. who, as it appears, held it of fir Stephen Heringod, knt. for in the 42d year of that reign, this fir Stephen released and quit-claimed to the church of St. Augustine, Canterbury, all the homage which fir Simon and his heirs owed to him, on account of this manor, and which he held of him as one knight's fee (z). After the death of fir Simon de Sandwich, his heirs passed away the possession of the manor of Dene, with a tenement just by it, called Austone, and their appurtenances, to Roger de Leyborne; whose son Wm de Leyborne died seized of it in the third year of K. Edward II, leaving Juliana his grand-daughter his heir, (the daughter of his son Thomas, who died in his life-time,) who being heir both to her father and grandfather, became entitled to large possessions in this, and several other counties; from the greatness of which, she was usually styled the Infanta of Kent; she was thrice married, the last of her husbands being Wm de Clinton, afterwards created Earl of Huntingdon; and he, in her right, was seized of this manor in the 20th year of K. Edward III, to the aid of which year he paid for it, as one knight's fee, which fir Ralph de Sandwich before held at Dene, of the Abbat of St. Augustine. He died possessed of it in the 28th year of that reign, upon which Juliana his widow, Countess of Huntingdon, who had issue by neither of her husbands, became again seized of it in her own right, and in the 36th year of that reign made a donation of this her manor of Dene, with a tenement called Austone, and all their rights, members and appurtenances, to Thomas, then Abbat and Convent of St. Augustine, Canterbury; on the condition, nevertheless, that the monks and their successors, after her decease, should out of the issues and profits of it for ever, celebrate yearly on St. Anne's day, one solemn mass in the quire, as on a double feast, and distribute on the same day to 100 poor persons, 200 pence, that is, to every one of them two-pence; and to their convent one sufficient pittance; that on the day of her anniversary they should every year celebrate the obsequies of the dead with a solemn mass in the quire, and other things thereto appertaining, as on a double festival; and on the same day should distribute to 200 poor people, 200 pence, and a pittance, viz. to the Abbat of the Monastery for the time being 20s. to the Prior of

On the north side are the remains of two rooms, which, as they have no communication with the chapel, might probably be the apartments of the officiating priest. The chapel part measures about 40 feet by 30; a north-west view of the whole, is given Biblioth. Topog. Brit. No. 45, plate xii, p. 171.

In default of the performance of all which, it should be lawful for her heirs to enter into the same, and to retain the rents and profits thereof, till such time as the Abbat and Convent should make full satisfaction for all such defaults (a). This gift was confirmed by the King that same year to the Abbat and Convent, by whom this manor was afterwards appropriated to the sacristie of it; and it was not taxed to the tenth with the rest of their estate in this island, because it was taxed to the tenth paid by the parish in which the manor lay.

At this time the Abbat and Convent were possessed of an estate at this place, called Hengrave, consisting by measure of 203 acres and three roods (b), and it seems was then accounted a manor, as appears by the composition entered into in the year 1441, between the Abbat and Convent and the tenants of their manor of Hengrave; in which it was agreed that they should pay to the Abbat and Convent for every Swoyling, 15 quarters and 5 bushels of barley, and 15 quarters and 5 bushels of oats (c). In which situation the manor of Dene with Hengrave continued, till the dissolution of the monastery in the 30th year of K. Henry VIII.'s reign (d), when it came into the hands of the crown, where the fee of it continued till the reign of K. James I, who soon after his accession to the throne granted it to William Salter, who conveyed it to Manasser Norwood, of Dane Court and Norwood in this island (e), and he died in 1636; from whom it passed to his grandchild Alexander Norwood, who mortgaged it, with part of the demesnes of it, to is an estate lying about a mile and an half southward from the church, which seems antiently to have been part of the possessions of the priory of Christ Church in Canterbury, if we give credit to a date cut on a stone in the wall of the mansion-house of it, which is 1108; and as a corroboration of it, in the window of the hall is painted the mitre and pastoral staff, used by the Priors of Christ Church, with the arms of that monastery pendant by a string on each side, and the initial letters G. P. which I suppose to mean Gillingham Prior, who died in 1376. In another part of the same window is painted W, a bird, and underneath Chuchele: by which probably is intended Wm Chychele, who was Archdeacon of Canterbury in 1420. By all which it should seem that this estate once belonged to that priory (b); if so, it was held of the Prior and Convent, by the family of Garwinton, of Bekeborne, for they were then in the possession of it; one of whom, William Garwinton, dying without issue, Joane, his kinswoman, married to Richard Haut, was, anno 11 Henry IV, found to be his next heir, and entitled to his interest in this estate; and their son Richard Haut, leaving an only daughter and heir Margery, she carried it in marriage to Wm Isaac, of Patrickborne, esq; in memory of which alliance, the windows of this mansion in the great hall were some years since, in several panes of glass, adorned with the arms of Haut and Isaac, and near them the arms of Wm Warbum, Archbishop of Canterbury, impaled with those of his fee. The Isaacs seem to have continued to hold this estate at the time of the dissolution of the priory in K. Henry VIII.'s reign (i); after which the fee of it appears to

Edward VI, in his 6th year, demised to Sir John Gate, knight, vice chamberlain of his household, inter alia, this manor of Deane, late in the tenure of Edward Thwayts, esq; with its rights and appurtenances, to hold for 35 years. Elizabeth's reign, to Wm Norwood, who on his death in 1605, left 9 sons, who became his heirs in gavelkind, and shared this estate in equal parts. They joined in the sale of the whole of it to Paul Cleybrooke, esq; who resided here, and died possessed of it in 1622 (l), whose second son William succeeded to it, and was of Nash Court, esq; and at his death in 1638 devised it, after his widow Sarah's death (m), to his kinsman Alexander Norwood, of St. Stephen's near Canterbury (n), who leaving only two daughters his coheirs, they joined in the conveyance of it to David Turner, yeoman, lessee of Salmestone Grange, and he settled it on his second son David, on his marriage with Catherine, eldest daughter of Stephen Nethersole, of Wimlingwould, who died in 1710, leaving one son Nethersole Turner, who proved insane; after which it became vested in his next heirs of the name of Turner, in the persons of the Rev. David Turner, of Fordwich, and Rector of Elmstone, and of Mr. David Turner, of Margate, gent. the former of whom left two sisters his coheirs, to whom he devised his moiety of this estate, viz. Sarah Smith, widow, and Mary Turner, and the survivor of them for their lives; Mrs. Smith, as survivor, is now in possession of this moiety, on whose decease the fee of this estate will pass by the will of Mr. Turner above-mentioned, to her son James Smith, and Ambrose Collard, jun. heir of her late daughter Sarah, wife of Ambrose Collard, sen.

The latter Mr. David Turner, of Margate, devised his moiety by will to his only daughter and heir Anne, late the wife of James Brown, afterwards remarried to Mr. Jacob Sawkins, gent. who is now in her right intitled to it.

The house was long made use of as a farmhouse. It is a large building, after the fashion of former times, with a spacious hall and butteries over against the entrance into it,

In the windows of this mansion was painted this shield of arms of four coats, viz. 1st, Sable, a chevron between 3 mullets pierced argent, a crescent

William, the eldest son, was of Murston, and by Anne, daughter of Paul Johnson, had two sons; Stephen, who died without issue, and Paul, who purchased and resided at Nash-Court, who married Mary, daughter of Richard Knatchbull, of Mersham, esq; by whom he had Paul, born in 1589. William, who was of Nash-Court, as above-mentioned, and married Sara, daughter of Manasses Norwood, and two daughters; Mary, married to Allen Epps, of Absford, gent.

THE PRESENT STATE OF ST. JOHN'S.

This parish, which is about three miles and a half across each way, has much the same appearance, as those parishes in this island heretofore described, consisting of open uninclosed corn lands, with frequent hill and dale, the soil mostly chalk. It is accounted an exceeding healthy situation, and the inhabitants long lived. In the year 1563, as appears by Archbp. Parker's return to the order of the Privy Council, here were 107 households; but so far had they increased between that time, to when Mr. Lewis wrote his History of Thanet in 1736, that there were then computed to be in this parish, (including Margate,) about 600 families, which would make the number of inhabitants about 2400 in the whole. They are now increased to upwards of 700 families.

The village or town, now called Margate, situated in the borough of that name, a further account of which will be given below, lies on the sea shore, on the north side of it, extending southwards, on the ascent of a hill, on the knoll of which stands the church. Besides the town of Margate, there are several other small villes, or clusters of houses in this parish. Westbrooke, otherwise called the Brooks, lies about a quarter of a mile westward from Margate (o). Garling, which is a pretty large ville, consists of about 20 or 30 houses, about mid-way between Margate and and Anne, married to Richard Northwood. They bore for their arms—Argent, a cross formee gules. Pedigree of Cleybrooke, Heraldic visitation co. of Kent, 1619.

(m) She afterwards remarried Mr. George Somner, slain at Wye Bridge, in 1648, and lastly, to Mr. James Newman.

(n) This account is taken in great part from Lewis's Hist. of Thanet, p. 150, and from Philipott, p. 386; their accounts are greatly different, and it is hardly possible to reconcile them.

(o) John Crispe, of this parish, mariner, by his will, proved in 1609, willed to be buried in the church-yard of this parish; Lucrese his wife. He gives to Roger his son, his house and lands at Margate; to John his son, his house and lands at Westbrooke; Mary, Anne, and Charlotte, his daughters; Roger Morris, his father-in-law. Birchington (p). Mutterer has about three cottages a little nearer to Birchington. Southward from Garling is Twenties and Lyden, and then Vincent's (q); all at present are only single farm-houses, yet almost within memory, at the latter, there was another dwelling-house; and by the great number of disused wells found hereabout, it should seem that there were antiently many more houses at this place, which seems to account for the situation of the oratory or chapel, called Dene chapel, built by fir Henry de Sandwich about the year 1230, to which resorted not only the Lord of that manor and his family, but the inhabitants of Twenties, Vincent's, and Fleet likewise (r), in the middle, or at least at a convenient distance from which, this little oratory was placed. Fleet above-mentioned, is a place at the southern extremity of this parish, at a small distance from Vincent's, extending partly into the parishes of St. Laurence and Minster. It was antiently a place of some account, having been the inheritance of a family, written in antient records de Fleeta, who were resident here about the reign of K. John, or of Henry III; at present there is only a small farm-house, one tenement, and the ruins of another (s).

About half a mile southward from the church is Draper's Hospital, and the same distance further a good house called Updowne, belonging to Mr. Farrer (t); about half a mile from which is Nash Court, and about as much further Little Nash. In the eastern part of the parish are the two hamlets of East North Down, and West North Down, (the latter about two miles eastward from the church, the former about one only,) and lastly Lucas Dane, almost adjoining to Margate, in the same valley.

The northern and eastern sides of this parish are bounded by the sea-shore, along the whole of which there is a continued range of high chalk cliffs, excepting in the opening between that space, where the harbour and pier of Margate, with the town, stands, and a small place to the westward of it.

(p) In this hamlet is a farm called Garling's Farm, consisting of a messuage, and 120 acres of arable and pasture land, which belongs to the Hospitals of Bridewell, and Bechlem, in London.

(q) Now the property of Mr. Ambrose Collar, of Minster.

In King James I.'s time, one of this family ended in a daughter and coheir, married to Philipott, who became entitled to this estate, and possessed it in 1656. It now belongs to Arthur Roberts Powell, esq;

THE BOROUGH AND TOWN OF MARGATE

is situated on the northern bounds of this parish, adjoining to the sea. This borough was antiently bounded on the land side by a very large lynch or bank, a considerable part of which has been so long since plowed up, that no one knows the bounds of it on that side.

It seems to have had the name of Margate, or more properly Meregate, from there being here an opening or gate, through which there was an outlet into the sea.

On that side of the town next the sea, is a pier of timber, built east and west, in the form of a half circle, to defend the bay from the main sea, and make a small harbour for ships of no great burthen, such as the corn and other hoys, and the fishing craft. By the present appearance of the chalky rocks, which were the foundations of the old cliffs, on each side of this pier at low-water, it seems as if antiently nature itself had formed a creek or barbour here, the mouth of which was just broad enough to let small vessels go in and out of it; but since the inning of the levels on the south side of this island, the sea having borne harder on the east and north parts of it, the land on each side of this creek has been, in process of time, washed quite away by the sea, and the inhabitants were obliged to build this pier to prevent the town's being overflowed by the ocean, and to defend that part of it which lies next the water by piles of timber and jetties. This pier was at first but small, and went but a little way from the land, but the cliffs still continuing to be washed away, the sea by that means lay more heavily on the back of it than usual, and rendered it necessary to enlarge it by degrees, to what it is at present. At what time this pier was first built is unknown, that it was so long before the reign of K. Henry VIII, is certain from Leland's account of it, (who lived in that reign), for he says, Itin. vol. vii. p. 137, "Margate lyith in St. John's paroch
